CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, (1890.)

No. 405

OUR GREETINGS

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS ALBERT VICTOR OF WALES.

HAIL, Albert Victor! to this sunny land—
In God's own time thy heritage to be!
From mount to cape, all round from sea to sea,
Have thy fill of the beautiful and grand.
For, these are limned by Nature's loving hand
O'er India's beauteous face so skilfully,—
In hill and vale and wood-land scenery,
It seems that here her choicest works were planned!
The Himalaya with its crown of snow;
And cities famed in classic song and story;
And forests rich in sport and floral glow;
And hoary ruins of a vanished glory;—
All these thine eye and plastic mind invite,—
See them, mark them—regale thy soul and sight!

Thy advent, Prince! recalls to memory
A wizard scene: It seems but yesterday,
Though fourteen winters since have rolled away,
That thy illustrious sire, midst mirth and glee,
Journey'd through Bharat's land right royally;
And there were then such festal sights and gay,
Such burst of love as, in his proudest day,
Save Akbar's self, the Mogul ne'er did see!
A splendid crown is destined to be thine,
Of which dear India forms the brightest gem;
And thus her hopes all fondly round thee twine,
O Prince! whose brow will wear that diadem!
But think who held of yore her pow'r in trust:

We greet thee, Albert Victor! and in thee,
Thy sire and her,—fair England's Sovereign dear,
And idol of her countless subjects here.
These, though in faith and hope apart, agree
In faith and hope in her most perfectly,—
In her, the Queen of queens, with scarce a peer—
Both in her regal and her household sphere—
Her sex's pride, and crown of royalty!

The highest type of Woman true and pure—

A soul of goodness—noble, spotless life,
Victoria's name through ages will endure

As paragon of Monarch—Mother—Wife:—

All true to Truth like Sita, Rama's queen,
Nay, Truth herself in human form unseen!

We greet thee, Prince! with loyal hearts sincere!

O royal Visitor! O welcome Guest!

We press thee fondly,—press thee breast to breast,

As we embrace our nearest—dearest here!

These visits to our shore but more endear

The Throne to us; they're tokens manifest—

Sweet flow and effluence supremely blest—

Of Victoria's Imperial love and care.

The personal Majesty of England's power—

The living grace of England's throne,

Are, like the fabled purijata flower,

To us a hundred things to sight unknown:—

We only reek at pow'r and grace

When Royalty's own meet us face to face!

Once more we bid thee hail! O hail once more!

In thee, O Prince! thy Mother-land we greet,

Home of stern virtues as of graces sweet!

Land of the Brave! from Arthur's days of yore!

Land of the Wise! where Art and Science pour

Their richest offerings at its children's feet!

Land of the Free! where from her isle'd seat

Liberty guards its sea-encircled shore!

O England! mightier than Imperial Rome,

And destined still to act a nobler part,

Thy loving care has lightened India's gloom,

And breathed new life into her wither'd heart!

Let round thy Prince's brow, O fondly twine

Our gorgeous Lily with thy Rose divine!

RAM SHARMA.

Holloway's Pills.—The Great Need.—The blood is the life, and on its purity our health as well as our existence depends. These Pills thoroughly cleanse the vital fluid from all contaminations, and by that means strengthen and invigorate the whole system, healthily stimulate sluggish organs, repress over-excited action, and establish order of circulation and secretion throughout every part of the body. The balsamic nature of Holloway's Pills exercises marvellous power in giving tone to debilitated and nervous constitutions. These Pills dislodge all obstructions, both in the bowels and elsewhere, and are, on that account, much sought after for promoting regularity of action in young females and delicate persons who are naturally weak, or have from some cause become so.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

By order of the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council,

W. J. CUNNINGHAM,

Off. Secretary to the Government of India.

Four days after, that is on yesterday, it was carried out, in the cabalistic language of the counting house, "E. & O. E." It is a pity that the E. & O. had escaped the Argus-eye of the Master of Ceremonies.

One item of the programme forcibly reminded the public of the classical bull of the stage direction "Enter king and two fiddlers solus." Luckily, the mistake was discovered in time, and there was a strong representation of the historic element and the territorial interest on the occasion, and the great Maharajas were presented to the Prince.

THE Requisition Meeting of the Commissioners to vote Rs. 10,000 as a contribution to the Fund for the Reception and Entertainment of H. R. H. Prince Albert Victor fell through. Mr. Gasper who had given notice of the motion was not present, and the other Requisitionists who were present would not move. There was a proposition to postpone this item of business with others on the day's list, but the Chairman ruled that the business for which the meeting was specially called could not be postponed, and it must accept its fate then and there. He, however, explained that he had received intimation from a third party that the motion would not be pressed, ample funds having been raised by public subscription. The Chairman kept the meeting waiting for quarter of an hour for Mr. Gasper's appearance who was reported to be coming. But he did not shew himself at the meeting, though he could be found downstairs laughing like the boy in the fable who raised a false alarm for sport.

AS a Fête in honor of the Prince, Bombay will, in March next, when H. R. H. will be in that city on his way home, hold a show of the best horses in the whole of India. The classes have been divided into English through-breds; Australians and other Colonials; Arabs; Persians and Country-breds; and all sorts of Harness Horses, Hunters, Chargers and Hacks.

THE following bar anecdote is going the round :—

"The other day at the Calcutta Sessions Mr. Justice Norris addressing a boy in the dock, who had been acquitted of a serious charge observed: 'You are a nasty dirty little boy. I hope I shall never see you again.' 'Ditto' replied the urchin sotto voce."

We are told that the poor boy protests against the soft sotto vocal impeachment. He, plain little boy as he is, lays no claim to the wit and is afraid of the consequences, to himself and his kind, of the irreverence imputed to him. In point of fact, he simply mumbled, Thank ye for the appreciative compliment and the kind aspiration.

THE specially favoured of Heaven are great ab initio—by birth. Others manage to acquire greatness, or at least the honours and distinction and the good things of the world,

With toil of sprite, which are so dearly bought.

Others still have greatness thrust on them. These lucky ones often stumble on honours, as they feed angels, unawares. The luckiest of these adopted sons of Dame Fortune in Behar is doubtless Lala Jai Prakash Lal. For once, the frisky matron has changed her very disposition in his favour—for, during his long career, she has not changed at all. From Meaji to Manager-in-chief of a large Raj and factotum sole of a great Maharaja, is a long step—as long perhaps as the proverbial one. And he has not only maintained himself in the graces of his master, supreme over the intrigues of a court in miniature, but has advanced himself in the eyes of the rulers of his master and the country, until they raised him to the dignity of an ornamental Legislator. But the gracious Mother had not yet exhausted her marks of endearment on him. The last and queerest surprise was reserved for him by his own Province. They actually went to the extent of inventing for his special behoof a title unknown to the heraldry of aristocracy or of administration. He is now "Rai Jaiprakash Lal Bahadoor, Dewan of the Dewan of Mozufferpore." We do not know when the investiture took place, but he is reported under that name and those titles as having figured at the late meeting of the Landholders' Association at Bankipore.

THE Lieutenant-Governor proposes to exempt from assessment Beali lands in a five-year lease, if not irrigated with water from the Orissa Canals, when "Beali" is not followed by "Sarud" or any other irrigated crops in the same year.

FROM the first day of April 1890, hospital port dues, at the rate of one anna per ton, will be levied at Chittagong on all ships manned by European crews.

THE subject for Brajamohan Dutt's Prize of Rs. 40 for the year 1889-90 is "The present condition of Bengali Women." The Prize is open to all Bengalis without restriction to age. A Past winner is competent to compete—for honorable mention but not the Prize.

THE postal card first came into vogue in America in 1873, and the year's supply was 100,000,000. The Postmaster-General, U. S., has now given the contract for a four years' supply, namely, 2,000,000,000 costing 800,000 dollars. The Government makes a profit of 19,200,000 dollars for the cards will sell for 20,000,000 dollars. The cost of production now is 70 per cent. less than what it was in the year of introduction.

HARTJE BROTHERS, paper-makers, are displaying at the Pittsburg Exhibition a monster roll of paper 96 inches wide, 14 miles long and weighing 2,658 pounds. The bundle is unbroken and without a hole.

SHEIKH Hafiz Abdul Karim of Meerut has agreed to bear the cost, not exceeding Rs. 10,000, of the Mahomedan ward of the Agra Lying-in-Hospital, provided it be called after him. Here is a hint to the Disloyalists to raise enough funds for their asylum.

ACCORDING to the World, health is failing the Prince of Wales, and the increasing weakness depresses him the more. The L. D. N. knows more. It hints at other causes, unnamed.

A TECHNICAL journal gives the different theories about the production in Nature of diamonds:—

"It has been suggested that the vapours of carbon during the coal period may have been condensed and crystallised into the diamond; and again, the itacolumite, generally regarded as the matrix, was saturated with petroleum, which, collecting in nodules, formed the gem by gradual crystallisation. Newton believed it to have been a coagulated unctuous substance, of vegetable origin, and was sustained in the theory by many eminent philosophers, including Sir D. Brewster, who believed the diamond was once a mass of gum, derived from certain species of wood, and that it subsequently assumed a crystalline form. Dana and others advance the opinion that it may have been produced by the slow decomposition of vegetable material, and even from animal matter. Burton says it is younger than gold, and suggests the possibility that it may still be in process of formation, with capacity of growth. Specimens of the diamond have been found to inclose particles of gold, an evidence, he thinks, that its formation was more recent than that of the precious metal. The theory that the diamond was formed immediately from carbon by the action of heat is opposed by another, maintaining that it could not have been produced in this way, otherwise it would have been consumed. But the advocates of this view were not quite on their guard against a surprise, for some quick-witted opponent has found experiments that the diamond will sustain great heat without combustion."

RAJA Sir T. Madhav Rao has addressed the President and members of the Social Conference of 1889, Bombay, in these terms:—

"Dear Sirs,—I earnestly hope that this Social Conference will not disperse without effecting at least one most important Social Reform.

I strongly recommend the concentration of attention on what I have no hesitation in saying is the most important, the most urgent and happily the most practicable reform.

I will proceed to state what it is and offer a few remarks on it.

My knowledge, experience, study and reflection have convinced me that marriages of girls before they attain the age of 10 years should be prohibited.

That the best method of effecting the prohibition is by legislation.

The law should declare that marriages of girls before that age will not be recognised by the Civil Courts of the country unless ratified by subsequent consummation.

Many serious evils would thus be got rid of or greatly reduced.

Health and happiness would be increased and premature widowhood would be diminished.

The proposal is on the line of the least resistance. There is nothing in it contrary to the Shastras.

There is nothing in it contrary to custom.

It is also recommended by natural reason.

It also conforms to the natural tendency of the times.

Any hardship that the proposed law may produce would be limited to that small proportion of cases in which the marriage takes place before 10 years and is not ratified by subsequent consummation.

Even in this small proportion of cases a very hardship which may arise may be expected to be mitigated by the momentum of the custom.

Any small residue of hardship must be regarded as a necessary and unavoidable evil which must be borne by a few for the benefit of the majority.

Even this residue will be a diminishing quantity.

The educated community ought to get such a law passed by making strong application to the legislature.

It would be utterly hopeless to get the uneducated masses to consent to it because they are incapable of forming a correct judgment in so important a matter."

AN architectural colossus is being raised for the accommodation of a Colossus of the Press, the New York World. It is to be 18 stories in height. It will house the staff, with 150 suites of splendid offices. From the pavement to the flagstaff the height is 350 ft.—or within 20 ft. of the distance from the pavement to the top of the cross of St. Paul's. In 1883, Mr. Pulitzer was almost unknown in New York. In six years, he rose to be the proprietor of the best and grandest newspaper property in the New World.

YOUNG Spirits in the guise of reeling Democritos has, we see, risen against Old Drug.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

HIS Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor attends divine service tomorrow at St. Paul's. On Monday, the Maharaja of Cooch Behar entertains the Prince at dinner. Thence the royal guest crosses over the road to Belvedere, to the Lieutenant-Governor's Ball. On Tuesday, the 7th, comes off the Public Entertainment on the maidan.

THE New Year dawned in Europe with messages of peace. At the reception of the foreign diplomatic body, President Carnot took a leaf out of the book, or at any rate an epigram out of the portfolio, of the Emperor Napoleon III. He proclaimed in effect, if not in terms, the Republic is Peace: And it has work enough of a civil kind on hand. King Humbert, in his reply to the Congratulations of the two Legislative Chambers, remarked that there was a time when nobody could guarantee the peace of Europe for a fortnight, but that now he was happy to say that it was assured, the rapprochement of Germany and Russia having tended to help in the maintenance of peace.

As an earnest of peace, the deputation on leaving the Quirinal was welcomed by a lighted bomb thrown by a man from the crowd in the streets. The thrower was arrested.

THE Influenza still rages. It is spreading in all directions in Germany and Austria. Many suffering from pulmonary complications have fallen victims to the epidemic. The disease has crossed over and taken Malta. London is alarmed. Lord Salisbury is confined to bed. It is satisfactory, however, that he has passed the worst stage. An unnamed donor has contributed one hundred thousand pounds for a convalescent hospital near London.

THE prophet is not honored in his own country. At the Consistory held in the Vatican on the closing day of the year just closed, Pope Leo, in his Allocution to the Cardinals, spoke of the prosperity of the Church in tolerant Canada and America and the bitter and increasing persecution she suffers in Italy. His Holiness rested the Papal claim to temporal power not on human motives but the divine purpose of preserving the Catholic faith.

THE Empress of Brazil has not long survived the turn of the wheel in the fortune of the Imperial family. She died of the gout, which at last reached the heart. The iron had already reached it.

FIERY reports come from Brussels. The palace at Lacken has been burnt down. The gallery containing invaluable pictures by the best masters, Gobelin's tapestry and a fine library are all reduced to ashes. Only the royal apartments have been saved. Princess Clementine had a narrow escape, but the Governess has perished in the flames.

MR. PARNELL now figures as a co-respondent in the Divorce Court. Captain O'Shea has served a citation on him. The Agitator has been complaining like a schoolboy that the Times people had instigated the injured husband. Well, if he delights in the sweets of revenge, he has been amply compensated by the death of the most valuable of his enemy's men, Mr. Macdonald. The brave old Manager succumbed under the strain and worry, long continued, and, last not least, the humiliation of the collapse of the Inquiry. His office will be taken up by one of the Walters. But the vacancy caused by his death will, in a great measure, still remain.

MR. STANLEY sailed for Egypt. Emh. Pasha has had a relapse which has made the doctors exceedingly anxious.

WE read in the Gazette that "In exercise of the powers conferred by section 23 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the Governor-General in Council exempts from the export duty to which it is liable under the Indian Tariff Act, 1882, all rice exported by sea and entered outwards for either of the French ports of Pondicherry and Karikal, or passing by land into either of these settlements.

This exemption shall commence on the 23rd day of December 1889, and shall continue in force until the 31st day of March 1890, inclusive.

(Sd.) J. F. FINLAY,

Offg. Secretary to the Government of India."

The annexed letter, dated 23rd December 1889, from the Viceroy and Governor-General of British India to the Governor of the French Settlement in India, explains the reason why:—

"Your Excellency,

I have received and considered in Council Your Excellency's telegram of the 7th December requesting that, in consideration of the prolonged drought and insufficient supply of rice, the Government of India will sanction the exemption from export duty of rice shipped from British India to Pondicherry and Karikal.

I have had much satisfaction in complying with this request, and I enclose for Your Excellency's information copy of a notification No. 3023 dated the 23rd instant giving effect to this decision.

I have caused instructions to be issued to the Collectors of customs at ports in British India to supply Your Excellency's Government with notice of all rice shipped for French ports without payment of duty. I have the fullest confidence that the necessary measures will be taken under order of Your Excellency to prevent rice being shipped or transhipped at Pondicherry or Karikal without payment of duty.

Accept the assurance of my highest consideration.

(Sd.) LANSDOWNE."

SIR R. B. D. Morier, Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburg, has warned English workmen and other persons against taking employment in Russia without formal written agreements with their employers. The documents should be executed before a notary, whose signature ought to be certified by a Russian Consular officer; an attestation as required by Article 485 of the Russian Code of Judicial Procedure, made by a Russian Consular or diplomatic authority, to the effect that such agreements are drawn up in accordance with the law of the country where they are executed, should in each case be attached.

Unless the precaution is taken to observe strictly the formalities required by Russian law in these matters, foreigners may be unable to enforce their rights in Courts of Justice in Russia, should a necessity arise for recourse to legal proceedings.

BY a Convention between Her Majesty and the President of the French Republic for the Exchange of Postal Money Orders between France and certain British colonies, signed in Paris on 21st September 1887, and ratifications being exchanged in Paris 29th July 1889, remittances of money may be made by means of Post office Money Orders between France and Algeria on the one hand, and certain British Colonies on the other; the postal administrations of the United Kingdom and France having power to determine by mutual consent the list of British Colonies to which in their relations with France the provisions of the present convention shall be applicable.

The convention provides that no Money Order may exceed the limit of amount fixed for the exchange of Money Orders between the United Kingdom and France.

A GENTLEMAN of experience, who recently visited the Colony of New South Wales, estimates that about 38 million odd sheep, or a million more than in the year previous, will be shorn during the present season, but that there will be a large falling off of lambs shorn. The total clip is expected to be about equal to that of the year 1888.

AN official report from the Cape of Good Hope shews that the exports of rough and uncut diamonds from the several divisions of Griqualand West during the month of August last were as follows:—

From the division of Barkly West, nil; from the division of Kimberley, 240,638½ carats, of a declared value of £387,886 7s. 5d.; and the divisions of Hay and Herbert, nil.

A LAW has been passed in the Colony of Natal, for the admission into the Colony free of customs duty of the following articles:—

Materials required for the construction and maintenance of railways, telegraphs, bridges, and other public works in the Orange Free State and the South African Republic. The term materials for the maintenance of telegraphs shall be held to include printed forms for telegrams.

Artillery required for the use of the Government of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic.

LORD LANSDOWNE has made up for the silence with which Government has accepted the retirement of Justice Romesh Chunder, Mitter from the Bench of the High Court. In a handsome autograph letter his Lordship regrets the loss of the Baboo's services and the reasons which had enforced the severance. He had hoped that the furlough would set him right. He had delayed writing, pending the receipt of orders from Home regarding the knighthood which he had recommended.

MR. J. H. S. COTTON retires before his time from the commissioner-ship of the Calcutta Municipality, retaining such control over it as his position in the Secretariat allows. Sir Henry Harrison's reign is also drawing to a close.

THE legislative session in Bengal will be a short one. Would that it might be a sweet one, into the bargain! The only measure of any importance is the amendment of the Calcutta Port law. Whether there is to be any new cess or not, there is no mention of it in the President's statement of the course of business. We hope no mine will be sprung. The Maharaja of Durbhunga has already sounded the note of alarm.

THE Magistrate of the 21-Pergannahs notifies that the Zemindari Dak Tax in the district for the year 1890-91 has been fixed at the rate of eight annas per cent. per annum on the sudder jumma of estates paying a revenue amounting to Rs. 5 and upwards, and payable in two instalments—on the 1st June and 16th December 1890. With the modern development of the Post office, is the tax still needed? Does the tax now yield any return to the Zemindars? When rents and revenues can be paid through the Post office, is it not time to do away with this tax?

THE Deccan Standard reminds the public of the antecedents of Mr. Seymour Keay in Hyderabad politics. Before he helped Salar Jung the father in bringing the Nizam's claims to the Berars forward, Mr. Keay had unearthed the Commercial Treaty of 1802 between the East India Company and Asuf Jah. The first article of that treaty cedes to His Highness the free use of the seaport of Masulipatam, with the privilege of establishing a commercial factory and agents at the place. Article 3 provides for free transit between the territories of the high contracting powers of all articles being the growth, produce or manufacture of each respectively. That treaty had never been abrogated, but in the absence of commercial enterprise it had lain a dead letter. Mr. Keay attempted to promote commerce and do himself good under its terms. He purchased the buildings of the old Hospital and Workshops of Masulipatam and imported a cargo. But he was not allowed by the British Collector to land his goods duty free. At last, he paid under protest. Mr. Keay doubtless appealed to the Government of India, and we believe some correspondence took place between the two States, without any relief. Now the baffled merchant is a member of Parliament, he will doubtless bring his grievance before the House of Commons.

THE Raja of Faridkot criminally sued the proprietor and editor of the Delhi Punch for libel, the said Punch having called the Raja an adherent of Dhulip Singh and otherwise abused him. After the laying of the information, the proprietor-editor apologized, laying his turban at the Raja's feet, and published the apology in twenty different newspapers in the Punjab. The Raja, however, would not accept it, and the Assistant Commissioner of Lahore has imposed on the luckless journalist a fine of Rs. 1,000 with the alternative of three months' imprisonment. The fine was paid down. Was the Raja too anxious to prove that he was no Arkan e-Daulat of Dhulip Singh? Whatever he may be or may not be, he is a trifle too litigious for a Sikh ruler.

WE are sorry to hear that warrants have issued against the Phoenix of Karachi to answer a charge of libel against the Superintendent of the Shikarpore Jail. The Phoenix is one of our best papers, not only for ability and independence and courage, but also for temper and moderation. Such a journal is a possession and a power on such straggling frontiers and in such obscure provinces. We are all liable to err, specially under the difficult conditions on which the Press is conducted in this country. But if it has unwittingly done any injustice, we are sure our contemporaries will be ready to make the amende honorable. If it decide to fight the matter out, we trust it will be supported by the public, not only with funds if required—but also and above all with reliable evidence.

In the list of engagements of the Royal guest given at the outset of our Notes, &c., we forgot to add that on Wednesday the Lieutenant-Governor gives a Garden Party at 4 o'clock "to have the honour of meeting their Excellencies the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne and H. R. H. Prince Albert Victor of Wales." The same evening there will be a ball at Government House.

HIS Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor of Wales had an easy passage from Rangoon. He came in one of Mackinnon Mackenzie's steamers, the Kristina. He had arrived at Bombay in an ordinary despatch crowded with other passengers. But in these Eastern waters from the Coromandel to the Irrawady he has been sailing like a Prince indeed, thanks to old Mr. Mackinnon and the British India Steam Navigation Company. It is said that in return for his baronetcy, and possibly with an eye to the future, that gentleman had ordered one of the Company's steamers to be overhauled and newly done up, with fittings and furniture to match, suited to the convenience and comfort of a European Prince and filled with provisions and wines and stores, and placed free at the service of His Royal Highness. The P. and O. had better look out. It is this vessel that conveyed the Prince from Madras to Burma and that brought him over on Friday afternoon.

The Reception of the Prince was enthusiastic and impressive. The whole country went out to meet the Sovereign's grandchild. The scene at the Landing at Prinsep's Ghat was brilliant in colour and dazzling with jewels. Under cover, it might have been more imposing and certainly kind towards the loyal magnates and men assembled. As it was, all who did not carry a pavilion of sola or felt on their heads were baked under a slow fire. The Police arrangements were good, and no complaints have reached us of the behaviour of the Police.

Everything was very near being in peril from the blunder in the Foreign Office arrangements announced in a Gazette Extraordinary on Monday. In those arrangements, the chief contributors to the scenic effect and political significance of such occasions had been forgotten. As well might you eliminate the part of the Prince of Denmark from the play of Hamlet! Such a thing could occur only among rulers who live islanded in a sort of hostile camp in the midst of the subject population. Perhaps they are lucky for being isolated; they therefore have missed some very unpleasant articulate sounds during three or four days. And no wonder that comments more forcible than parliamentary should be made when the highest in the land were formally excused and disgraced by a public Bull—bull indeed in every sense. That programme was an insult on the country through its hereditary Chiefs. It was preposterous, and creditable to neither side, that at the first reception of the Royal guest at the metropolis of the British Empire in Asia, there should be no more than three native magnates to lend weight to the occasion and be presented to His Royal Highness. The pointed exclusion of great Chiefs—representatives of Houses which were powers before the British leaped from their factory to the throne and which, from their revenues and their influence over the people, are still political factors not to be despised—justly caused them pain and amazed the country. It was a sorry return for the active loyalty with which, at no small sacrifice of time, ease, even in some cases health, as well as money, they came to the capital and initiated or supported the measures for giving a fitting welcome and entertainment to the illustrious visitor. And to be left in the lurch by those who are ever ready to advance new men and to hug to the bosom adventurers and intriguers, that was the most unkindest cut of all. But all's well that ends well. The grievance was removed just in time, and the threatened piasco prevented.

We hope the Entertainment Committee will be warned by the past. We see their invitations are not yet out, while rumours are afloat that these will be confined to subscribers or offered for sale. There should be no nonsense of the kind. The wellknown families and men of respectability and position in town and country now present should all be invited.

THE Tipperah Prince's Evening Party on Monday was a remarkable success. The arrangements were wise, and no expense was spared. We had been apprehensive only on the score of accommodation, but the invitations were judiciously limited and the unapologised for absence of the Calcutta upstarts—the Baboos and Raja-Baboos and Baboo-Rajas—still farther lightened matters, and allowed those who attended ample space to move about and breathe. Then there was no end of champagne spilled to put the guests at their ease and in an enjoying frame of mind. Sir Stewart Bayley was punctual to the minute and remained for more than an hour. The Europeans present included such men as the Hon'ble Messrs. Scoble and Hutchins, the Hon'ble Sir Charles Paul, Sheriff Turner, Secretary Cotton, Private Secretary Lyon, Major Shadwell (Secretary to the Board of Examiners) Capt. Petley, (Port Officer), Mr. Underwood, Mr. Sandys, and Mr. Caddy. The Maharaja of Cooch Behar, attended by his Private Secretary, Mr. Bignold, the Maharaja of Durbhunga, the Maharaja of Bettia, and the Maharaja of Sooshung with his heir, came and enjoyed themselves. The Maharaja of Vizianagram sent his Private Secretary to say how he could not come. The pick of the House of Oudh headed by Prince Jehan Kudr, and of the descendants of Tipoo Sultan headed by Prince Rohimooddeen and Prince Buktiyar Shah, Prince Iskandar Kudr (son of the late Nawab Nizam), Nawab Syedooddeen Ahmed Khan of Loharoo, and Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadoor strongly represented the Mahomedan element. The Ghosals of Kidderpore, the Tagores of Jorasanko, the Dutts of Wellington Square, and other families in town too were represented. There were such men as Lala Bun Behari Kapoor, Mr. P. L. Roy, Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman, Mr. R. D. Mehta, Mr. A. C. Chowdry, Babu Nirunjun Mookerjee, Moulvi Serajool Islam Khan Bahadur, and others. The Natches given were of the best, but the Europeans understood the conjuring tricks better. The guests all enjoyed themselves, the more enthusiastic sitting up at the singing and dancing till morning.

We have little inclination, and certainly no space this week, to notice the peculiarities of this list. But there is at least one name which is enough to discredit the whole. A notorious Municipal Commissioner who makes his living as a small clerk or extra translator, has got a title.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1890.

THE CONGRESS.

THE second day's sitting of the National Congress was resumed on the next day, the 27th December, with evidently no falling off in the attendance. The reporters in the dailies state that the number present was not in the slightest degree less than on the opening day, but the record of the proceedings shows a decided advance in liveliness. Even elements of a comical kind were not wanting to relieve the character of the deliberations. The chief business of the day was to discuss the proposal for the reform of the Legislative Councils. Before bringing it forward, the President called upon Mr. P. M. Mehta to move an address to Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. Mr. Mehta, in performing this ceremonial function, said he had truly represented the public feeling when he had spoken of Mr. Bradlaugh in the terms he did on the previous day. Telegrams and addresses had been pouring in from all parts of the country, and as it would occupy a week, if not a fortnight, to present them all, it had been decided that, instead of these, one address on behalf of the Congress should be presented to Mr. Bradlaugh, and he proposed a committee consisting of Sir William Wedderburn, Mr. Adam, and himself to draft the address. His own name had of course been proposed to be added to the committee, and it was not his own doing. The Hon'ble Pundit Ajudhyanath, of Allahabad, seconded the motion, presenting, it is said, an entertaining peculiarity by his accentuation and gestures. On this motion being carried by acclamation, the President introduced the business of the day in a short speech. He said that the draft Bill had been prepared by Mr. Bradlaugh and had been circulated throughout India. It embodied in legal form what was believed to be the objects of the Congress, none of the provisions contained in it being introduced of Mr. Bradlaugh's own motion, and it was Mr. Bradlaugh's wish to ascertain upon certain important points the still more mature opinion of the people of India. These important points related to the principles upon which the Bill had been drawn, and the President thought that the best course would be to take the sense of the Congress upon these general principles first, leaving the consideration of the Bill, section by section, to be dealt with afterwards. With these introductory words, Sir William Wedderburn called upon Mr. Eardley Norton to move the resolution. Mr. Norton introduced his motion in an ambitious but unstatesmanlike harangue. He expressed his high sense of the privilege of standing there as an accredited representative of the people before an assembly of at least two thousand accredited representatives of the people, and in the presence of men like Sir William Wedderburn and Mr. Bradlaugh. The resolution is as follows:—

"Resolved that the following skeleton scheme for the reform and reconstruction of the Council of the Governor-General for making Laws and Regulations and the Provincial Legislative Councils be adopted, and that the President of the Congress do submit the same to Charles Bradlaugh, Esq., M.P., with the respectful request of this Congress that he may be pleased to cause a Bill to be drafted on the lines indicated in this skeleton scheme, and introduce the same in the British House of Commons:—1. The Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils to consist respectively of members, one-half to be elected, one-fourth to sit ex-officio, and one-fourth to be nominated by Government. 2. Revenue districts to constitute ordinarily territorial units for electoral purposes. 3. All males above twenty-one years of age, possessing certain qualifications and not subject to certain disqualifications, to be voters. 4. The voters in each district to elect representatives to one or more electoral bodies, according to local circumstances, at the rate of 12 per million of the total population of the districts. Such representatives to possess certain qualifications, and not to be subject to certain disqualifications, both of which are to be settled hereafter. 5. All the representatives thus elected by all the districts in a provincial jurisdiction to elect members to the Imperial Legislature at the rate of one per every five millions of the total population of each electoral jurisdiction, and to their own provincial legislature at the rate of one per million of the said total population, in such wise that when the total number of Parsees, Europeans, Christians, Hindoos, and Mahomedans respectively are in a minority, the number elected to the Provincial Legislature shall not bear a less proportion to the total number of members elected thereto than the total number of Parsees, Christians, Hindoos and Mahomedans, respectively in such provincial jurisdiction, bears to its total population. Members of both legislatures to possess certain qualifications, and not to be subject to certain disqualifications both of which are to be settled hereafter. 6. All elections to be by ballot."

These were the great living principles of the Bill, and if they got a Bill embodying these principles passed, they introduced, he said, the thin end of the wedge, and that it would become the great Magna Charta of the legislation of the people. Mr. Norton then argued in support of the principle of election, as well as of electoral colleges in preference to Municipalities, Local Boards, Universities, Chambers of Commerce and other associated bodies. To give the right of electing members to these bodies would, he said, amount to placing the elective powers in the hands of Government, whereas the scheme he contended for would secure popular suffrage. Pundit Ajudhyanath seconded the motion, again contributing to the entertainment of the assembly by his personal peculiarities. His muscular frame and long flowing beard are fondly dwelt upon by Congress reporters as having "lent a peculiar charm to his peculiar gesticulations and side movements." Not having been present, we cannot speak to this peculiar charm, but surely there cannot be any doubts as to his charming modesty. He was candid enough to acknowledge his deficient knowledge of the English language, and asked the indulgence of the audience if he failed to express his ideas, and it is a real and gratifying proof of the refinement and good feeling of the large and varied assemblage that they cheered him even when the expression of his sentiments was somewhat obscured. Some capital was made by the Pandit and other speakers of the well-known fact, namely, that these Congress meetings are not absolutely neglected by the powers. Police officers are required to keep themselves informed of these doings, and, in whatever light this action of Government may be viewed, it is by this generally known and even overlooked. Both the Pandit and Mr. Norton, however, almost electrified the entire audience by making what are called startling disclosures, amid repeated cries of "shame," of the presence of police officers at the Congress at Allahabad and Madras. As if the officers of the Peace were not only out of the pale of citizenship but perfect Pariahs. This "sensation" was succeeded by another "scene." A number of speakers next caused no small amusement by what we may call a lapse into political spooning. Mr. R. T. Bhore confessed that his knowledge of politics was below zero, but he believed that the influence of the Congress had thrilled native ladies in their zenanas who asked to be allowed to come to the Congress as delegates. What wonder some of the speakers had to be called to order for making wild digressions, not to say degrading disclosures! Indeed, with the exception of a few well-known names, the reported substance of the other speeches does not show as decided an advance in the political intelligence of the country as there may be in the numbers attending the sessions year after year, or in the frothy enthusiasm which is so unmistakably displayed. This, to be sure, is plain speaking, and sure to be very disagreeable, but as journalists we have often a painful duty to discharge. We regard all interests subordinate to those of truth, and it is only in the interests of truth that we are constrained to say that, on a great occasion like that of the reputed gathering of the best of the land, and on a question of such great and vital interest to the country as that of the reform of the legislatures, there might be more sensible and practical speaking than we have had. The only two speeches worth the name on the motion were those of the mover, Mr. Eardley Norton, and of our Babu Surendranath Banerjee, but even these have no practical value. As rhetorical exhibitions, they may pass muster, but they make no contribution to one's knowledge of the question. They do not impress, far less convince, and no business man will rise from their perusal except with the impression that they present a fine array of words but no argument. Our own views cannot naturally be otherwise than in entire harmony with the Congress in regard to this important question of the reconstitution of the legislative councils. We may not sympathise with the extravagant notions on the subject which are entertained by some of its leaders, but we acutely feel the need of reform in the present methods of legislation and the necessity of the best men of the country having a voice in its legislation. We are, however, disposed to despair of the future of our country, seeing that in preferring our demand for such reform, we have nothing better to urge, no more facts to bring forward, no stronger reasons to offer than what we find embodied in the reported speaking at the last session of the Congress of India's reputed representatives. Indeed, if the business of law making were transferred to men of no better stuff, we do not know if we should not stand up for the maintenance of the present order. The speeches have evidently been reported in an indifferent fashion, but such as the reporting may be, it sufficiently indicates the grasp, and practical-mindedness of those who delivered them amidst such enthusiastic cheering.

The principal resolution being carried, Sir William proceeded to put the clauses of the Bill, one after another, to the vote. The first two clauses as well as the last were quietly carried, but the others appear to have received more or less opposition. The third clause relating to the franchise brought up Babu Dwarkanath Ganguli, husband of Kadambini Bose, B. A., G. M. C. B., practising in Calcutta, on his legs. Mrs. Ganguli was present as a delegate in propria persona, to inspire her own. Babu Ganguli could scarcely remain quiet in her presence while a motion was on the tapis which excluded her sex from political representation. The fourth clause, on being put to the vote, also met with opposition, a delegate from the body of the hall calling out that Mahomedans as a class were against it. There was, however, no formal amendment proposed, and the clause was carried. The fifth clause was received with almost a storm of opposition from the Mahomedan delegates present. The proceedings now became most disorderly, and the Chairman had to rebuke the meeting for setting such a bad example of behaviour. The clause was however passed, apparently to the dissatisfaction of those classes that form a minority of the Indian population. Thus ended the second day's Congress, and one can scarcely say that it was a satisfactory ending.

BENIGHTED LITERATURE.

THE other day, we noticed the blundering quotations of two favourite writers on the Anglo-Indian Press, one on the Madras Standard and another on the Pioneer. We since find, in another Madras journal, the following editorial address by way of apology for filling up the space usually reserved for leading articles, with a couple of letters, one with the feminine name "Ada" subscribed and another signed in propria persona by the Eurasian President Gantz, the latter occupied chiefly with the parting address of the Eurasians in 1861 to the recalled Governor Trevelyan and his reply. We print verbatim et literatim :—

"TO OUR READERS.

Instead of the usual editorials we are glad to find the President's Note, so full, and interesting, that we can afford to be in the rear rank, when so many interesting subjects, are brought before the public by the President, and our correspondents. We will have our say, in time, and in the future issues. We earnestly beg that our readers, will truly ponder over the weighty truths uttered by the thrice noble hearted Trevelyan. We had the whole of the Proceedings, of the various meetings, addresses, and replies bound up, in our keeping as rare treasures and we are glad, we inspired our leader, to handle the subject. We did the same, with Ricket's Examinations in Parliament, and we have other works, which require, to be reprinted, and reintroduced to the Madras Public, and especially, into the dry chambers of Officialdom, in which men talk, by the yard, and act by the inch.

'So icy cold, so sickly pale,

'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more,'

as Byron lamented, of Greece in his day. There was some energetic action in Madras, some 30 years ago, when we had our Moorheads, our Nortons, our Christopher Rawlinsons, Robert Comyns, and other anacrites and on but Madras is a sleepy dreamy hollow now. Jamais S'arrriere never behind is a Scotch Nobleman's motto, but here we have 'fine specimen of officers,' but go round the railings of the People's Park, and you see illustrations of the fine Municipal Officers, and their energy like the crumbings of the fences. We want active working men, who can do a good day's work, for good wages, not your modern kid glove—West End gentlemen!"

That is ambitious writing, but if the Eurasians will not write more carefully and print more carefully in their recognised organ, they have little chance of conquering the world. For the credit of our friends down South, indeed, we wish we could lay all the blame on the printer. But everything in that piece of writing is peculiar, from the grammar, including punctuation, down to quotations. Apart from the taste of thrusting the editor's personality on the occasion, to advertise his private help of the most trifling kind, namely, in lending a pamphlet, we do not pretend to understand all the things in that brilliant patch-work. Are "rear" and "rare" italicised to show that, though far apart, they rhyme one with another—as though the writer presented the above as a piece of prose poetry? We may mention in passing, that the possession upon which the Editor prides himself, is by no means so rare as he fancies it to be. We could lend the pamphlet to any one who would make a proper use of it. Besides, Mr. Thomas Edwards reprinted the cream of it in the Calcutta Review a few years back, and again a part of it forms the appendix to his valuable memoir of Derozio, the Prince of East Indians. The writer indeed seems unable to proceed without accentuating his wit with the help of typography. Otherwise, we see no reason to italicise these words, or the phrase "act by the inch," or "hollow" with its epithets. Yes, he has a decided penchant for "epitaphs," and consequent liability to "derangement." Thus, Sleepy Hollow would have sufficed any other penman without interposing another adjective. Few writers who understand their business would think of retouching a trace of Irving's brush.

The motto of the Douglas family is simply Jamais arriere. Nor is the English poetry more correctly quoted. Where did Byron write like that? It must be in a Madras recension, if anywhere, that the absurdity occurs, namely—

So icy cold, so sickly pale,

'Tis Greece but living Greece no more.

Thus summarily is the Kohinoor disposed of—thus is the quintessence of nectar distilled—by a Grub Street genius who has missed his immortality by coming into the world after the age in which Byron's favorite Poet, Pope, flourished. Byron lamented in a different strain. It were arrant Vandalism to clip a stone, much more the cornerstone, of the Taj of Poesy. Indeed, the whole has such absolute unity and stern cohesion that it does not admit of such subtraction to any useful purpose. We are sure the reader will like it entire—the more he is familiar with it the better. Who can have too much of it?

He who hath bent him o'er the dead
Ere the first day of death is fled,
The first dark day of nothingness,
The last of danger and distress,
(Before decay's effacing fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers,)
And mark'd the mild angelic air,
The rapture of repose that's there,
The fix'd yet tender traits that streak
The languor of the placid cheek,
And—but for that sad shrouded eye,
That fires not, wins not, weeps not, now,
And but for that chill, changeless brow,
Where cold obstruction's apathy
Appals the gazing mourner's heart,
As if to him it could impart
The doom he dreads, yet dwells upon;
Yes, but for these and these alone,
Some moments, ay, one treacherous hour,
He still might doubt the tyrant's power;
So fair, so calm, so softly seal'd,
The first, last look by death reveal'd!
Such is the aspect of this shore;
'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more!
So coldly sweet, so deadly fair,
We start, for soul is wanting there.
Hers is the loveliness in death,
That parts not quite with parting breath;
But beauty with that fearful bloom,
That hue which haunts it to the tomb,
Expression's last receding ray,
A gilded halo hovering round decay,
The farewell beam of feeling past away!
Spark of that flame, perchance of heavenly birth,
Which gleams, but warms no more its cherish'd earth!

That passage in the Giaour is one of the finest in literature. It contains the most elaborate yet charming comparison to be found in the whole range of the world's Poesy. But what a mess has been made of it! how has it been mangled in Madras! This innocent gentleman has actually gone to the trouble of writing a line for Byron and fitting it, like a rude journeyman carpenter on the Coromandel Coast, to a line taken from the Poet at random. Such men are dangerous and should be avoided as enemies of culture.

The most extraordinary part of the matter is that the Madras journal is a lover—after its kind—of Poesy—of a sort. "Pottery" is its peculiar weakness. Not an issue appears without some exhibitions of the frenzy. Here are some typical stanzas of a wonderful lyric in the same number contributed by a favorite singer:—

As I stand alone in the verander
What beautiful scenes I see,
Many things over which to ponder,
On the Banks of the Hemavaty.

In front a vast field is covered
With valuable crops of ragi
This field is also studded
Here and there with a large tree.

Another sight, too, very pleasant
On this fast field I see,
Dark Men, and Women, the peasants
Working amidst the ragi.

A long drain of purple hills too,
Tho' not always purple they be,
And a dhony boat, not very new
Is seen on the Hemavaty.

And this kind of thing goes on, week after week. What wonder that Madras should have earned the name of "Benighted!"

THE STANLEY EXPEDITION. LETTERS FROM STANLEY AND EMIN PASHA.

THE MARCH TO THE ALBERT NYANZA.

A long letter from Mr. Stanley, giving a graphic description of the incidents of his final march to the Albert Nyanza, has been received by the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition. The letter is dated Aug. 5, and was written at Kaffurro, in Karagwé, a district to the west of the Victoria Nyanza. Although written in August, the letter only brings the record of Mr. Stanley's movements down to the middle of February this year. The events described thus cover a period of about six months. The letter continues the narrative from the point at which Mr. Stanley's last despatch closed. It will be recollected that, in the spring of last year, Mr. Stanley, having left one of his officers, Mr. Mountency Jephson, in company with Emin Pasha at Wadelai, and another, Lieutenant Stairs, in garrison at a fort some distance west of the Albert Nyanza, returned to pick up the shattered remnant of his rearguard. During Mr. Stanley's absence he had arranged with Emin Pasha and Mr. Jephson that they were to start from the Nyanza, with a sufficient escort and a number of porters to conduct the officers and garrison of Fort Bodo to a new station that was to be erected near Kavallis, on the south-west side of Lake Albert, by which he would be relieved of the necessity of making a fourth trip to Fort Bodo. Mr. Stanley found his rearguard at the Aruwimi in a very deplorable condition; but, having collected a large number of canoes, the goods and sick men were transported in these vessels in such a smooth, expeditious manner that there were remarkably few casualties in the remnant of the rear column.

THE FINAL MARCH TO THE NYANZA BEGUN.

Starting on his return to the Albert Nyanza, Mr. Stanley journeyed up the Ituri (or Aruwimi) for a distance of three hundred miles by canoe. During this period he was greatly troubled by the natives. On Oct. 30, 1888, they reached a point when progress by river became too tedious and difficult, and the order to cast off the canoes was given. They were then about 160 miles from the grassland, which existed to the west of the Nyanza. Knowing the fearful nature of the country on the south bank of the river, Mr. Stanley decided to try the north bank. After two days' march they discovered a large plantain plantation in charge of the dwarfs. "The people flung themselves on the plantains to make as large a provision as possible for the dreaded wilderness ahead of us." Ten days after leaving this place another plantation was reached. Meantime small-pox had broken out among the Manyema and their followers, and the mortality was terrible. The Zanzibaris escaped owing to the vaccination they had undergone on board the Madura. Being now near the confluence of the Ihuru with the Ituri, and as there was no possibility of crossing the former, Mr. Stanley followed that river along its right bank, keeping a look-out for a suitable crossing. Four days after making this diversion they came across a very fine plantation of bananas and plantains. There many of the people, who had been in a state of starvation the previous fourteen days, gorged themselves with fatal results. Another six days' march in a northerly direction they came to a place where it was possible to cross. Mr. Bonny and the Zanzibar chief superintended the construction of a bridge, and the expedition crossed over, being then between two branches of the Ihura river, and in a district peopled by dwarfs. Impressing some of these as guides and following elephant and game tracks, a south-east course was struck. The country was one dense forest, and in the middle of it (it being then Dec. 9) Mr. Stanley had to halt for a forage, and as the foragers sent out were long in returning the camp was reduced to a pitiable state of starvation. At last Stanley decided to try and find the missing men, and leaving a remnant in camp under Mr. Bonny's charge, he started, and on the following day he met the foragers and returned again to the camp, which was soon afterwards broken up. Having a presentiment that the garrison at Fort Bodo had not been relieved by Emin, Stanley, steering his course regardless of paths, hit upon the western angle of the Bodo plantation, which was reached on Dec. 20. Here, as he anticipated, he found Lieutenant Stairs (with fifty-one out of fifty-nine men) who had heard or seen nothing of Emin. Taking the Bodo garrison with him, Stanley, on Dec. 23, continued his march. The united expedition, however, was soon seen to mean delay, and "having no time to dawdle," he left Stairs with 124 people at a spot to the east of the Ituri river, and with the rest of his party again continued his march eastward, reaching the open grassland in the middle of January.

THE POSITION OF EMIN.

He was surprised to hear no news of Emin. However, on Jan. 16 he received several letters from Jephson describing how there had been a revolt on the part of the Egyptian officers against Emin, and how the Pasha and the (Jephson) were held prisoners, and also of the appearance of the Mahdists on the scene, and the fighting with them that ensued. On Jan. 18, Stanley, who had reached Kavallis (which is at the south-east corner of the Albert Nyanza), replied to these letters. He told Mr. Jephson that he (Stanley), was personally secure, having established friendly relations with the natives, but could not through exhaustion go up the lake, but would stay at Kavallis until Jephson reached him. As to Emin, whose intentions were still uncertain, if he would come, well and good; but any way, having accomplished his mission by taking relief to Emin, and having offered to him the option of retiring, he (Stanley) would go home. On Feb. 6 Mr. Jephson arrived at Stanley's camp. Mr. Jephson told Stanley that it was sentiment which kept Emin back. He also drew up a report on affairs in Emin's province, in which he stated that Emin, after his deposition, felt himself free to think of himself alone. Mr. Jephson bore witness to the fact that he had heard unanimous praise of Emin Pasha's "justice and generosity," though it was suggested that "he did not hold his people with a sufficiently firm hand." Mr. Stanley's peremptory request that a decision should be taken, since he could not wait for an indefinite period at Kavallis, brought about a solution of the difficulty more speedily than he expected. On Feb. 13 last Emin arrived with two steamers near Stanley's camp, desiring to make arrangements for the rescue of the rest of his people, or of those, at least, who were willing to be rescued. At this point Mr. Stanley's narrative breaks off.

STARVATION IN THE LAND OF THE DWARFS.

The following is one of the most striking incidents in Mr. Stanley's journey. About twenty-five days from the start the traveller arrived in a land inhabited by dwarfs, where he nearly succumbed to starvation. Mr. Stanley says:—

"In this new land between right and left members of the Ihuru the dwarfs called Wambutti were very numerous, and conflicts between our rear-guard and these crafty little people occurred daily, not without harm to both parties. Such as we contrived to capture we compelled to show the path, but invariably for some reason they clung to east and east-north-east paths, whereas my route required a south-east direction, because of the flooring we had made in seeking to cross the Dui river. Finally we followed elephant and game tracks on a south-east course, but on Dec. 9 we were compelled to halt for a forage in the middle of a vast forest, at a spot indicated by my chart to be not more than two or three miles from the Ihuri river, which many of our people had seen while we resided at Fort Bodo. I quote from my journal part of what I wrote on Dec. 14, the sixth day of the absence of the foragers.

"Six days have transpired since our foragers left us. For the first four days time passed rapidly—I might say almost pleasantly—being occupied in recalculating all my observations from Ugarowwa to Lake Albert and down to date, owing to a few discrepancies here and there which my second and third visit and duplicate and triplicate observations enabled me to correct. My occupation then ended, I was left to wonder why the large band of foragers did not return. The fifth day, having distributed all the stock of flour in camp and killed the only goat we possessed, I was compelled to open the officers' provision boxes and take a pound-pot of butter, with two cupfuls of my flour to make an imitation gruel, there being nothing else save tea, coffee, sugar, and a pot of sago in the boxes. In the afternoon a boy died, and the condition of a majority of the rest was most disheartening; some could not stand, but fell down in the effort. These constant sights acted on my nerves, until I began to feel not only moral but physical sympathy as well, as though weakness was contagious. Before night a Madi carrier died, the last of our Somalis gave signs of collapse, and the few Soudanese with us were scarcely able to move. The morning of the sixth day dawned; we made the broth as usual—a pot of butter, abundance of water, a pot of condensed milk, a cupful of flour—for 130 people. The chiefs and Mr. Bonny were called to council. At my proposing a reverse to the foragers of such a nature as to exclude our men from returning with news of such a disaster, they were altogether unable to comprehend such a possibility—they believed it possible that these 130 men were searching for food, without which they would not return. They were then asked to consider the supposition that they were five days searching for food, they had lost the road, perhaps, or, having no white leader, they had scattered to loot goats, and had entirely forgotten their starving friends and brothers in camp; what would be the state of the 130 people five days hence? Mr. Bonny offered to stay with ten men in camp if I provided ten days' food for each person while I would set out to search for the missing men. Food to make a light cupful of gruel for ten men for ten days was not difficult to procure, but the sick and feeble remaining must starve unless I met with good fortune, and accordingly a stone of butter-milk, flour, and biscuits were prepared, and handed over to the charge of Mr. Bonny."

The afternoon of the seventh day mustered everybody, besides the garrison of the camp—ten men. Sadi, the Manyema chief, surrendered fourteen of his men to doom; Kibbo-bora, another chief, abandoned his brother; Fundi, another Manyema chief, left one of his wives and a little boy. We left twenty-six feeble sick wretches already past all hope, unless food could be brought to them within twenty-four hours. In a cheery tone, though my heart was never heavier, I told the forty-three hunger-bitten people that I was going back to hunt up the missing men; probably I should meet them on the road, but if I did that they would be driven on the run with food to them. We travelled nine miles that afternoon, having passed several dead people on the road, and early on the eighth day of their absence from camp met them marching in an easy fashion, but when we were met the pace was altered to a quick step, so that in twenty-six hours from leaving Stawahin camp we were back with a cheery abundance around, gruel and porridge boiling, bananas boiling, plantains roasting, and some meat simmering in pots for soup. This has been the nearest approach to absolute starvation in all my African experience. Twenty-one persons altogether succumbed in this dreadful camp.

THE REVOLUTION IN EMIN'S PROVINCE.

Mr. Stanley gives several extracts from Mr. Jephson's letters detailing the course of events in the Equatorial Province from April 1888 to January 1889. During that period many momentous events occurred.

Writing to Mr. Stanley on Nov. 7, 1888, from Dufflé (a station on the Nile to the north of Wadelai), Mr. Jephson says:—"On Aug. 18 a rebellion broke out here, and the Pasha and I were made prisoners. The Pasha is a complete prisoner, but I am allowed to go about the station, but my movements are watched. The rebellion has been got up by some half-dozen Egyptians—officers and clerks—and gradually others have joined, some through inclination, but most through fear; the soldiers, with the exception of those at Labore, have never taken part in it, but have quietly given in to their officers.

"When the Pasha and I were on our way to Regaf, two men, one an officer—Abdul Vaal Effendi—and then a clerk went about and told the people that they had seen you, and that you were only an adventurer and had not come from Egypt, that the letters you had brought from the Khedive and Nubar Pasha were forgeries, that it was untrue Khartoum had fallen, and that the Pasha and you had made a plot to take them, their wives, and children out of the country and hand them over as slaves to the English. Such words in an ignorant and fanatical country like this acted like fire among the people, and the result was a general rebellion, and we were made prisoners.

"The rebels then collected officers from the different stations and held a large meeting here to determine what measures they should take, and all those who did not join in the movement were so insulted and abused that they were obliged for their own safety to acquiesce in what was done. The Pasha was deposed, and those officers who were suspected of being friendly to him were removed from their posts and those friendly to the rebels were put in their places. It was decided to take the Pasha as a prisoner to Regaf, and some of the worst rebels were even for putting him in irons, but the officers were afraid to put their plans into execution as the soldiers said they would never permit any one to lay a hand on him. Plans were also made to entrap you when you returned and strip you of all you had.

APPEARANCE OF THE MAHDISTS.

"Things were in this condition when we were startled by the news that the Mahdi's people had arrived at Lado with three steamers and nine sandals and nuggers, and had established themselves on the site of the old station. Omar Sali, their general, sent up three Peacock Dervishes with a letter to the Pasha demanding the instant surrender of the country. The rebel officers seized them and put them in prison, and decided on war. After a few days the Mahdists attacked and captured Regaf, killing five officers and a number of soldiers, and taking many women and children prisoners, and all the stores and ammunition in the station were lost. The result of this was a general stampede of people from the stations of Bidden, Kirri, and Muggi, who fled with their women and children to Labore, abandoning almost everything. At Kirri the ammunition was abandoned and was at once seized by the natives. . . . Had this rebellion not happened the Pasha could have kept the Mahdists in check for some time; but as it is he is powerless to act."

EMIN LIBERATED.

In another letter Mr. Jephson, writing from Wadelai on Nov. 24, says:—"Shortly after I had written to you, the soldiers were led by their officers to attempt to retake Regaf; but the Mahdists defeated them, and killed six officers and a large number of soldiers; among the officers killed were some of the Pasha's worst enemies. The soldiers in all the stations were so panic-stricken and angry at what had happened that they declared they would not attempt to fight unless the Pasha was set at liberty; so the rebel officers were obliged to free him, any sent us to Wadelai, where he is free to do as he pleases; but at present he has not resumed his authority in the country—he is, I believe, by no means anxious to do so.

"Our danger, as far as the Mahdists are concerned, is, of course, increased by this last defeat; but our position is in one way better now, for we are farther removed from them and we have now the option of retiring if we please, which we had not before while we were prisoners."

THE MAHDISTS DEFEATED.

A third letter from Mr. Jephson, written from Tunguru on Dec. 18 reports:—"On Nov. 25 the Mahdists surrounded Dufflé Station, and besieged it for four days. The soldiers, of whom there were about 500, managed to repulse them, and they retired to Regaf, their headquarters. They have sent down to Khartoum for reinforcements, and doubtless will attack again when strengthened. In our flight from Wadelai the officers requested me to destroy our boat (the Advance). I therefore broke it up. Duffé is being renovated as fast as possible. . . . The Pasha is unable to move hand or foot, as there is still a very strong party against him, and the officers are no longer in immediate fear of the Mahdists. . . . As soon as we hear of your arrival, I will come to you. I will not disguise the fact from you that you will have a difficult and dangerous work before you in dealing with the Pasha's people."

MR. STANLEY ON EMIN'S ATTITUDE.

"To these letters from Mr. Jephson Mr. Stanley wrote a formal reply. He also sent a private note to Mr. Jephson, from which we quote the following passages :—

"I have read your letters half a dozen times over, but I fail to grasp the situation thoroughly, because in some important details one letter seems to contradict the other. In one you say the Pasha is a close prisoner, while you are allowed a certain amount of liberty; in the other, you say that you will come to me as soon as you hear of our arrival here, and 'I trust,' you say, 'the Pasha will be able to accompany me.' Being prisoners, I fail to see how you could leave Tunguru at all. All this is not very clear to us, who are fresh from the bush. If the Pasha can come, send a courier on your arrival at our old camp on the lake below here, to announce the fact, and I will send a strong detachment to escort him up to the plateau, even to carry him if he needs it. I feel too exhausted after my 1,300 miles of travel since I parted from you last May to go down to the lake again. The Pasha must have some pity for me. I want to help the Pasha somehow, but he must also help me, and credit me. If he wishes to get out of this trouble, I am his most devoted servant and friend, but if he hesitates again I shall be plunged in wonder and perplexity. I could save a dozen Pashas if they were willing to be saved. I would go on my knees to implore the Pasha to be sensible in his own case. He is wise enough in all things else, even his own interest. Be kind and good to him for many virtues, but do not you be drawn into the fatal fascination Soudan territory seems to have for all Europeans of late years. As soon as they touch its ground they seem to be drawn into a whirlpool which sucks them in and covers them with its waves. The only way to avoid it is to obey blindly, devotedly, and unquestioningly all orders from the outside. The committee said, 'Relieve Emin Pasha with this ammunition. If he wishes to come out, the ammunition will enable him to do so; if he elects to stay it will be of service to him.' The Khedive said the same thing, and added, 'but if the Pasha and his officers wish to stay, they do so on their own responsibility.' Sir Evelyn Baring said the same thing in clear and decided words; and here I am, after 4,100 miles of travel, with the last instalment of relief. Let him who is authorised to take it, take it. Come; I am ready to lend him all my strength and wit to assist him. But this time there must be no hesitation, but positive yea or nay, and home we go. Yours very sincerely,

"HENRY M. STANLEY.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who d being tire

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE FAR FAR EAST.

IT was a dream of early years, the longest and the last,
And still it lingers bright and lone amid the dreary past ;
When I was sick and sad at heart, and faint with grief and care,
It threw its radiant smile athwart the shadows of despair :
And still when falls the hour of gloom upon this wayward breast,
Unto the Far Far East I turn for solace and for rest.

I feel as if some former birth (as Hindoo sages tell)
Had given my migrant soul within these realms of light to dwell ;
And now that, ever and anon, when vexed with strife and pain,
It struggles through the mists of time, and wanders home again :
For still in pious reverence to her I bow the knee,
As if indeed the Far Far East a mother were to me.

Sure 't is the form I worshipped then which haunts my memory now,
To mock with fairy light my dreams, and flush my pallid brow ;
Sure 't is the hand I then did grasp in friendship's holy strain,
For which this cold and selfish clime I search, and search in vain :
Alas ! nor heart nor hand like these I meet where'er I rove,
And in the Far Far East lie hid man's faith and woman's love.

Oh for the morning's swiftest wings to bear me as I flee !
Oh for the music of the waste, wild winds and moaning sea !
Oh to behold yon Western sun sink in his bloody grave,
And a new day-spring rise for me upon the desert wave !
Oh to throw off this coil of thought, and care, and grief, and pain,
And in the Far Far East to be a joyous child again !

THE EMANCIPATION OF THE SUBJECT SEX.

THE LAMENT OF THE WESTERN WORLD.

Confusion has seized us, and all things go wrong ;
The women have leaped from "their spheres,"
And, instead of fixed stars, shoot as comets along,
And are setting the world by the ears !
In courses erratic they're wheeling through space,
In brainless confusion and meaningless chase.

In vain do our knowing ones try to compute
Their return to the orbit designed ;
They're glanced at a moment, then, onward they shoot,
And are neither "to hold nor to bind ;"
So freely they move in their chosen ellipse,
The "Lords of Creation" do fear an eclipse.

They've taken a notion to speak for themselves,
And are wielding the tongue and the pen ;
They've mounted the rostrum, the termagant elves,
And, O horrid, are talking to men !
With faces unblanched in our presence they come
To harangue us, they say, in behalf of the dumb.

They insist on their right to petition and pray ;
That St. Paul, in Corinthians, has given them rules
For appearing in public ; despite what those say
Whom we've trained to instruct them in orthodox schools.
But vain such instruction, if women may scan
And quote texts of Scripture to favor their plan.

Our grandmothers' learning consisted of yore
In spreading their generous boards ;
In twisting the distaff, or mopping the floor,
And obeying the will of their lords.
Now, misses may reason, and think, and debate,
Till unquestioned submission is quite out of date.

Our wise men have tried to exorcise in vain
The turbulent spirits abroad ;
As well might we deal with the fetterless main,
Or conquer ethereal essence with sword ;
Like the devils of Milton they rise from each blow,
With spirit unbroken insulting the foe.

Could we but array all our force in the field,
We'd teach these usurpers of power
That their bodily safety demands they should yield,
And in presence of manhood should cower ;
But, alas ! for our tethered and impotent state,
Chained by notions of knighthood—we can but debate.

Oh ! shade of the prophet Mahomet, arise !
Place woman again in "her sphere,"
And teach that her soul was not born for the skies,
But to flutter a brief moment here.
This doctrine of Jesus, as preached up by Paul,
If embraced in its spirit, will ruin us all.

Holloway's Pills.—In the complaints peculiar to females these Pills are unrivalled. Their use by the fair sex has become so constant for the removal of their ailments that rare is the household that is without them. Amongst all classes, from the domestic servant to the peeress, universal favour is accorded to these renovating Pills ; their invigorating and purifying properties render them safe and invaluable in all cases ; they may be taken by females of all ages for any disorganization or irregularity of the system, speedily removing the cause and restoring the sufferer to robust health. As a family medicine they are unapproachable for subduing the maladies of young and old.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THIS has been the Prince's Week in Calcutta. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived here on Monday morning to heighten the joyous festivities. They arrived at 6-30 by the mail train but alighted an hour after. The Viceroy's Military Secretary Lord William Beresford and Aides-de-Camp with a guard-of-honour received them at the Howrah platform. They were escorted to Government House by the Viceroy's Bodyguard and a troop of Bengal Cavalry. On the steps of the viceregal palace Prince Albert Victor of Wales and Lord and Lady Lansdowne welcomed the Duke and Duchess. The Commander-in-Chief too was present. In the afternoon, the Duke and Duchess accompanied by the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne visited the Bodyguard lines at Billygunge and witnessed a polo match in which Prince Albert Victor of Wales and the Maharaja of Cooh Behar took sides. Next day, there was the public Fête on the Maidan. The programme announced was as follows :—

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught were present and were duly honored, although they are ignored in the Programme.

On Wednesday, the Prince held a Reception—officially called informal—at Government House. The day commenced with a compliment to the Press, Babu Kaliprasanna Dey of the National Magazine being selected for the honour of kneeling down to His Royal Highness. Afterwards twenty chiefs and noblemen and Baboo-Rajas were presented in the following order :—

FIRST GROUP—12 O'CLOCK.

The Maharaja of Doomraon accompanied by his Dewan, Lala

Jai Prokash Lall Rai Bahadur, who acted as interpreter; the Maharaja of Bettiah; the Maharaja of Durbhungah, the Maharaja of Gidhour.

The Maharaja of Shushang; Nawab Syed Ashgar Ali; Raja Doorga Churn Law; the Hon'ble Raja Rameshwar Sing.

In the afternoon, there was a Garden Party at Belvedere, followed by the Dinner at the Bengal Club and the State Ball at Government House.

On Thursday, the Assault-at-Arms was concluded. The Prince received a deputation of the Permanent Memorialists and accorded permission to associate his name with the movement. The professed author of the movement Surendranath Banerjee was nowhere. The Little Agitator was firmly kept out. The Viceroy held an Evening Party to meet the Prince. But His Excellency could not be present on account of indifferent health. It was a very big Party, and a great sight.

Yesterday, the Prince, chaperoned by the Lieutenant-Governor, drove through the city, looking in at the Jewish Synagogue, the Burning Ghat, the girl and boy Government Colleges and the Water Works.

To-day, we believe, he goes snipe-shooting, passing the sabbath next day at Barrackpore. Then the royal visitor bids farewell to Calcutta.

THE District Judge of Hoogly, Mr. MacLaughlin, is taken to task by correspondents in the press for not allowing a Bengali Pleader to plead in his court in mourning costume, with bare head and feet. Whatever the apologists may say against the Judge, certainly the Pleader ought to have known better and abstained from attending court during the period of mourning, in undress. It is said the Pleader Baboo had a precedent in the practice among his brethren in the High Court. No such thing. The late Baboo—afterwards Justice—Onoocool Chunder Mookerjee was once stopped by Mr. Justice Louis Jackson for bare-headedness. The Pleader complained of headache, but the Judge would not allow him to proceed with his case unless he covered his head.

LORD LYTTON has had a fall in the courtyard of the British Embassy in Paris, and was confined to his apartments when the last mail left Europe. Nothing wrong, we hope?

SRIMAN SWAMI has mustered enough courage to address the Pioneer direct, denying that he is the ex-convict Desika Chari, with a crooked middle finger on the right hand. He says "My fingers are all as straight as, I hope, your fingers are. All who have known me—at least all those who had an opportunity of shaking hands with me—will, I am confident, certify to my straight-line fingers." And he has got an amicus curiæ in the Morning Post to support him. Says the Pioneer's rival—

"We failed to discover anything at all out of the way after a careful examination that we were asked to make."

But, with such unexceptionable limbs, such a case and such proverbial witnesses, why does he choose the crooked course instead of the straight road to justice? "In conclusion," he hopes "to furnish further evidence and proof that I am not the criminal alluded to in your leader in the action for libel which I intend to institute in the High Court of these Provinces." The Pioneer publishes the denial without comment of any kind. It evidently waits for the hour when it may be called upon to file its answer to the plaint.

THEY have started at Glasgow a limited Company to deal with the question of the housing of the poor in that city. That ought also to be a question in Calcutta.

THE Eiffel Tower has been reproduced in miniature in diamond. It is valued at 3,000,000 frs. and contains 15 kilos of gold and silver, 40,000 diamonds and 3,000 pearls.

AT St. Petersburg, they are officially considering a project for a canal connecting the White Sea with Lake Onega. It will be 146 miles long, 86 whereof being natural waterway, 12 yards broad, and sufficiently deep for ships drawing 10 feet of water. The cost is estimated at 7½ million roubles, besides 2½ million for a new port at Vyg Gouba and for deepening the bed of the river Svyr.

THE Milan astronomer, Signor Schiaparelli, after ten years' investigation, has ascertained that the planet Mercury has a rotation like that of the moon. Its rotation on its own axis and that round the sun synchronise, so that it always turns the same side to the sun, as the moon does to the earth.

THE very highlanders of Central Europe so addicted to habits of peaceful industry, are arming themselves like the rest of the Continent. The State Council has accepted the vote of the National Council for 17,500,000 frs. for new rifles and ammunition for the Swiss army. This is significant. In these times, Nature is not all sufficient for the protection of nations. The advantages of geography have to be improved by a trained and well-armed soldiery. Brown Bess has long been at a discount. And now even Afghans—down to Khyberees—have need of breech-loaders and rifled guns.

IN the Cronin trial for murder, the defence objected to the evidence of Dr. Moore on the ground that he had read in the newspapers the verbatim report of the evidence of the previous witness, Dr. Egbert. The Judge at first allowed the objection but, on further consideration, admitted the evidence. He argued that the rule excluding witnesses from the hearing of others' testimony was made at a time when the newspaper enterprise had not developed into the present proportions, and if the rule were now acted upon, many witnesses would be excluded to the prejudice of a trial. Just so. He left it to the good sense of newspapers to suppress reports, where necessary. A forlorn hope.

GOVERNMENT has at last prepared a statement showing the extent to which the cost of the administration of Civil Justice in British India is met by the revenue from Court-fees and other receipts of Civil Courts. The enquiry commenced in 1886 and necessarily deals with the figures of 1885. That statement shews that in Bengal only is there a surplus amounting to 14½ lacs; in Madras, the receipts and charges are practically equal; and in all other Provinces the charges are much in excess of the receipts. The deficit on the whole account exceeds 12½ lacs.

The Receipts include

(a) Receipts in Court-fee stamps:

This item was to represent the value of all Court-fee stamps filed in Civil Courts with plaints or petitions, and in connection with the service of processes. The value of the Court-fee stamps on probates, letters of administration, and certificates was not to be included.

(b) Receipts in cash:

This item was to include all cash receipts finally credited to Government. Amounts which are merely paid into Court in order to be paid away again, such as diet money for witnesses or sums paid in proceedings for the execution of decrees, were not to be included.

Under the Charges are included

(a) The whole of the salaries of officers and establishments and the contingent and other expenditure of Courts which, like Small Cause Courts, are engaged solely in the administration of Civil Justice.

(b) A share of the salaries of officers and establishments and of the contingent and other expenditure of Courts which are engaged only partly in the administration of Civil Justice. It was stated that the share might be determined in proportion to the time devoted by the Courts to civil work, but that each Local Government should determine it on principles which seemed to it fair.

(c) A share of the cost of the Stamp establishment.

(d) A share of the discount on the sale of Court-fee stamps.

(e) The refunds of Court-fee stamps used in Civil Courts.

(f) A share of the expenditure on 'Law Officers.'

(g) A share of the cost of pensions and leave allowances of officers who have been engaged during any portion of their service in the administration of Civil Justice.

(h) The rent actually paid, or, in the case of buildings which are the property of Government, a fair rent (according to the Public Works Department valuation of the building) for the buildings or portions of buildings used by Civil Courts.

(i) Cost of stationery and printing for the several Courts."

NOW that Upper Burma has been brought under control, all those who assisted in that conquest in subsidiary capacities are to be rewarded. The India medal with a new clasp, inscribed "Burma 1887-9" is to be granted to all troops engaged in the military operations in Upper Burma and to those actually engaged on Field Service in Lower Burma, between 1st May 1887 and 31st March 1889; and a bronze medal and clasp, of similar pattern, to all authorized Government followers who accompanied the troops so engaged.

LAST month, the visitors to the Indian Museum numbered 38,530, namely, Natives 29,181 males and 7,775 females and Europeans 1,228 males 346 females, at an average of 1,675 a day.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE Influenza still rages as before. Apparently ambitious of the conquest of the world, this Genghis of Diseases embraces in the wide folds of its arms both shores of the Atlantic—Europe and America. Impartial in its unwelcome regards, it cares not to choose, but marks all classes for its victims. Just now, if it is abating in the capitals of Germany, France and Austria, it is spreading in the United States and England. In Birmingham, 50,000 persons are affected. At Aldershot, the barracks have been turned into hospitals. The sick average ten men in each Company of the garrison. Last week, there were four deaths in London. Policemen, postmen, porters and the Destitute Children of Dr. Barnardo's Home have been specially marked. The worst cases have occurred in the vicinity of the Docks and in the East End. The epidemic is general in Canada. In New York, the death rate is largely increasing. The most noted prey to the disease is the Dowager-Empress Augusta, who expired on the 7th, aged 78 years. She has left seven million marks. The old curmudgeon! Some valuable jewels fall to the share of our beloved Queen.

The year 1889 was commercially a very prosperous year for England. Notwithstanding the strikes, there was an increase in the imports, of 48½ millions, and in the exports, 14½ millions sterling.

The Queen, though well, is too weak to open the Parliament in person.

The investigation into the Cleveland Street scandal has commenced. The bad boys have deposed to being bribed to decamp. It is further brought out that the warrant of arrest against Lord Arthur Somerset was issued on Nov. 12. It is in evidence that the Attorney Newton bought three passage tickets to New York and that his clerk Taylerson accompanied Hammond—the keeper of the extraordinary House in the now notorious Street.

Portugal, as a matter of course, has given way to England. The smallest Power in Europe had no chance with the thundering bully. The Foreign Office of Lisbon struggled bravely and argued well. But the feeblest British minister is a Bismarck in a quarrel with Portugal. Blundering Russell himself could not fail there. As was foreseen, unaided Portugal at last agreed to suspend further action on the Shire and in the Nyassaland, and to withdraw her force.

The infant King Alfonso of Spain is dangerously ill.

The new Republic has disestablished the Church in Brazil.

News comes from London that a waterspout on the Yangtsekiang off Nankin has drowned one hundred people.

Floods are reported from Australia. In the north-west of Queensland, three hundred miles of country are under water.

THE fiat has been repeated. The Indian Tribute must be maintained. The impost cannot be removed; nay, it cannot even be reduced. Once more, the distant cry from India for reduction of Home charges has ended in almost nothing. The Committee appointed for the purpose have, from the examination of these Charges, found that about 78 per cent. go towards payment of interest and superannuation. The Secretary of State points out that these fixed payments must continue for many years. Those for the recruiting and depôt charges and transport of troops are absolutely necessary. Nor is he prepared to effect any immediate diminution of the payment to officers on furlough. The only course open to him is that the resources of India may be gradually utilized in reducing the cost of the stores indented for from this country. Lord Cross has accordingly authorized, "If the departments in India can be accustomed to use articles made in that country when of an ordinary character and not needing special inspection during manufacture, they might be procured of sufficiently good quality, even though somewhat inferior to those which would be obtained by paying a higher price in England; and thus a perceptible diminution might be made in the payments in this country." Following this instruction, the Government of India have impressed upon all Local Governments and Administrations, the Home, Revenue and Foreign Departments and the Heads of Department under the Department of Finance and Commerce, the desirability of introducing and extending the use of stores manufactured in India in preference to imported stores, whenever feasible.

An elaborate civilised administration is a great luxury for an Asiatic people but a costly luxury. Willy nilly, they must pay for it. As for the superfluous Contingencies and unaccountable Charges, why, business is business, and the labourer is always worthy of his wages.

THE appointment of the Hon'ble Dr. Gooroo Dass Banerjee as Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University has been Gazetted. A timely announcement would have prevented the speculations and gossip of all kinds which had been generated in the interval.

THE Hon'ble Rao Bahadur Krishnaji Lakshman Nulkur, C.I.E., has been raised to the Supreme Legislative Council as an Additional Member. In him Bombay will have a worthy representative. His predecessor was only a bag of money. Rao Nulkar Bahadur is unquestionably one of the ablest men on his side so rich in talent and experience. He is indeed a veteran. Originally a member of the subordinate British Service, he was driven for something like an adequate career to Native Service in which he rose to be the Chief Minister of Cutch. Since his retirement, he has done excellent public service to the country—in the Bombay Corporation, in the Bombay Legislature, and as a citizen generally. He will be a distinct acquisition to the Imperial Chamber—the only Indian member able to hold his own in the midst of the British battalion of talent. This appointment is one of the innumerable services, great and small, which the country owes to the upright and liberal Governor of Bombay. Indeed, all Lord Reay's selections are happy: his worst are better than the best of others. He would not have weakened an enfeebled administration to compensate a lady for a blank—or block in the matrimonial Lottery. He too has friends, but he takes care to choose them. The ablest men of his Presidency—the Nulkars, the Telangs, the Malabar, the Yajniks, and many others—are all personal friends of the enlightened Governor. His Lordship while here on a short visit made no secret of his esteem for, and his appreciation of, the society of his Hindu, Mussulman and Parsee friends. And we hear from Bombay that he is above the weakness of fighting shy of his Indian friends in public.

So little is known of the position and affairs of the Mahdi, and there has been so much speculation in consequence, that the copy of the letter from the Mahdi's General Omar Saleh to Emin Pasha received in England is most welcome. The letter must have been written early in September last. Its authenticity is patent on the face of it. It is a genuine expression of the heart of Islam pure and simple. We reproduce the most important parts:—"In Khartoum," writes Omar Saleh, "were killed Gordon Pasha, the Governor, and with him the Consuls, Hansal and Nicola Leontides, the Greek, and Azor, the Copt, and many others of the Christians and many of the rebellious Mahommedans, Farrateh Pasha Ezzeim, Mahomet Pasha Hassan, Bachit, Batraki, and Achmet Bey-el-Dgelab. And whoever was killed by the Mahdi's followers was at once consumed by fire; and this is one of the greatest wonders happening to confirm what is written is to come to pass before the end of the world. There is just another wonder; the spears carried by the Mahdi's followers had a flame burning at their points, and this we have seen with our eyes, and not heard only."

Again:—

"And so event followed event near Suakim and Dongola, until General Stewart Pasha, Gordon's second-in-command, died, and with him some Consuls, and this happened in Wady Kama. Then the other Stewart in Abu Teleah; he had come with an English army to relieve Gordon Pasha; but many were killed, and God drove them back ignominiously. And then the whole Soudan and its dependencies accepted the Mahdi's rule, and submitted to the Imam, the Mahdi, and gave themselves to him, with their children and possessions, and became his followers; and whoever opposed him was killed by God, and his children and property became the prey of the Moslems."

Certainly, no Giaour could compose such an epistle.

Such miracles are not rare in Oriental tradition. Our older Bengali readers will remember Titu Meah of Baraset's vaunt of having swallowed up—and quietly digested—the balls of the opening blank fire with which he and the defenders of his bamboo stockade were greeted by the British. Unfortunately for the British, the Mahdi power was no empty vaunt.

A UNIQUE social event with a political signification is reported from the Continent. An Austrian Prince is about to enter an apprentice in an English ship-building yard. This Archduke John, as in duty bound to the head of his family, solicited the Emperor's leave to earn his own living, and has got it in a telegram that reached Hamburg just before his embarkation for England. The Princes of the House of Prussia are said to be under an obligation to learn each a handicraft, but we suppose it is mere amateuring with the carpenter's tools or the compositor's stick, even though they may be formally apprenticed and earn their certificate. Here is work in right earnest and in the severest form during several consecutive years that this Prince deliberately undertakes. And he is not Obliged by hunger or request of friends.

As in the course of time the noble dust of Alexander may stop a bung-hole, so in the vicissitudes of individual circumstances the softest hands may be found cutting cloth at a tailor's shop or the most aristocratic sinews propelling a wheelbarrow. Such romantic degradation, though rare, is by no means unknown. The present case stands on a different footing. It recalls the magnificent feat of Peter the truly Great. But even that is not its true analogue. Peter's sacrifice was sublime, but it had a recognised object. What can be the motive of John? If it is patriotism, nothing can be better. In that case, the solicitation and the leaving home without permission and the telegram overtaking the fugitive on the way just in the nick of time, are all parts of a political play to beguile the nations. Otherwise it is pure madness—this freak of the Archduke—similar to the craze of the aristocratic Englishman who plies a 'bus in London.

A Vienna court has discovered an aristocratic Rakshasi. This Baroness Stahlberg is as hard and, we suspect as unprepossessing, as her unspellable name. She is a moral contradiction. A lover of animals, she is a decided misanthrope. In fact, she makes up for her irrational favour to her brutes by gratuitous cruelty to her men. She prides herself on being a connoisseur of horseflesh, and she seems almost prepared to patronise human flesh as a delicacy. Unfortunately for her, cannibalism is not permitted in Christendom, and so she enjoys her fill vicariously—through her pets. She enters her stables at noon and stays there till early the next morning, feeding the animals with sugar and cakes, and encouraging them to kick and bite the grooms, who are kept employed all night. One of these unfortunates has sued his mistress for damages for injuries so received. Among other things, the plaintiff deposed—"when I was badly bitten by the horse Mamsi, the Baroness laughed heartily, and told me to kneel down and bind up her hoofs. This I declined to do, saying I would sooner attend on a dozen foxes than Mamsi, and the Baroness said that she would dismiss me from her service for insulting her horse." Many grooms and stablemen formerly in the service of this queer woman of fortune, emboldened by the prospect of justice to the proletariat against the aristocracy, have followed the example of the plaintiff, and come forward with similar claims for compensation for their respective pounds of flesh.

We read in the annals of the Pathan Empire of Delhi, how the heartless Himoo used to regale his horses with bread and sweetmeats to pique the poor Mogul grandees and officers. But even that pedlar in power did not set his horses to feast on his servants. The Baroness Stahlberg should be shipped to Africa. She would make an excellent commander of the Amazons of Dahome.

WE noticed at the time the rules promulgated in Municipal Calcutta in the interest of the Government Salt monopoly and the surprise with which they were visited on the Saltpetre refineries in and about the town. Although the Salt officers retired from the new suburban area to which the rules did not apply, what we anticipated has come to pass. The manufacturers or rather the washers ceased to refine, and the trade has been practically suspended. It now threatens to pass out of Bengal and from the English market.

News has been received by the last mail that the French Government has contracted for 1,200 tons of German nitrate and that Halls the great gunpowder firm have filled their requirements to the extent of 1,200 tons in the same quarter. Both of these were steady consumers of Bengal saltpetre, but as Calcutta firms could not offer at equivalent prices, they were forced to take the artificial article.

If any loss of revenue could be traced to the unlicensed refineries, there might have been some reason for the destructive rules. But there does not seem to be any cause for believing that the refuse of the refineries was ever used for food purposes. The merchants were not consulted, and the Government blundered into a huge mistake from beginning to end, which it makes no sign to rectify.

It may be that in course of time some one will be hanged for the muddle. Meanwhile, great injury is being done to the washers in particular and the trade in general. To protect a small fancied revenue, the Government drives out the business altogether into foreign quarters and countries.

The 1,200 tons represent a money value of Rs. 2,40,000. The Calcutta refineries hitherto supplied from 10 to 12 thousand tons a year.

Mr. L. Palit has evidently benefitted by his last trip to Europe. At any rate, the Assistant-Magistrate and Collector has now, after all, been vested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class. In the Suburbs of Calcutta, he hardly fulfilled the promise of his proficiency as a passed candidate for the Civil Service. Besides, there was positive public inconvenience as well as personal indignity in the anomaly that, for want of powers, the representative of the exalted branch of the Public Service had to transfer cases to the file of the Deputy Magistrates. He will now exercise full powers in Tipperah.

Moulvie Abul Khair Mahomed Abdus Subhan, Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector, Patna, must have given full satisfaction to be so early empowered to try summarily the offences mentioned in section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We remember he was appointed in the year after the Exhibition, so that he can be an officer of no more than five years' standing. But by all accounts he is one of the smartest young officers going, of solid intelligence yet quick, and brimming over with life and activity.

COPIOUS as is now the English language, there are still many words and expressions wanting in it. We know no word for the Bengali bāspār, which may be expressed by "chief-upon-thief" or "out-thief." There is an expressive phrase, "the biter bit," but no word for the second biter—the biter of the biter. A case lately occurred in town reminding us of this deficiency in the dictionary. Mr. Pickett, of Bentinck Street, sent his employé William Nicholas Burns to the National Bank with a cheque for Rs. 400 to cash and give the money to a Hindu porter who accompanied. Burns cashed the cheque and decamped with the money, leaving the Durwan waiting. The Police were informed and a warrant issued. Burns appears to have purchased some clothing, &c., and kept the balance in a courier bag; but next day, he found his bag emptied of its contents. He then rushed to the Police and right into their arms, from which he could not extricate himself, either for love or money. They locked him in authoritative embrace; for he was wanted and his visit was a godsend in nick of time. He has since, under order of the Magistrate, been securely lodged under appropriate discipline at State expense. But what of the superthieving of the other rascal who, to speak after a Bengalicism, opened out Burns's eye—to the fact that there were others as good as he, perhaps better than himself. What must his reflections be when he thinks of it, that there is no security even for the thief against theft!

A contemporary speaks of the case as one of "a swindler being swindled out of his ill-gotten gains by another." Strictly speaking, one is a swindler and the other a thief, pure and simple.

THE Commissioners have sanctioned a deviation of the Central Road now under acquisition. That saves the Jains their chapel, and the Commissioners visits from that community at all hours of day and night. One Commissioner has been humbled. The temple has ceased to be a private property. The city is at rest.

The revival of the movement in the Corporation to provide for the Printer-contractor of the late Suburban Municipality has for the moment been suspended. The General Committee, in anticipation of sanction by the Commissioners in meeting, had accepted Sham Beed's tender of rates as the lowest. The Indian Daily News pointed out that the other tender was considerably lower. The General Committee has been asked to consider the whole question. We hope it will approach it in a business-like way, entering into details of printing and the printing department, and not decide in their chairs on easy generalities or on official or officious suggestions. At the same time, it will be good for the gentlemen, in this world as in the next, to have some consideration for the poor servants of the Corporation. In quest of an imaginary or a trifling advantage, no right-minded man ought to be ready to experimentalise at the expense of others. Bread is bread to all—only a great deal more, if possible, to the poor. That may be a quasi-Hibernian mode of expression, but it essays to interpret the gravity of the subject to the struggling classes and to realise the extreme weight of responsibility of those dealing with it.

THE Prince season over, the Majeronis are to the fore. Welcome! say we, with our whole souls. The gifted pair gives two more performances next week. We trust they will have an overflowing house at each appearance. The European Upper Ten and the flower of native society ought to muster strong. It will be a stigma on the intelligence and education of our city if such exalted amusement cannot draw all Calcutta and his wife. We do not hesitate to assure those who are disposed to keep away that they will miss the highest and purest enjoyment. Few and far between, like angels' visits are the visits of such masters of the art histrionique. From time to time, a famous actor or actress used to be tempted or beguiled to these shores. But since the disgraceful way in which Herr Bandmann was hooted out by the creatures of the Calcutta Press, the chances have diminished to a minimum. The Majeronis are on the Calcutta stage by an accident improved upon by amateur enthusiasm—thanks to Mrs. McIntosh, Colonel Chatterton and his colleagues. And they are, if not superior, certainly second to no stars that have shed their light on us. The full extent of this testimony may be appreciated by remembering that the comparison is with such as Mrs. Lewis, Miss Edith Bertram, Miss Fanny Raynor, Mr. Burdett Howe, Herr Bandmann and Miss Boudet, and, we may add, Mr. Locke Richardson. The strangers are supported by the Prince and Princess of amateurs, Colonel Chatterton and Mrs. McIntosh. Some of the other amateurs also are most excellent and form with the lady and gentlemen first named a really effective company. Calcutta may well be proud of her amateurs.

We have a suggestion to offer to our excellent and ingenious townsmen. Why do not they utilise the presence of the eminent Italians to put Shakespeare on the stage. It would be a superb thing to see them play the great rôles of Hamlet and Ophelia, Othello and Desdemona, the Macbeths, Romeo and Juliet.

We grieve to hear of the bereavement sustained by Baboo Grish Chunder Ghose, the Actor, Manager, and Improver of the indigenous Stage. Always a severe affliction, the death of a wife at such an age of his life is an irreparable disaster. Notwithstanding, the Star Theatre manages to draw crowded houses to its new play or pantomime as it is called, "The 20th Century." By this extravagant picture of Female Rule, the Star has made a decided hit, and struck the right chord of the hour.

THE VISION OF LIGHT.

How shall we describe the Entertainment given to the Prince? We feel as the House of Commons felt on the delivery of Sheridan's famous Speech on the Begum Charge against Warren Hastings, when the House had to be adjourned on the unexampled ground that eloquence had overpowered the members, too completely for calm judgment on the question. Here, with the impression of the great spectacle of Tuesday still fresh in the minds of public and publicist, how can we reason ourselves or reason with others—how collect our thoughts or find the words for them? How can we fix a trick of the senses? how interpret a dream which gives you the slip the moment you attempt to arrest it? It is for

The Poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
To glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven.
And as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, it is for the Poet's pen to Turn them to shapes, and give to airy nothing

A local habitation, and a name.

And that for at least one reason admitted by the greatest Poet himself in conversation between Audrey and Touchstone, where the one asks whether Poesy "is honest in deed and word? Is it a true thing?" and the other replies, "No truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning."

In that sense, to be sure, there has been a good deal of poetry evolved by the occasion. Poetry unencumbered with the fetters of metre has been lavished by the yard on the business. Herein the Fête and the Fête-makers have been peculiarly fortunate. Agamemnon had, long after his death, one Epic and some dramas. Our Prince's Entertainers have had no end of Prose Homers and prosaic. Privileged beyond the King of men and of Kings, they have enjoyed in the flesh, on the following morrow of the Fête, the song of their feat sung by all the bards of the morning Press. These bards were thoroughly equal to the occasion. They felt not the embarrassment of weaker souls, for they composed their songs almost in the very camp, in the esplanade and beach before the walls of Troy. Not so the hesitating sonneteers—the languid, limping rhapsodists, of weekly journalism. Even now, though they come last, they do not find their task a whit lightened for them—specially those that know not the noble art of "feigning." How shall they analyse what has been again and again accepted as a transcendent fairy scene? How dare they to criticise what has been pronounced peerless?

Seriously, how, indeed, master Enchantment—of any degree? How appraise an affair of all light—whatever the deficiencies! One must approach the moving and dominant spirit with reverence. The world has not known a grievance so sore as Milton's—there never has been such a deprivation as the Poet suffered from—yet he subdued the storm of his great soul in presence of the most characteristic attribute of Divinity. He has made no secret of his sorrow, nor striven to gloss it over. He has sung it in sonnet; he has cried the cry of piercing agony in the character of Samson. He has obtruded his wrong in his sacred epos in such a way that commentators have been forced to find excuses for him in the literary excellence of his uncalled for digression. But never, at the height of his jeremiad—in the worst abandon of personal feeling—has he presumed to reproach, or to seriously question the dispensation of Providence. We do well to remember his great example. Throughout that memorable evening, the grand invocation came to our lips whenever we were most disposed to cavil—

Hail! holy Light! offspring of heaven, first-born,
Or of the Eternal co-eternal beam
May I express thee unblamed? since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light
Dwelt from eternity; dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate.

Nor could we forget how the critic laid himself open to the retort of the Persian moralist, Saadi,

If bats cannot see in the day,
What then? Is the Sun to be blamed?

The Entertainers had two great advantages, of which they could not but reap the full benefit. They had to hand a plain in the heart of the town, dotted with fine clusters of umbrageous trees, and divided by noble avenues and groves. Calcutta at once boasted of traditions of illumination and possessed the means for it on any scale. And, we ought in justice to add, they understood the art of illuminating plants and forests. Accordingly, they were able to produce a charming effect. Those who, in disparagement of the present effort, revert to the past, preferring to dwell on the pageant produced by Sir Stuart Hogg on the arrival of the Prince of Wales, forget that they got on Tuesday a speciality in illumination which they never knew before. Sir Steuart Hogg was a master artiste in light, and he achieved with his means what others would in vain essay. Nevertheless, it must be remembered that he did not do what was done the other evening. He could not have done it; it was out of the question. Calcutta had not then been rich in vegetable life. She could not then boast of her fine bushes and welcome jungles and graceful avenues. Sir Steuart's plants had not then thriven into goodly trees and forests. With the help of these and of Prometheus' pilfering blown into a blaze, Messrs. Apar, Jobbins, Ghose and others managed to get up a show for which all who have the eye and the feeling for external beauty, ought to be thankful—the more so that there was no waste of force. The lamps were distributed with excellent judgment and taste—just where and how to affect the royal guest the most. There was just enough and no superfluity. We heard a complaint that the trees farthest from the Durbar Tent on the way between it and the Prince's residence, were shabbily lighted with a few miserable country lanterns of tin with a facing of common glass. It seemed as if expense had been grudged. A more probable reason was that Chinese lanterns had fallen short—and no wonder, considering the demand. If that was the case, it did not matter. For even here art came to the rescue and converted a defeat into a triumph. For, in their setting of greenery, these poor lamps did not show their backs, the lights only attracted the eye, and from the Red Road all the lights were visible to the advancing glance of the Prince and the viceregal party. As for the niggardliness of paucity, it was, we take it, a part of the organization of the pageant. The number of lights assigned to the trees was not, of course, even. Not only were the bigger trees—the botanical princes—better served, right royally, specially the leafy magnates posted on vantage points of observation, such as those waving their high feathers at the corners of the crossing where the Road from the Outram statute meets the Red Road—but the illumination showed a distinct progress along the whole route. Few and far between were the lights on the first trees met on the drive from Government House, and such lights as there were were set behind cheap glass. Then the artistic handiwork of the Heathen Chinees attracted the eye, at first in samples, here and there, but at every step in more and more numbers, till at last as many as even princely optics might well enjoy. As many, and no more. For, herein was the speciality of the occasion and the credit of the directing head that not a lamp was thrown away. There was everything needed for effect, but no barbaric profusion. This was no easy matter. The whole situation had no doubt been repeatedly studied from the point of view of the guests to come from Government House. But the calculation is difficult. There is no possibility of anything like rehearsal.

The only thing that marred the satisfactory effect of the tree illumination was the lining of the route with the barbarous talc candelabra on both sides. Their obtrusion on such a chaste scene was singularly unfortunate. They positively jarred on the senses. Lucky, that the illumination aloft in the air fastened and maintained the attention of most.

The illumination within the enclosure was poor. The faint lines of lamps on the foolish leaning Bengali temples and towers of paper served just to display their wretchedness and faults of construction. The tents were not sufficiently lighted, not even the Durbar Pavilich. There was a stinking bonfire in the court, and absolutely no lamps to light the Prince's way from the entrance of the grounds up to the Durbar Hall. There was not a single light even in front of the Pavillion.

The Government illumination of the great extents of Fort William and of the long and lofty Calcutta Horse Guards commanded the prospect. The Clubs, shops and private residences in the European quarter, specially around the great Plain, had a glorious effect. The Bengal Club showed its palace to the best advantage to distant onlookers, however the illusion might be dissipated by the stinking cherags by a nearer and more familiar acquaintance. Above the Maidan, blazed the electric light from the Ochterloney column. The umbrageous heads of the trees seen from the Entertainment grounds were turbanded with networks of lights, and seemed like bushes swarming with fireflies in an Indian autumn, while all around the scene, whichever side you looked, the lamps of beauty of the ingenious Celestials, peeping through many a "leafy labarynth," ogled you with dainty Houri eyes. By way of appropriate crown to the whole, there was the Moorshedabad Raushan Bagh—the standing attraction in illumination in the famous Bera Festival which was the glory of the City of the Nazim when Bengal had even its titular shadow of a Nazim—transplanted—as far as might be at short notice—to the City of the British, thanks to the Nawab Bahadoor who maintains, as worthily as it is possible under reduced circumstances, the dignity of his great House! That itself was a sight worth going hundreds of miles to see. It was truly a magnificent spectacle—an architectural pile of lights, multiplied by reflection in the clear bosom of the artificial lake in front and bringing out in relief the Gothic dome of the Cathedral in the background. Altogether, it was an enchanted dream—a vision of Enlightenment—such as we shall not see in our life again.

THE NOBILITY OF MOBILITY.

WE have to report bad news from the neighbourhood of the social world. Our readers will regret to learn that ever since the landing of Prince Albert Victor at Prinsep's Ghat, there has been no peace in Little Britain. The Empire of Cockagne has been divided on an interesting, not to say important, question. The Gentilates of society are highly exercised. The chivalry of the pave is in a ferment. There is civil war, of an uncivil kind, in High Life Belowstairs. The flower of Domestic Service are wasting their sweetness in mutual feuds and jealousies. An ancient House, only less ancient than that of the first patriarchs, is being torn by intestine discord. One Jeames' hand is against another Jeames. The Knight of the Grey Goose Quill cannot bear the Yellow Plush of the state-coachman or the brilliant uniform of the footman. The gentleman of the Press has taken full advantage of his opportunities by giving vent to his feelings thiswise, to wit:—

"THE WHITE COACHMAN.

Amongst the equipages present at Prince Albert Victor's reception at Prinsep's Ghat on Friday, that of the Maharajah of Cooch Behar caused considerable curiosity. An English coachman with a footman in lilac silk shorts, silk stockings and a huge wig and three-cornered hat. Why there's Her Imperial Majesty the Queen on the one side, who won't have anything but a pucca Bengali syce with flowing pugree, Heinrich von Battenberg who must be attended by a highlander in tartans, sporran and philabeg and now comes the Maharajah of Cooch Behar with an English eighteenth century turn-out. If those high in authority go on at this pace we shall shortly expect to see Mr. Gladstone with a Unionist valet and Boulanger with an Atchinese aide-de-camp."

Notwithstanding the literary pretensions of the paragraph or the art with which the feeling is disguised, no dismissed footman or disappointed suitor for the office of coachman to His Highness of Cooch Behar could have concocted such a famous grievance out of such poor materials.

Of course, there is more, much more, in that passage than meets the eye of the hasty reader at first sight. That reminds us forcibly of the gentle Cowper's sympathetic interrogation—

Is India free? and does she wear
Her jewelled turban with a smile?

Ah no! so far as the Indian Princes are concerned. There is no wearing their jewelled turban with a smile. There is no satisfying the progeny of the horse-leech. The more freely you bleed, the less thanks you receive. The demon of Race Prejudice still pursues the native Chiefs for all their concessions. One would have thought that at least the good Maharaja of Cooh Behar was above persecution. He has submitted himself meekly to every possible wish of the Europeans, and conformed to every caprice of their society, even to the extent of estranging, and estranging himself from, his countrymen including his best wellwishers. For all that, he is no better than he should be—no better than his less compromising brethren. His reward is only abuse and hatred. He cannot even give bread to Britons without exciting a whole battalion of Britishers against him.

It is difficult to please the high-wrought susceptibilities of this representative Civis Romanus and his like. Their sword cuts the poor Asiatic both ways. If our Sovereign appoints a native Indian horse-keeper, she is blamed for patronising natives. If an Indian Prince entertains an English coachman, he is abused for his vanity. The writer apparently forgets the well-known fact that many Indians have English servants in their stables. Indeed, all the Baboos, Rajas and Chiefs who are on the turf and maintain racing studs, have European stable-keepers and managers, and habitually employ European jockeys. Are these permissible and not the others? Is there any peculiar dignity in the office of coachman known only to the initiated, which does not belong to the stable manager or jockey?

Had the matter rested there, we would not have cared to complain. Had the complaint been confined to the writer, we might have passed it over. Unfortunately, it is the grievance of a large and perhaps growing class. We have too much reason to know that the writer expresses the mind of the whole fringe of British society in Bengal, if not all India. He has taken up the cudgels for the Cockneys and Snobs. He is the spokesman of the Mean Whites. The very natives below them—the Eurasians—are of the same view. Et tu Brute?

It is not the absurdity of wealthy natives giving employment to Europeans that clashes with the fine perception of the fitness of things of these men, any more than the oddity of an ass eating maccaroni struck the sentimental Sterne. It is only the appointing of European coachmen and footmen that has thrown them out of their equanimity. Employing Europeans is all right. Filling their pockets without demanding service or expecting any return, even so much as thanks, is better. But if you are so unfortunate as not to be able to indulge the luxury, if you cannot afford to pay men without some equivalent in work, appoint them by all means. But for your own peace, beware of sending them to the stable or the coachhouse. Nor is it necessary. You can make Mr. Gaffer or Mons. Gaberlunzie your Private Secretary or factotum, confessor or Gooroo—he is up to any dodge, so long as there is a sympathetic government to help him. As for Miss Tatterdemalion Mountmorency, she will make an excellent Mahrani.

THE POLICE ESPIONAGE ON FOREIGNERS.

It appears there is an order in the Police department under which all foreigners—Arabs, Moghuls, Iranis, Cabulis, and Turks coming out to India are carefully watched. Their movements are reported from one District to another, and their antecedents ascertained and noted in each station. There can be no objection to this sort of enquiry as regards persons who have scarcely any fixed profession or source of income to support themselves, and it seems necessary for more than one reason. These men generally live in India for years and go from station to station living on the charity of the wealthy, and liberal Mussulmans. They come on a begging tour to India. The facilities of modern travelling have increased their number, and that increase has decreased the amount which they used to receive formerly in the shape of charity from their well-to-do co-religionists. There may be some bad characters or species among them who may have some other hidden mission than that which they profess, and it is therefore very desirable that they should be watched and their movements reported. The over-zealous and injudicious way in which these unfortunate people are now treated and dealt with by the subordinate Police officers has given rise to some difficulty and sensation in certain cases and places. They are no new comers to India and their mission is not unknown to the Mussulmans generally. Each foreigner of this class is unnecessarily suspected by the Police as a spy and particularly a Russian spy, and treated very badly. They are cruelly harassed and sometimes openly watched as criminals. Some two years ago one Arab came to me and stated that he was haunted by a detective like a ghost and that his very footstep was followed by the energetic Police officer. He was even dogged to my house by the Police, and my attention having been drawn to this fact that officer quietly retired from my place where he had no business to come. The Arab told me that for two months the devil of the Police had followed him like a shadow, sleeping at night under his charpoy in the Sarai where he would put up. Such a state of things could not remain unnoticed by the general public and it caused some sensation among the Muhallah people, and it was widely known in town that a spy had come there. Every one was afraid of the foreigner and none would allow him to enter his gate. This state of things entirely closed all the sources and doors of income to the miserable Arab who was literally starved for some days until with much difficulty he made his way to my house. On enquiry I learnt from a reliable source that nothing definite or particular was known against the unfortunate man, except, that he was an Arab mendicant or beggar. He could hardly speak intelligent Urdu and this was another difficulty. He could not therefore communicate with the Police properly. A few days ago, a Turk came to me with a long story of his misfortunes of the same kind. He had a passport from the Turkish Government, but the lower rank of Police officers wanted to levy blackmail.

The moment the fact of these beggars being thus watched is known to the people, every one is afraid to have anything to do with them, and they are not even allowed entrance to their houses where they could have certainly expected some thing for their support. I don't think it is intended by the authorities that these men should be watched in such a scandalous way, which clearly shews want of tact and discretion on the part of the Police and frustrates the very purpose of the watch. The Turk who is nearly starving for some time complained bitterly and said that he never expected that the subjects of a friendly Power would be treated so unjustly by the officers of another Power. He said that it was better to commit some offence and thus force ones way into the goal where he was sure to get food and peace of mind.

I think it is very hard and unjust that these unfortunate and poor men should be thus deprived of their only source of income. It is indeed a very bad policy that people who have a source of income should not be allowed to pursue it and thus be forced to commit offences and procure their daily food by unlawful and immoral means. I don't think either the Police or any body else has any right to stop charity in this fashion and force innocent persons to become thieves. Every good Mussalman thinks it a pious act to support his co-religionists, particularly the Arabs, Turks and Moghuls.

A SYMPATHISER.

MOORSHEDEBAD.

1st January 1890.

Since I wrote to you last, I have been told that the President of the Committee of Management of the Estate of Basunt Ali Khan has suddenly withdrawn all power from the only member Nawab Kazim Ali, owing to the latter's objecting to the unjust dismissal of an upright officer of the Estate and the appointment of one of his own creature in his place. The publication of the letter with the heading "A Village Deserted for Oppression" in your valuable paper and your excellent and able editorial notice thereof have created great sensation here. The real offenders have taken fright, but the President has, on the contrary, been enraged, and is now determined to renew the lease with the former lessees even at an immense sacrifice. A very curious case has cropped up in this connection. At the instance of the police officer of Doulatabad, a thana in this district, in whose jurisdiction lies the village of Colladanga, the Deputy Magistrate of Berhampore has called upon Nawab Kazim Ali to show cause why he should not be bound down in the sum of Rs. 1,000 with two sureties for the same amount to keep the peace in the mahal for a period of one year. The President who is solely responsible for any breach of public peace within the village, has been exempted from the proceedings. The hearing of the rule comes off very shortly. It is gratifying to learn that the Lieutenant-Governor to whom the aggrieved tenants had memorialised for redress and wired the news of their desertion, has directed the Divisional Commissioner to enquire into their complaints and submit a report. We hope the Commissioner will personally come here for investigation, otherwise, it is feared, truth is not likely to come out.

The Nawab Bahadur of Moorsshedabad left for Calcutta yesterday morning to be present at the reception of His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor. The Nawab Bahadr wanted to show the Prince this old and ruined capital of Bengal, but the Prince's programme is already full. The Moorsshedabad party will stay at the metropolis for three weeks only.

The condition of the local technical school established five years ago is very miserable now. The grant-in-aid from the municipality has been suspended since some months on account of an unfortunate misunderstanding between the Managing Committee and the Commissioners. Both parties have referred the subject of their disunion to the District Magistrate. I hope the matter will be settled satisfactorily.

DACCA.

January 2, 1890.

On the New Year's day, an Exhibition is held in the Nawab's Garden, a mile distant from the town proper. It was started, I believe, in January 1877, when Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India. Interesting natural products and artificial things are brought and exhibited for the entertainment of the numerous spectators. At first, it was a very useful institution, but latterly it has dwindled into a mere Timashá. This year, however, the Exhibition may be pronounced a success. The Garden is the only place in Dacca where the public can retire to refresh themselves during a holiday. The Nawab certainly deserves thanks for this and numerous other benefits he has conferred upon the town. But I am sorry to tell you that a sad accident happened to a number of spectators on this day of merriment. In the midst of a tank within the Garden, there is a little artificial island. Communication between the island and the bank of the pond was kept up by a bridge nearly 4 feet in breadth and 25 feet in length. Upon the island a dancing party was being held. As a matter of course, there was a rush of spectators to the spot. There was not, however, room enough for the accommodation of the whole number. Consequently, a great number of people had to stand upon the bridge and were jostling and struggling with one another to catch a glimpse of the Bijee. All went merry as a marriage-bell, when, lo! the bridge slipped and nearly fifty people, young and old, weak and strong, fell down with the bridge. A panic overtook the whole multitude. People gathered at the spot; it was the fittest occasion for the display of the noblest qualities of human nature. An upcountry man showed the example, rushed down the tank, and instantly saved two wretched creatures. He was soon followed by some strong Mussulmans. As the crowd was very thick, they were packed together, as it were, as the bridge fell. To add to the misfortune, the tank was very deep. The stronger of course could force their way up; though with great difficulty. But in the struggle to get out of the water, several persons were wounded and all were terribly exhausted.

The water was 7 or 8 cubits below the level of the ground, so that dhotees and shawls were let down and caught hold of by the men who struggled up to the edge of the tank and were drawn up. All came out naked. The scene was most abhorrent and full of terror. Cries and lamentations were heard in every quarter. One cried for his son, another for his brother, and so on. It was indeed difficult to withhold tears. Some persons have indeed been drowned; but it is difficult to know the exact number. The announcement created a profound stir throughout the whole town. The accident took place after 4 o'clock and the evening of the first day of 1890 will long be remembered here for this unforeseen misfortune.

THE STANLEY EXPEDITION.

LETTERS FROM STANLEY AND EMIN PASHA.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERIES.

A second letter has been received from Mr. Stanley (describing the difficulties he experienced before being finally able to set out with Emin on his way home), dated from the camp at Kinzinga, Uzinja, Aug. 17, 1889. Uzinja is a district to the south-west of the Victoria Nyanza. He begins by telling of the arrival of Emin and some sixty followers, including Selim Bey, at his camp at Kavallis, which was situated on a high plateau overlooking the south-eastern end of the Albert Nyanza. On Feb. 18 this year he was joined by Lieutenant Stairs and his party. At a divan held that day between Stanley, Emin, and his party it was agreed to allow Emin's Egyptian people a reasonable time in which to come down to Stanley's camp—that is, such portion of them as desired to return to Egypt. On this understanding the Egyptian officers returned to Wadelai, where meantime another change of Government had taken place.

AN ODD COLLECTION OF LUGGAGE.

Emin, "with his little daughter Ferida" and 144 men, remained with Stanley, who gives an amusing account of the luggage which the Wadelai refugees brought with them, and which his men had to help carry up from the lake side to the plateau—an ascent of 2,800 feet. The luggage comprised such things as grinding stones, ten-gallon copper cooking pots, some 200 bedsteads, preposterously big baskets, old Saratoga trunks, old sea chests, little cattle troughs, twelve-gallon pombe jars, &c. No wonder the Zanzibaris grumbled at having to carry such rubbish. On March 31 (says Stanley) we were all heartily tired of it, and we abandoned the interminable task. One thousand three hundred and fifty-five loads had been transported to the plateau from the lake camp.

AN ULTIMATUM TO THE EGYPTIANS.

After an interval of thirty days news came from Selim Bey that he was collecting refugees, and also that the rebel officers at Wadelai were ready to join Stanley and return to Egypt. At that rate it was calculated it would take fully three months to bring the people to Kavallis. Emin asked Stanley what he proposed to do under the circumstances. Stanley arranged a council with his officers—namely, Lieutenant Stairs, Captain R. H. Nelson, Surgeon Parke, Mr. Mounteney Jephson, and Mr. William Bonny. To this council Mr. Stanley explained his views at length, stating that the intelligence that Emin's departure depended on that of his people was the first adverse news he received. That was twelve months before the time he was then speaking (April 1889), and in the interval matters had not advanced very much. Moreover, those who had revolted from Emin's authority openly boasted of their intention to loot Stanley's camp. "We believed (continued Mr. Stanley) when we volunteered for this work that we should be met with open arms. We were received with indifference, until we were led to doubt whether any people wished to depart; my representative was made a prisoner, menaced with rifles, threats were freely used, the Pasha was deposed, and for three months was a close prisoner. I am told this is the third revolt in the province." He went on to ask whether if he admitted the rebel officers (ten in number) and their followers (some 700 soldiers) into their camp it was not likely that they would play a treacherous part, take their ammunition, and leave them without the means of returning to Zanzibar. He ended by asking whether they would be right to wait for refugees beyond the date already fixed—namely, April 10. All the officers replied in the negative—it would not do to wait beyond the given time. Stanley then informed Emin that they would march on that day.

"THE STRANGE SOUDAN FEVER."

The Pasha (continues Mr. Stanley) then asked if we could "in our consciences acquit him of abandoning his people," supposing they had not arrived by April 10. We replied, "Most certainly." Three or four days after this I was informed by the Pasha—who pays great deference to Captain Casati's views—that Captain Casati was by no means certain that he was doing quite right in abandoning his people. According to the Pasha's desire, I went over to see Captain Casati, followed soon after by Emin Pasha. Questions of law, honour, duty were brought forward by Casati, who expressed himself clearly that, moralmente, Emin Pasha was bound to stay by his people. I quote these matters simply to show to you that our principal difficulties lay not only with the Soudanese and Egyptians; we had some with the Europeans also, who, for some reason or another, seemed in nowise inclined to quit Africa, even when it was quite clear that the Pasha of the province had few loyal men to rely on, that the outlook before them was imminent danger and death, and that on our retirement there was no other prospect than the grave. I had to refute these morbid ideas with the A B C of common sense.....I do not think Casati was convinced, nor do I think the Pasha was convinced. But it is strange what strong hold this part of Africa has upon the affections of European officers, Egyptian officers, and Soudanese soldiers.

TREACHERY IN THE CAMP.

On April 6, Stanley was informed that there had been an alarm in the camp the night before; the Zanzibari quarters had been entered by the Pasha's people, and an attempt made to abstract the rifles. The narrative continues:—I proceeded to the Pasha to consult with him; but the Pasha would consent to no proposition—not but what they appeared necessary and good, but he could not, owing to want of time, &c., &c. I accordingly informed him that I proposed to act immediately, and would ascertain for myself what this hidden danger in the camp was, and as a first step I would be obliged if the Pasha would signal for a general muster of the principal Egyptians in the square of the camp. The summons being sounded, and not attended quickly enough to satisfy me, half a company of Zanzibaris were detailed to take sticks and rout every one from their huts. Dismayed by these energetic measures, they poured into the square, which was surrounded by rifles. On being questioned, they denied all knowledge of any plot to steal the rifles from us, or to fight, or to withstand in any manner any order. The rest of the Pasha's people, having paid no attention to the summons, were secured in their huts and brought to the camp square, where some were flogged and others ironed and put under guard. "Now, Pasha," I said "will you be good enough to tell these Arabs that these rebellious tricks of Wadelai and Dufflé must cease here, for at the first move made by them I shall be obliged to exterminate them utterly?" On the Pasha translating, the Arabs bowed, and vowed that they would obey their father religiously. At the muster this curious result was returned:—There were with us 134 men, 84 married women, 187 female domestics, 74 children (above 2 years), 35 infants in arms—total, 514. I have reason to believe that the number was nearer 600, as many were not reported, from a fear probably that some would be taken prisoners.

THE MARCH TO THE COAST.

As he had determined, Stanley broke up his camp at Kavallis on April 10; the whole caravan, including 350 native carriers, numbering 1,500. Two days afterwards, however, he was prostrated by an illness "which well-nigh proved mortal," and which kept the expedition waiting twenty-eight days. During this period only two additional refugees from the Equatorial Province joined the camp. "During my illness another conspiracy, or rather several, were afloat; but only one was attempted to be realised, and the ringleader—a slave of Awash Edendi's, whom I had made free at Kavallis—was arrested, and after court-martial, which found him guilty, was immediately executed." Mr. Stanley also intercepted some letters which passed between the Egyptian officers in his camp, and those at Wadelai, which indicated an intention of treachery towards the expedition. A letter also was received from Selim Bey (who had never returned to Kavallis) stating that the rebel officers at Wadelai had stolen all the ammunition and had gone away, leaving him helpless. Stanley replied that he would march forward slowly, halting twenty-four days on the route, thus giving Selim a chance of joining the expedition should he care to. Nothing more was, however, heard of the vacillating Egyptian. The rest of Mr. Stanley's letter is devoted to a description of the route he took to reach the Church Missionary Society's station at the southern end of Lake Victoria.

A MARVELLOUS REGION.

Travelling in a south-easterly direction, the caravan entered the territory of the King of Unyoro, who unsuccessfully disputed their passage. As they advanced southward a great snow-capped range of mountains extending a long distance in a south-westerly direction arrested their attention. As they journeyed on between two high ranges of hills, the Semliki Valley lay at their feet, so like a lake at its eastern extremity that one of the officers exclaimed that it was the lake, and the female followers of the Egyptians set up a shrill Lululus on seeing their own lake, the Albert Nyanza, again. With the naked eye it did appear like the lake; but a field-glass revealed that it was a level grassy plain, white with the ripeness of its grass. As the plain recedes south-westerly the bushes become thicker, finally acacias appear in their forests, and beyond these, again, the dead black thickness of an impenetrable tropical forest; but the plain as far as the eye could command continued to lie ten to twelve miles wide between these mountain barriers, and through the centre of it, sometimes inclining towards the south-east mountains, sometimes to the south-western range, the Semliki River pours its waters towards the Albert Nyanza. As they approached nearer, the range of mountains, the Snow Mountain itself being set deeply in the range, was less seen, for higher ridges obtruded themselves and barred the view. "In altitude above the sea I should estimate it to be between 18,000 and 19,000 feet. The peaks of the natives, the Bakonju, are seen as high as 8,000 feet above the sea." After nineteen days' march they approached the lake discovered by Mr. Stanley himself in 1877 and marked on the maps Muta Nzige, and which he proposes to call the Albert Edward Nyanza. Out of it flowed the Semliki towards the Albert Nyanza.

A SALT LAKE DISCOVERED.

"While driving the Warasura before us, or rather as they were self-driven by their own fears, we entered soon after its evacuation the important town of Kative—the headquarters of the raiders. It is situated between an arm of the Southern Nyanza and a salt lake about two miles long and three-quarters of a mile wide, which consists of pure brine of a pinky colour, and deposits salt in solid cakes of salt crystals. This was the property of the Wasongora, but the value of its possession has attracted the cupidity of Kabba Rega, who reaps a considerable revenue from it. Toro, Aukori, Mpororo, Ruanda, Ukonju, and many other countries demand the salt for consumption, and the fortunate possessor of this inexhaustible treasure of salt reaps all that is desirable of property in Africa in exchange, with no more trouble than the defence of it." Proceeding in an easterly direction the expedition passed on no longer molested by the natives. However, fever greatly troubled them. As many as 150 cases occurred in one day. In the month of July 141 Egyptians fell out of the line, hid among the long grass, were lost to sight, and thus left to the tender mercies of the natives.

THE SOURCES OF THE NILE.

Mr. Stanley concludes his letter by stating that the importance of the Albert Edward Nyanza, which is a comparatively small lake, "lies in the fact that it is the receiver of all the streams at the extremity of the south-western, or left, Nile basins, and discharges those waters by one river—the Semliki—into the Albert Nyanza, in like manner as Lake Victoria receives all streams from the extremity of the south-eastern, or right, Nile basin, and pours those waters by the Victoria Nile into the Albert Nyanza. These two Niles, amalgamating in Lake Albert, leave this under the well-known name of White Nile."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs, Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1890.

No. 407

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

WHATEVER outsiders may say to the contrary, the chief personages concerned or the principal guests were satisfied with the arrangements made for the reception and entertainment of the Prince in Calcutta. Lord Lansdowne has addressed the following letter to Maharaja Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, Chairman of the Committee for the Reception of His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor of Wales in Calcutta :—

"Government House, Calcutta, January 15th 1890.

My dear Maharaja,—The departure of His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor of Wales from Calcutta was, as you are aware, of a private character, and no opportunity was therefore afforded him of giving a final expression to his appreciation of the arrangements made for his reception and entertainment in Calcutta. On the evening of his departure His Royal Highness referred to this matter in conversation with me, and expressed his regret that he should not have been able, before leaving, to offer his renewed thanks to the Reception Committee : he desired me to write to you to this effect.

His Royal Highness was pleased to say that he was delighted with all that had been done to render his visit interesting and agreeable to him, and that he cordially appreciated the liberality with which the citizens had come forward to do him honor. He referred with especial warmth to the arrangements made by the Reception Committee, and assured me that he was particularly pleased, both with the welcome accorded to him on his arrival, and also with the interesting series of fêtes given upon the Maidan on the evening of the 7th.

I have much pleasure in conveying to you and to the Members of the Committee His Royal Highness's thanks, and I venture to add one word of congratulation from myself on the complete success with which your efforts were throughout attended. I am, My dear Maharaja. Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) LANSDOWNE."

THE subscriptions to the H. R. H. Reception Fund were announced to be Rs. 74,574. The realizations up to date, as will be found elsewhere, amount to Rs. 60,125.

"ONE of the Public," demands, in the Indian Daily News, from the Prince's Reception Committee "a list of disbursements." For, "there must be a saving of a large sum of money. The public want to see the items of expenditure accurately." What would he do if there were not "a saving of a large sum of money?" Whether the saving be large or small, the Executive Committee of the H. R. H. Prince Albert Victor Reception Fund will, no doubt, after they have realized all the subscriptions and made all the payments, call a meeting of the subscribers to pass the accounts and dispose of the surplus. There is little chance of the correspondent scrutinising the accounts unless he be a paying subscriber. Our suggestion is that the Committee should publish an account of the Entertainment for instruction and future guidance on similar occasions. The brilliant and magnificent Reception of the Prince of Wales in Behar has been lost to history in the absence of a graphic account by a brilliant chronicler.

WOOL, cotton goods, leather and furs are the chief Russian exports to China. The principal China exports to Russia are tea and burnt sugar. The Russian trade with China during the first eight months of 1889 is valued at 2,307,251 roubles against 3,362,114 roubles of the corresponding period of the preceding year. The China tea and sugar are valued at 4,525,000 and 51,626 roubles respectively.

IN their search in the Stamboul archives for the lost library of Matthew Corvinus, Professor Vambéry and his colleagues have come upon the Deed of Gift signed by the old Servian King, Urosch, to the Monastery of Sveti Stefan.

IT is sad to read that Earl Spencer's library—at Althorp, Northamptonshire—containing over 50,000 volumes of value and quality, is to be dispersed.

MR. O'BRIEN applied for a new trial of his case against Lord Salisbury for hinting in the Watford speech that he had given incitement to crime and outrages. The Queen's Bench refused the application. Mr. Justice Field was of opinion that Mr. Justice Stephen had rightly directed the Jury, that the Jury fully understood the question, that the plaintiff had a full and fair trial, and that there was no ground for disturbing the verdict. Mr. Justice Manisty concurred. There was then an application on behalf of the plaintiff for stay of execution in view of an appeal. That also was not granted. Mr. Justice Field said the best course would be that the taxation should proceed, the defendant's solicitor undertaking to return the costs, if the appeal succeeded.

WHETHER Marriage is a Failure or not, it is at a discount in Great Britain. We read :—

"A proposal for free marriages has been made among the clergy of Derby, and, if the movement should be successful locally, it is considered probable that it will extend throughout the country. The object of dispensing with the fee is to counteract the increasing tendency to civil marriage indicated in the returns recently issued by the Registrar-General, which show that the proportion of marriages solemnised according to the rites of the Church of England was only 70 per cent., the smallest in any year except one since the institution of civil marriages."

CORREGGIO'S lost "San Giovanni" has turned up. It represents St. John the Baptist life size, with a long and slender cross in the left hand. The face and figure are turned to the spectator, and the former wears a smiling expression. One Enrico Cattini bought it from a poor family in the town of Correggio for a song. Signor Adeodato Malatesta, the painter of Modena, certifies to its genuineness. He says—"for these considerations, and observing the vigour and the spontaneity of design and colouring, the idea that it may be a copy, even by one of the skilful cinquecentista imitators of Correggio, must be excluded. It is an original painting of great value, in Correggio's first manner, important in itself and in the history of art."

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

IN September 1889, Government prescribed the Hooghly-Naihati route for emigrants to Assam. It is now explained that that order "was intended to apply only to the emigrants taken from the recruiting districts to Dhubri and crossing the Hooghly above Calcutta, who, in fact, constitute the majority, the object being to exclude the alternative crossings via Mugra and Kanchrapara. It was not intended to interfere in any way with emigration via Calcutta and Goalundo."

Holloway's Ointment and Pills are beyond all doubt the most valuable and most convenient medicines that travellers can take, across the seas to distant climes, for change of climate and the new conditions and surroundings of life to which they will be exposed will assuredly give rise to great disturbances of the system and to such especial morbid state of the blood and constitution generally as will render the use of these effectual remedies highly necessary, for they will find in them a ready and safe means of relief in most of the diseases which afflict the human race, and with them at hand they may be said to have a physician always at their call.

THE works of public utility, costing Rs. 200 and upwards, constructed by private individuals in the several districts of Bengal during 1888 are thus shown in the Gazette :—

Public buildings (9 in number) ...	Rs. 58,050
Roads (4) ...	" 1,450
Bridges (11) ...	" 12,653
Embankments or bunds (8) ...	" 2,578

Wells (106) ...	" 30,336
Miscellaneous (39) ...	" 1,681
Petty works ...	" 74,749

Rs. 3,95,240

In 1886, the total amount was Rs. 3,26,323, in 1887 it fell to Rs. 2,56,530.

WE give below the principal Resolutions or portions of them passed at the Fifth Indian National Congress held at Bombay. It thus propounds its theory of the expansion of the Legislative Councils :—

II.—That the following skeleton scheme for the reform and re-constitution of the Council of the Governor-General for making Laws and Regulations, and the Provincial Legislative Councils, is adopted, and that the President of this Congress do submit the same to Charles Bradlaugh, Esq., M.P., with the respectful request of this Congress that he may be pleased to cause a Bill to be drafted on the lines indicated in this skeleton scheme and introduce the same in the British House of Commons :—

SCHEME.

(1) The Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils to consist respectively of Members not less than one half of whom are to be elected, not more than one-fourth to sit ex-officio and the rest to be nominated by Government.

(2) Revenue districts to constitute ordinarily territorial units, for electoral purposes.

(3) All male British subjects above 21 years of age possessing certain qualifications and not subject to certain disqualifications (both of which will be settled later) to be voters.

(4) Voters in each district to elect representatives to one or more electoral bodies, according to local circumstances, at the rate of 12 per million of the total population of the district, such representatives to possess certain qualifications and not to be subject to certain disqualifications, both of which will be settled later.

(5) All the representatives thus elected by all the districts included in the jurisdiction of each electoral body, to elect members to the Imperial Legislature at the rate of 1 per every five millions of the total population of the electoral jurisdiction, and to their own Provincial Legislature at the rate of 1 per million of the said total population, in such wise that whenever the Parsees, Christians, Mahomedans or Hindus are in a minority, the total number of Parsees, Christians, Mahomedans or Hindus, as the case may be, elected to the Provincial Legislature, shall not, so far as may be possible, bear a less proportion to the total number of members elected thereto, than the total number of Parsees, Christians, Hindus or Mahomedans, as the case may be, in such electoral jurisdiction, bears to its total population. Members of both legislatures to possess certain qualifications and not to be subject to certain disqualifications both of which will be settled later.

(6) All elections to be by ballot.

The outcome of the Public Service Commission is distasteful to our Patriots. Before the Commission they insisted on a visit to England as a necessary qualification for the Public Service. They now think differently.

V.—That this Congress, while thanking Her Majesty's Government for raising the age for the Indian Civil Service Competitive Examination from 19 to 23, does hereby put on record an emphatic expression of the universal disappointment which has been created by the rest of the Government's orders in regard to the Public Service Question, (the net result of which orders is to place the people of India in a worse position than they previously held), and reiterates the national conviction that no real justice will be done to India, in this matter, until the simultaneous holding in India, and in England, of all Examinations, for all Civil branches of the Public Service in India, at present held only in England, be conceded.

The Congress feels the indignity of the Arms Act but is not prepared to recommend its repeal. They won't disturb the law but would moderate the rules under it and apply them equally to the exempt and the unexempt.

VI.—That in view of the loyalty of the people, the hardships that the Arms Act, (XI. of 1878), as at present administered, entails, and the unmerited slur which it casts, upon them, the Government be moved so to modify the rules made under this Act that all restrictions as to the possession and bearing of arms shall apply equally, to all persons residing in or visiting India; that licenses to possess and bear arms shall be liberally and generally distributed wherever wild animals habitually destroy human life, cattle or crops, and that these and all licenses issued under the rules shall be granted once for all, shall operate throughout the Provincial jurisdiction within which they are issued, be only revocable on proof of misuse, and shall not require yearly or half-yearly renewals.

The wisdom of the Assembled Provinces has declared for a Permanent Settlement in all the Provinces.

VII.—That the Government be urged to take the subject of a Permanent Settlement once more under consideration in view to practical action thereon, such that fixity and permanency may be given to the Government Land Revenue demand without further delay, at any rate in all fully populated and well cultivated tracts of country.

The future rulers of the country are not unmindful of the present sufferings of their European brethren.

VIII.—That in view of the fall that has already occurred in the price of silver and in the exchange value of the Indian Rupee, it is impolitic on the part of the British Government to maintain any hinderances whatever to the consumption of silver for manufacturing purposes; and that this Congress strongly urges upon Her Majesty's Government that, not only as an act of justice to India (a matter which has been repeatedly brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Ministers), but also as an act of expediency in the interests of Her Majesty's British as well as Indian subjects, the plate duties should be immediately abolished, and Hall marking be made a voluntary institution.

The Congress appeals to the British House of Commons for a better hearing of Indian grievances.

IX.—That this Congress respectfully expresses the earnest hope that, in the interest of the people of India, the House of Commons will forthwith restore the right, formerly possessed by members of that Honourable House, of stating to Parliament any matter of grievance of the natives of India, before Mr. Speaker leaves the Chair, for the presentation in Committee of the Indian Budget statement, and earnestly trusts that the House of Commons will, in future, take into consideration the Annual Indian Budget statement at such a date as will ensure its full and adequate discussion, and further authorizes the President, Sir William Wedderburn, Bart., to sign a Petition in the name and on behalf of this Congress for presentation to the House of Commons in accordance with the terms of this Resolution.

THE year's additions to the Fellows of the Calcutta University are—the Honourable J. F. Norris, Q. C., the Venerable Archdeacon Mitchell, the Reverend H. Whitehead, M. A., Maharaja Sir Narendra Krishna, K.C.I.E., Moulavi Ashraf-ud-din Ahmad, Babus Shyama Charan Ganguli, B. A., and Bepin Behari Gupta, M.A.

RAJA Baikunthanath De Bahadr of Balasore is to the fore again. Although the Prince Albert Victor does not visit Orissa, Balasore, in public meeting assembled under the direction of the Raja, has Resolved to mark the advent by an iron bridge over the Salandi. The cost is estimated at Rs. 7,000. There is a sum of Rs. 3,700 available being the unexpended balance of the famine collections. The Raja's family contributes Rs. 1,000. The remaining Rs. 2,300 is expected to be made up by other local Zemindars.

RAJA Govind Lal Roy, of Rungpore, has assumed the next higher title, by the present expenditure of Rs. 500 and a prospective one of Rs. 100 a year. The Indian Daily News thus announces some gifts to the District Charitable Society:—

"Maharajah Gobind Lal Roy, of Rungpore, has made a donation of Rs. 500 to this Society, and has, in addition, subscribed Rs. 100 annually to its funds. We are also glad to be able to announce that Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore Bahadoor, K.C.S.I., has made a donation of Rs. 500, and His Highness the Maharajah of Dhurbhungah a donation of Rs. 250."

THEY have adopted the Railway in China. The North China Daily News of September 23, 1889, publishes the following translation of an Imperial decree:—

"The Admiralty has submitted a memorial on railways, in which it recommends that the suggestion of (the Viceroy) Chang Chi-tung to build a line direct from Lu-Kow Kiao to Hunkow should be carried out. This, the Admiralty is of opinion, should be commenced from both ends as a tentative measure, in the south, from Hankow to Singan Chow, in the north, from Lu-kow Kiao to Chengting Fu, leaving the intervening sections for a future period. Li Hungchang will consult with the Admiralty on the details of the necessary arrangements to be made with a view of at once giving effect to the scheme proposed. Chow Fu, Provincial Judge of Chihli, and the Taot'ai Pu Chün-teh, are selected, from their experience in railway affairs, to superintend the carrying out of the preliminary steps.

The Sovereign is of opinion that, to make a country powerful, railways are essential, but recognising the fact that at the outset the people will have doubts and suspicions, orders the Viceroys and Governors of Chihli, Hupeh and Honan to issue explanatory proclamations to them exhorting and commanding them to throw no impediment in the way. It is the Imperial desire that all shall work together to make this great work a success."

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE Nyassaland dispute between Portugal and England has been attended with no small excitement at Lisbon. Serious riots took place, excited crowds thronging the streets, smashing the windows of the Cabinet Ministers, and of the British Consulate where the mob also tore down the British Consular Escutcheon. Strong dissatisfaction of the action of the Portuguese Cabinet prevails, and the Cabinet has resigned. Portugal in her reply to Lord Salisbury's ultimatum declares that she only yields to superior might, while at the same time she reserves her rights in the debated territory. A new Cabinet has been formed. Further demonstrations are reported to have taken place. A crowd of students passed in procession and veiled the statues of Vasco De Gama and Albuquerque as a sign of mourning. Cries of "Down with the English Pirates" were raised by the mob. The action of England towards Portugal is criticised with strong disapproval by the Spanish and French press. With the exception of the semi-official organs, the Berlin Liberal Press also attacks the conduct of the English Government. The new Portuguese Premier, Senhor Pimental, speaking in the Cortes, said that Portugal had right on her side while England had might, and that Government would uphold the rights and honor of the country and protect its interests as far as possible. The Government, at the same time, is actively engaged in repressing the anti-English demonstrations.

EARLY in the week came an English telegram reporting the more or less abatement of the influenza in St. Petersburg, Paris and London. The epidemic, however, had increased to such an alarming extent in the Thames Valley, that the doctors in the Brentford district declared their inability to cope with the enormous number of cases. Subsequent news announced the ravages the epidemic was making in high places. Earl Cairns died of pneumonia following influenza. On the 14th January, Lord Napier of Magdalla was reported to have got a severe attack, to be followed the next day with the stunning intelligence of his death. The Marshal's baton will, it is said, be offered to Sir Donald Stewart. Lord Hartington had a serious attack, both lungs being affected, but he has since been reported to be better. Other English notabilities were reported to be suffering. The deaths of Mr. Warren Streeter, and Professor Dollinger are also announced, it is not said, whether from the raging epidemic. Princess Maud of Wales had the influenza.

WE grieve to hear of the death, at Cannes, of Sir Michael Westropp formerly Chief Justice of Bombay. The High Court of Bombay was closed on the afternoon of the 15th instant as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, when Sir Charles Sargent said that Sir Michael Westropp's judgments were a storehouse of legal learning on almost every subject, and those especially on Hindu law would keep his memory alive, not only in Bombay, but in all the Courts of India. Mr. Justice Birdwood also addressed the bar, saying that Sir Michael's name would always be held in honor in that place where he had been Judge for 19 years, for 12 years of which he had presided as Chief Justice.

A ST. PETERSBURG telegram reports the dismissal of General Ali-khanoff from the command of the Merve District pending enquiry into strong complaints of cruelty brought against him by the Natives. The Russian Budget shows a good surplus, without any fresh taxation. The Czar desires thus to emphasize his resolve to maintain an honorable peace and to develop the resources of the country.

THE Emperor William, in his speech to the Prussian Diet said that, the foreign relations of Germany were everywhere good, while at the same time insisting on the necessity of maintaining her defences at the highest standard of efficiency.

MR. Stanley has arrived at Cairo and had an official reception. The Khedive has conferred on him the Order of Osmanli, and also decorated others of his party. Emin Pasha had a relapse.

SIR John Pope Hennessy is a Liberal candidate for West Waterford.

COLONEL Malleson has been fined £1,000, being damages awarded by the jury in the Sheriff's Court to Mr. Herbert Gladstone for being defamed by that correspondent of the Allahabad Morning Post.

ANOTHER prosecution, and this in connection with the sensational Cleveland Street Scandal, has gone against the defendant. Mr. Earnest Parke has been found guilty of libelling Lord Euston and sentenced to one year's imprisonment. In awarding sentence, Mr. Justice Hawkins called it an atrocious and unjustifiable libel and hoped the sentence would have a deterrent effect on others.

TWO foreign companies have applied to Russia to work the silver and lead deposits in Turkestan.

AT Santiago, for better clothing of the poor, the Chamber of Commerce of Deputies is considering a Bill for reduction of duties on cotton goods—bleached and unbleached.

THE Hon. Honore Mercier, Premier of Quebec, has published a handbook of that province, which can be had for the asking. From this publication it appears that the 60,000 French of 1760 have in 128 years swelled to over one million and quarter.

THE Germans are multiplying in Spain. They have thriving colonies in Madrid and the great ports. Travelling clerks are to be seen everywhere. They are unrivalled for their activity, and being good linguists are irresistible. German capital has invaded all kinds of Spanish mining, industrial, railway and insurance enterprises. Recently a German bank and a German Electric Light Company have been established in the Spanish capital.

MUCH as the moderns have progressed in the arts and conveniences of life, they yet lag behind the ancients in the arts of government, as in the Fine Arts of Poetry, Painting, Sculpture and Architecture. The Romans who conquered the world were specially great in the practice of empire. Some of the incidental traces of their progress discoverable in their records are very interesting. Thus, we find in the younger Pliny's correspondence the first idea of a Fire Brigade. The following letters are translated in the Earl of Orrery's version published in 2 vols. 4to in 1751. But we adopt a more accurate rendering which we found lately in a Liverpool Insurance journal:—

Pliny to the Emperor Trajan.

"While I was visiting another part of my province, a great conflagration—vastissimum incendium—at Nicomedia consumed many private houses and two public buildings, the town hall and the temple of Isis, although these latter were on opposite sides of the road. The fire, moreover, spread widely, first, on account of the violence of the wind, and next by the apathy of the populace, for it is beyond doubt that they stood idle and immovable spectators of this great calamity. Besides this there was nowhere to be found for the public service, any siphon (id est pipe; nullus siphon) or water-buckets, in short, there were no appliances whatever for extinguishing fire. These things, however, as I have already commanded, shall be provided. Do thou, O prince, consider whether thou dost think it meet that a body of firemen (fabrorum) should be established, consisting simply of one hundred and fifty men. I will take care that no one except workmen shall be enrolled, nor, if established, shall the association be used for any other purpose. It will not be difficult to watch over so small a number."

The Emperor Trajan to Pliny.

"It has occurred to you, that following the example of many other places, we may be able to establish an association of workmen at Nicomedia. But let us remember how that province and those very cities have been troubled by associations of this kind. Whatever name we may give to them and from whatever cause, those who are enrolled therein will speedily become heteriae. Better, therefore, it is to provide those things which may be helpful towards suppressing fires, and to give warning to the owners of property to render service themselves, and, if the emergency should demand, to employ the assembled populace for this purpose."

The reply of the Emperor shows that the old Romans had to contend with the same forces of democratic unrest and demagogic intrigue that embarrass modern States. The imperial caution might be worth pondering by British statesmen.

THE Prince arrived at Benares on the afternoon of the 14th and was received by Sir Auckland Colvin and the Maharaja of Benares. In the evening, there was a State dinner, followed by a reception. The reception was well attended by Europeans and Natives, including the Maharajas of Benares and Hutwa, and several of the principal persons present were introduced to his Royal Highness. On the next morning, the bathing ghats and the Golden Temple were visited, his Royal Highness seeing the ghats by going up and down in a boat in the river. At noon was laid the Foundation Stone of the much debated Benares water works. The ceremony took place under a huge pavilion erected for the purpose, and all the arrangements and decorations are reported to have been admirable. Mr. White read an account of the scheme for the sanitation of this ancient city. The cost is, for the present, estimated at forty lacs of rupees, of which 24 lacs will be spent on the water-works, and the remainder on a system of underground sewers, connected with the water-pipes for flushing purposes. The largest of the subscriptions received for these objects were Rs. 62,000 from the Maharaja of Benares, Rs. 25,000 from the Maharaja of Hutwa, and Rs. 50,000 from the late Dewan Ramchand of Punjab. The successful execution of the project will largely depend on the assistance of Government. His Royal Highness then performed the ceremony, after which the royal party left for Shikargunge, where they spent a day in shooting, as guests of the Maharaja of Benares. There was a splendid exhibition of Benares manufactures in the Town Hall, of which the Prince had a private view.

His Royal Highness is due at Lucknow to-day, whither Sir Auckland Colvin has proceeded before him for his reception. The City of Roses will of course be splendidly decorated.

THE Government of Bengal has sanctioned a grant of Rs. 17,000 to the District Charitable Society for better accommodation or location of its Lepers.

THE Irrecoverable Government Loan during the next financial year in Bengal, has been estimated at Rs. 25,000.

THE next year's Bengal Budget provides Rs. 96,500 for charitable purposes, Rs. 25,000 for periodicals, and Rs. 20,000 for Special Commissions of Enquiry.

BABOO Annodaprasad Banerjee retires from the Senior Government Pleadership. Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee succeeds him. The appointment carries with it a salary of Rs. 3,00, fees about Rs. 300 and a number of calls for explanation every month.

ANGLICIZATION is the rage of the hour. The Natives have begun to be shy of their own dress and food, their manners and titles. The European dressmakers are largely patronized. Native shops of shirts, collars and coats are multiplying. Native tailoring, however, is at a discount. The market is overstocked with Europe goods for native wear. The stiff bow is replacing the low saham. In a word, the craze is to affect the European down to the smallest minutiae. The Native Civilian, Covenanted or Statutory, is either "Mr." or "Esquire." He must be Gazetted so. All honor, therefore, to Kumar Girindra Narain Deb that he prefers to be addressed as "Kumar" instead of as "Esquire." The Lieutenant-Governor has acceded to his request and has ordered accordingly. That order applies equally to other titled Statutory Civilians who may wish to stick to Native honor and dignity.

LAST year, three Sepoys in the British Military and Police services were traced as deserters from one of the regiments of Jhind Infantry. Under the old rules, we believe, they would have been surrendered. But the Government of India makes a departure and has ordered that deserters from the army of a Native State, who may be by mistake enlisted in the British service, should, on discovery, be dismissed, but not surrendered to the Durbar, unless they have deserted from the State's foreign service corps.

THE Government of India in the Military Department has ruled that applications for replacement of medals lost by pensioners, ex-soldiers not being pensioners, and others not serving in departments, shall henceforth be investigated by civil and political officers and not by pension paymasters as heretofore. When satisfied as to the circumstances attending the loss, the investigating officer shall refer to the officer commanding the regiment to which the claimant belongs or, in cases of men whose regiments have been disbanded, to the Comptroller of Military Accounts concerned. He must at the same time certify that the loss was accidental and not culpable. Of course, the applicant must pay for the decoration.

THE first Convocation of the Allahabad University was held on the 14th January under the presidency of Sir John Edge, the Vice-Chancellor, who delivered a long and interesting address. The Calcutta University Convocation took place to-day. Lord Lansdowne, the Chancellor, was present. Dr. Gurudas Banerjee, the first Native Vice-Chancellor, gave an address which took one hour in its delivery. An important announcement was made at the convocation, namely, that M. A.'s of the University should in future have the privilege of nominating two Fellows, when vacancies occurred. After the ceremony, the Viceroy drove to his Barrackpore Park.

CAPTAIN Hearsey has been subpoenaed as a witness for the defence in his prosecution of Mr. G. W. Allen of the Pioneer. Mr. Allen has been excused personal attendance. Mr. Rose, attorney for Captain Hearsey, had applied for subpoenas on some of the officers of the Pioneer staff, but Mr. Marsden would not grant the application, as he considered it very unreasonable to have the whole establishment to appear on one day, and thus practically to stop the issue of the paper. His worship suggested that Mr. Rose should consult the attorneys on the other side, and arrange to have the witnesses present on separate days, wishing it, at the same time, to be understood that his refusal to grant the present application was without any prejudice to any subsequent application which Mr. Rose might make for the attendance of witnesses. Subpoenas have, however, been issued on Mr. Chesney and Mr. Hensman, the former being required to produce the original manuscript of the defamatory article complained of, which is said to be in Mr. Allen's handwriting. The case has been fixed for next Wednesday.

THE inauguration of the Baranagar Victoria School building took place with some clat last week. Sir Alfred Croft was to have presided at the ceremony, but owing to indisposition, he could not attend, and Mr. Justice Norris was kind enough at a very short notice to consent to go all the way out of Calcutta for performing the function. On arrival, Mr. Norris was received by the Patrons and Committee of the School with exuberant marks of honor. The way up from the school gate to the top of the stairs on the first floor where the ceremony was held was covered with scarlet cloth and carpet, while a sort of guard of honor was formed of the up-country peons in the service of Kumar Daulat Chunder Roy. The school-building was decorated with copious garlands of flowers and the inevitable bunting, and altogether presented a beautiful and animated sight. A large number of gentlemen, belonging to the town and its vicinity, had assembled to witness the ceremony. On being invited to the chair, Mr. Norris formally declared the building open, and then addressed the audience on a variety of topics of educational and general interest. We may take another opportunity of noticing the address. We have now just space enough to congratulate the School Committee, and especially their indefatigable Assistant Secretary, Babu Atul Krishna Bose, in their having at last secured a house of its own for their institution. The liberal interest taken in the wellbeing of the school by its Patrons, Kumar Daulat Chunder Roy, Babu Kiran Chunder Roy, and Rai Jotendranath Chaudhuri also deserves recognition. After the opening of the building, there was distribution of Prizes to the students, the prizes this year being of more than the usual character. There was a goodly number of silver medals, one silver watch, and a good number of standard books, the books with one of the medals being wholly awarded by Kumar Daulat Chunder.

THERE are now no less than twenty enactments to prevent cruelty to animals. At the last sitting of the Supreme Council, the Home Member Mr. Hutchins introduced a law for the same purpose which shall apply to the whole of British India, and be easily worked. It has been proposed to make it a punishable offence to "cruelly and unnecessarily beat, overdrive, overload or otherwise ill-treat any animal; or to bind or carry any animal in such a manner or position as to subject the animal to unnecessary pain or suffering; or to offer, expose, or have in ones possession, for sale any live animal which is suffering pain by reason of mutilation, starvation or other ill-treatment, or any dead animal which has been killed in an unnecessarily cruel manner;" or to kill any animal in an unnecessarily cruel manner; or to work a diseased animal. The prohibition applies to birds as well.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1890.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

THE last day of the Congress was a busy and important one. There was a great deal of business to go through, and the meeting was therefore held earlier than usual. The speakers were well-known men like Mr. Chandravarkar, Babu Kali Charan Banerjee, Mr. G. Subramania Iyer, Mr. Dinshaw Edulji Wacha, Mr. Javerilal Umiashankar, Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Professor Adam, Rev. Corban, and a few others. The resolutions were likewise of great importance, being, indeed, those which have been affirmed and reaffirmed at previous sittings of the Congress, and on which Indian public opinion might be said to have attained a remarkable degree of unanimity.

The subjects of these resolutions, having already received the fullest consideration from the Congress at its past meetings, it was rightly thought unnecessary to present them separately. They were included in one resolution, called the "omnibus" resolution, and Babu Kali Charan Banerjee, who was entrusted with it, moved it in a speech characterised by his usual charming fluency. The terms of the omnibus resolution were:—

"That this present Congress does hereby ratify and confirm the resolutions passed by previous Congresses as to (1) the urgent necessity for a complete separation of executive and judicial functions, such that, in no case, shall the two functions be combined in the same officer; (2) the expediency of extending into many parts of the country, where it is not at present in force, the system of trial by jury; (3) the necessity of withdrawing from the High Courts, the powers, first vested in them in 1872, of setting aside verdicts of acquittal by juries; (4) the necessity of introducing, into the Code of Criminal Procedure, a provision enabling accused persons, in warrant cases, to demand that instead of being tried by the magistrate, they be committed to the Court of Sessions; (5) the highly unsatisfactory character of the existing system of police administration in India, and the absolute necessity of a fundamental reform therein; (6) the expediency of both, establishing military colleges in India,—whereat the Natives of India, as defined by statute, may be educated and trained for a military career as officers of the Indian Army, and of authorizing, under such rules and restrictions as may seem necessary, such a system of volunteering for the Indian inhabitants of the country, as may qualify them to support the Government in any crisis; (7) the extremely unsatisfactory character of the Income-tax administration, especially as regards incomes below Rs. 1,000, and the expediency of raising the taxable minimum to this amount; (8) the extreme importance of increasing, instead of diminishing, as the present tendency appears to be, the public expenditure on education in all its branches, and the necessity, in view of the promotion of one of the most essential of these branches, the technical, of the appointment of a mixed commission to inquire into the present industrial condition of the country; (9) the impolicy and injustice involved in the late increase of the salt tax in a time of profound peace, and the urgent necessity for an immediate reduction of this tax, and the re-imposition, to balance the deficit thus caused, of light ad valorem import duties; and (10) the necessity for the reduction of, instead of the continual increase to, the military expenditure of the country."

Mr. Chandravarkar seconded the resolution in an able speech. It comprised, he said, two classes of subjects. The first class was one on which official opinion had pronounced itself in favor of the demands of the Congress. The necessity of separating judicial and executive functions, and of reforming the police had been acknowledged by the highest official authorities. As regards the Military College, no less a personage than the Duke of Connaught was in favor of it, and as to volunteering, the Hon'ble Justice Bayley, himself in command of one of the Volunteer Corps in Bombay, said that natives ought to be admitted. In regard to these questions, therefore, the present session of the Congress had merely to confirm what had been already discussed over and over again. The second class of subjects consisted of those, of which officials had not spoken with the same approval, but neither were they able to deny the facts upon which the Congress relied in supporting them, or to meet their arguments with anything like cogency. If these reforms became an accomplished fact, they would secure the blessings of justice and education on which, in his opinion, rest the highest claims of Englishmen to the government of their country.

The acknowledgments of the Congress for the services done to the cause of excise reform by Messrs. Caine and Smith in the House of Commons were formally recorded. The next resolution was a most important one, and related to Lord Cross's decision on the great question of the Public Service. It was moved by Mr. Salim Radaswamy in terms which will be found elsewhere.

It was seconded by Mr. Gokhale who said that the Government having promised in 1858 that there should be no distinction of race, creed and colour in recruiting for the public service, all that they now asked was that the Government should stick to its engagements, and nothing more. Mr. Adam in supporting the resolution spoke with great liberality like a true friend of the people. He said:—

"In this question the great point was the holding of simultaneous examinations in England and in India. If they got that, they got everything; and all their talk of reserved appointment, and statutory service, &c., would disappear. Once they got on an equal footing with the other candidates for employment, their future would lie in their own hands. There was nothing that made him so angry as when he heard people say, in a sneering way, that the Indians only went in for education so as to secure Government employment. Of course they should wish to get into that service. If the service was the 'blue ribbon' of the public schools in England, why should it not be so here?"

The next resolution was moved in a telling speech by Mr. Adam. It related to the Arms Act and like the preceding resolutions, it was carried unanimously.

At this stage a Hindu delegate is reported to have proposed three cheers to the Mahomedans, to which a Mahomedan delegate, not to be outdone perhaps, replied by proposing three cheers for the Hindus. We do not know what to say of this expression of good-will between two sections of the people whose jealousies and dissensions are a constant source of anxiety to us all, but whatever its reality, any small indication of growing good feeling between them deserves to be welcomed and encouraged.

An important resolution was moved by Babu Baikunthanath Sen for extending the Permanent Settlement.

It was forcibly seconded and unanimously carried. The next motion related to the abolition of the English silver plate duties, and met with the same general support.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee moved a resolution with the object of securing more efficient control of Indian affairs by the House of Commons. The resolution will be found in another column. Mr. Bonnerjee spoke with force and ability in support of the motion which was carried unanimously.

The next business was to record a resolution expressing the high sense, entertained, not only in the Bombay Presidency, but throughout India, of the ability, integrity and impartiality that had characterised the administration of Lord Reay, Governor of Bombay. To Lord Reay was accorded the same high place of honor in the roll of Indian administrators as is assigned by history as by common consent to Mountstuart Elphinstone, and it was observed that in all matters, a high sense of duty, unswerving rectitude of purpose, and a clear perception of England's high mission in India had characterised Lord Reay's wise, sympathetic, sagacious, and beneficent rule. The motion was most warmly received, and carried with acclamation.

The remaining resolutions related to the future constitution of the Congress and a most encouraging feature that marked the close of the fifth sessions of the National Congress was the contribution of sums ranging from Rs. 10 to Rs. 5,000 made towards the Congress Fund, offers of which kept pouring in in rapid succession. These were announced amidst the greatest excitement and enthusiasm. Cheers were then given to the chief functionaries of the Congress, after which Mr. Hume announced that the Sixth National Congress would be held on 26th December 1890 in some city in Bengal, afterwards to be announced. The Congress then dissolved amid renewed cheers for the Queen-Empress, Sir William Wedderburn, Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Hume.

CARRIER-PIGEONS.

PIGEONCOTS—that is, doves for pigeons—are now maintained by the great military Powers on the Continent in all the chief fortresses. These ornithological warriors are rara avis to be sure, and, besides, rather unmanageable. They will fly only in one direction as a rule, though a few have been trained to return to their starting place. The supply is limited, and when these carriers have all been despatched on their errands, your quiver is exhausted, as it were; unless and until you can bring them back by balloon or otherwise, your intelligence branch is crippled. It was in the Franco-German war that this ornithological intelligence service came into vogue in our times. The necessity of the French besieged in their own cities and forts, we believe, specially suggested a recourse to this mode of communication. The practice since became general and was adopted by other nations. At present, it is a recognised military provision. In 1886, France had 20 stations for training and maintaining pigeon-cots. Russia at the end of 1887 had 5. Italy in 1888 had 14, including 2 stations in Massowah and Assab. Austria alone has not yet any regular establishment, but she is encouraging private enterprise.

A German journal, quoted in the Army and Navy Gazette, writes:—

"It would be a great mistake to imagine that the faculty of the carrier-pigeon to find its way back to its home from a long distance was only discovered during the 'great war.' Even the ancients knew of it, and knew well how to make use of it. Thus in ancient Egypt there existed a well-organised service of carrier-pigeons, and pigeon stations were specially built all over Syria and Egypt. Thus the Crusaders found in the eleventh century, during the siege of Jerusalem, a well-organised service of carrier-pigeons in that city."

We do not remember any reference to the pigeon service in war in the Mahabharata or the Ramayana, but Garuda and Jatayu seem to us to be myths of such a use of birds in war. Mediæval Indian traditions, however, abound in accounts of the notable part played in war by the feathered tribe. That part was limited—limited indeed to one office—but it was an important, all-important part. It was in fact a rude use that was made of the bird of peace and love, and grievously did our ancestors rue for the rudeness.

The pigeon was employed as a messenger to be sure, but not exactly after the European manner. Though utilised in war, it was not used for war. The bird of peace had no mission of peace—far, very far from it. It was a bloody, if non-military, business on which it was wont to be sent. It was not taught to talk like a parrot and repeat sounds at a distance. It was not even trained to carry letters, as in European armies. The old Hindus relied on the instinct of the bird to fly when it gets a chance. That habit was utilised for drawing a symbol. The flight of the pigeon home back from the field was fixed as the sign of decisive defeat. The return of the bird was equivalent to despatch home from the midst of battle to the effect—"All is lost. As for Honour, it is in your hands. Do now save it as befits Kshattriya dames and damoiselles, without flinch or wince!" On receipt of this errand—or sign—they set fire to the pile of well-oiled logs ready for them and throw themselves into the flame, and soon the whole womankind of the unfortunate king, old and young, from decrepit dowager to the baby on the breast, aye, the infant just dropped into the world, are consumed to ashes. Such were the olden times. And such was Aryan chivalry—not in the pratings of inventive minnesingers, but as matter of fact. A chivalry gone for ever before the advance of the Schoolmaster and the Reformer, the Publicist and the Politician!

It is possible, that the suggestion was improved for purposes of organization in war. At the least, generals in the field might well use pigeons as a simple call for reinforcements from the base. It is of kings, and Hindu kings were ex-officio commanders of their forces, that we read or hear. It was usual for them to conceal a pigeon or two in their breast, well-secured within the folds of their robes. They fought desperately. If the chances of battle went against them, they did not survive the defeat, but before the close of the day they rushed headlong against, and into the thick, of the enemy, trampling and spearing and cutting them, till themselves overpowered and cut down. Such, we repeat, were Hindus of old! Such was Kshattriya kingdom! But the Age of Gold and Silver is gone—that of Lead and Brass is come. And the glory of India is extinguished for ever!

Before the final onset of despair, the king freed the prisoners of his bosom and saw them take advantage of their liberty by a straight flight across the blue Heavens, homewards, unconscious—poor things!—of the havoc on the fairest and dearest and the most innocent their wings waft to their very sight. It was a savage massacre at the best. At times, it might be a far more appalling horror—a tragedy without a name. For the arrangement obviously was not of the most careful kind. There was room for contretemps, and miscarriages did occur. If king and bird together were suddenly killed in the midst of battle, there was the chance of his family falling a prey to the conqueror. But if the bird somehow slipped away, without the king losing the battle, then—what then? Why, then took place a bootless butchery, without even an equivalent according to the Kshattriya Code of Honour.

Such miscarriages were by no means rare. At any rate, the same disaster is reported as the doom of many principalities in different parts of India. It was thus that a dynasty was extinguished in Sindh. In Bengal, a family in Beerbhoom, another in Nuddea, a third in Dacca, and more than one in the Eastern parts, perished. Similar instances must occur in Northern, Central, and Southern India. It was thus, we believe, that this slippery messenger was discredited. Europe may well be warned by the experience of the hoary East.

THE PERSECUTED SUBORDINATE EXECUTIVE SERVICE.

TALK of the independence of the Judiciary? Listen to the story of petty persecution to which a native branch of the service is systematically subjected. It discloses a scandalous state of things which demands prompt remedy.

The difficulties of judicial officers (I mean Deputy Magistrates) have greatly increased, for more reasons than one, which, I am afraid, are neither known to Government nor the general public nor those so-called reformers who cry to have the Judicial and Executive separated. There are many native Magistrates whose lot is a peculiarly hard one from the numerous disadvantages and difficulties under which they have to perform their onerous duties. I don't think that in any country in the world the judges are so much interfered with and have so many masters to serve and please as in this country. They have several masters who, each and every one of them, have power to criticise their proceedings and find fault with their work. I give below a list of these masters:—

- The High Court.
- The District Judge.
- The District Magistrate.
- The Divisional Commissioner.
- The Joint Magistrate.
- The Inspector-General of Police.
- The District Superintendent of Police.
- The Assistant Superintendent of Police.
- The Inspector-General of Jails.

The High Court, the District Judge and the District Magistrate, in the capacity of appellate courts, are no doubt judicially superior to the subordinate Deputy Magistrate, whose decisions they can reverse, revise, modify and uphold. These functions are most impartially, judiciously and ably performed by those authorities, and there is little room for complaint against them. I believe the little independence which the native Magistrates have at present is entirely due to the protection which they receive from the District Judge and the High Court. The Magistrate of the District as an appellate court is more executive than judicial, and in his executive capacity he is generally inclined to override the independence of the native Magistrates. Some Magistrates think that their Deputies are bound to decide cases according to the light imparted to them by their chief. While there are those who only quietly watch the work of the inexperienced Magistrates and help them by their kind advice and long experience, and their suggestions and advice are always welcome. But I regret to say that the number of such officers is very small. It does not matter much again what the Magistrate does, acting on his own views and opinions, but the misfortune is far greater when he takes action against his Deputy Magistrate of say 20 years' standing on the whispers of a boy Assistant Police Superintendent who can hardly understand the law of evidence or the Criminal Code correctly and who has not been in the service for more than 4 or 5 years. The District Superintendent is practically allowed to review and criticise any decision of the poor unfortunate Deputy Magistrate and has the ear of the Magistrate which is worse. Following in the footsteps of his superior, the Assistant-Superintendent never spares the Deputy Magistrate and feels himself privileged to use any terms that he likes to bring him to his senses and make him feel his inferiority. In one case the warrant issued by the Deputy Magistrate to the Assistant Superintendent for searching the house of a rich man was not only returned unexecuted to that officer, but remarks were passed on the merits of the case and on the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate at random which were all most insulting. The District Magistrate being a very good man took notice of it, otherwise the matter would have been pushed up and the Deputy again reprimanded for representing the matter.

In another case, a Head Constable who investigated a culpable homicide case did not send up the only eye-witness. He was again directed by his superior the Inspector to send that eye-witness, and he again disobeyed that order. The Court summoned the witness and, after disposing of the case, brought the conduct of the Head Constable to the Magistrate's notice in the decision, but the Magistrate took no notice of it. The case went up to the Sessions and there the Judge remarked severely on the conduct of the Magistrate and compelled him to take action against the Head Constable which was done. The Magistrate disregarded the Deputy Magistrate's remarks because the Deputy was not in the good books of the District Superintendent of Police.

These examples will suffice to prove how matters stand at present. Each Police officer named above has the license to find fault with the Deputy Magistrate and make insulting remarks regarding him and his proceedings. If the Deputy Magistrate finds fault with any Police officer and the misconduct clearly appears from the evidence on record, even then in almost each case the District Superintendent is asked to inquire and report, which means a fresh opportunity to blame the Deputy and find a dozen mistakes in his proceedings. Every such enquiry shows that the Police officer is quite innocent and the Deputy is a fool who is careless and cannot understand the case. The Magistrate's order is "file" or "I agree with the Police Superintendent." In the matter of an Assistant Superintendent the troubles of the Deputy are multiplied. For the Assistant has his say and then the full Superintendent has his, the latter adding insult to injury.

The Deputies now know their position in regard to the Police and there are not more than 5 in one hundred who have the courage to notice the conduct of the Police. No one likes to invite insult and displeasure without any gain to himself as it is a known fact that in 95 cases he would never be successful.

The High Court rulings are a "great nuisance" and the lesser "nuisance" is the District Judge's opinion or ruling on any law point. If the Deputy Magistrate has such authorities on his side, he is never safe, because the Magistrate and the District Superintendent think otherwise and set those authorities at naught. The Deputy is placed on the two horns of a dilemma. How can he disobey law and order or knowingly invite the ire of the Magistrate and the Police for his own ruin? In submitting to the Police, he is safe, but in acting according to his conscience, he exposes himself to the criticism of the Police which is circulated for his mortification, discouragement and punishment among his brother officers who are asked to take note of the Magistrate's remarks for their instruction and guidance. After an accused person has been acquitted, the Magistrate has no right to interfere, but in such cases also, extra-judicial remarks are made and circulated. The High Court is scarcely moved to quash the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate. In some cases the District Superintendent takes the lead and expounds the law most elaborately with the assistance of his Assistant whose knowledge of law is not superior to his superior's. The Magistrate if he is of the Police-worshipping type writes another memo. censuring the Deputy which is circulated in some cases. Among the new class of Magistrates, the tendency of most of them is to favor the Police in the way above stated. If the District Superintendent is against the Deputy, he brings his faults in more than one way to the notice of the Magistrate, and the Deputy has no defence against such back-biting. The Inspector-General of Police completes what is left unfinished by his subordinates. He has full power to overhaul all records and to pass his own opinion on them and report the offending Deputy to Government.

The Inspector-General of Jails has his share too in reporting the Deputy, for better protection in his own province. Even the Superintendent of Jail comes down upon the Deputy and in each case, he is called upon to explain. I don't know how many explanations each Deputy Magistrate gives each year.

If there is a little delay in disposing of a Police case, explanation is at once called for, either on the whisper or suggestion of the Police or on other grounds. The Deputy Magistrate is now-a-days notoriously overworked in every place, particularly in Bengal. In addition to the Criminal, he has invariably most important Revenue work to do. Each time he is reprimanded, or called upon to explain, the Police virtually win a victory which they show by their demeanour and in other offending ways. Under the rules no witness should be detained for more than 3 days and in Police cases he should if possible be discharged on the same day. There are many other stringent conditions under which cases must be disposed of. Over and above all these conditions and difficulties, the bar is becoming more difficult, troublesome and exacting and the Barristers and pleaders take up a good portion of the Court's time unnecessarily but legally, and there is no remedy against this sort of encroachment upon the valuable public time.

No punishment will satisfy the District Superintendent or the Magistrate until the burglar or the thief is hanged or transported in each case. For this also the Deputy Magistrates are taken to task severely by the Magistrate. The good Commissioner Sahib or his Personal Assistant also sometimes takes pleasure in calling for explanation from the Magistrates for inadequate punishment, without the least idea of the case or caring for the High Court rulings. These people are in most cases as innocent of the High Court rulings as a carpenter of the art of bookbinding. If the Magistrate acquits more persons than he convicts, he must explain, no matter whether he acts rightly or wrongly. If you convict 2,000 persons in one month none would ask you what you have done. When your acquittals preponderate even by 2, then you are undone. To make the return acceptable to the higher authorities, what tricks do not the Magistrates play? Sometimes they give hints to the Police to send up nuisance cases or cases of similar nature. Sometimes other plans are thought of by weaker persons.

Now I ask you in the name of Justice and Fairplay, how many Deputy Magistrates have sufficient courage and independence of character to perform their duties properly and fearlessly under such conditions and circumstances?

They are after all human beings and come from different stages of society. Now can an amla Deputy Magistrate or a Bunnia Deputy Magistrate stand the "Dhamki" of the Magistrate and act against his advice or instructions in judicial matters, knowing full well that if he does not obey the Magistrate or submit to the District Superintendent, he is sure to be lowered in the estimation of the people or transferred to a bad District or reported badly in the General Administration Report? Every Deputy Magistrate knows the force and effect of a D. O. and the extent of harm which it can do.

In my time I had the honor of knowing most intimately many Deputy Magistrates, and I have still opportunities of meeting them frequently and hearing their sad tales. I think there are very few really conscientious officers who have peace of mind, or who are at all satisfied with their lot in the service. The facts which I have related are not known to the higher authorities and they cannot be brought to their notice officially or by any other channel. It is hoped that Government which always tries to do justice and which respects the independence of judicial officers will protect this class of unfortunate officers from uncalled for interference, annoyance and insult to which they are daily and hourly subjected.

GREECE.

The "Journal de la Chambre de Constantinople" in its issues of the 24th August and 14th September last, in reviewing a recent article from the pen of M. Adolphe Dekoninck, extracts the following passages on the subject of the economic movements in the Greek Kingdom :—

The continental portion, the peninsula and the numerous islands which constitute Greece proper, have an area of 64,689 square kilometres, and a population of 2,067,000 souls. This country, although twice as large, is only a third as populous as Belgium. The density of the population does not exceed 32 persons to the square kilometre. The Balkan peninsula, Russia, Sweden, and Norway, are the only European countries with a scantier population than that of the Hellenic kingdom. This inferiority is only temporary, for in no part of the continent, is the population higher than in Greece, in which the number of inhabitants increases annually by 12 per thousand.

What is wanted in Greece is the land. Thus the idea of draining the lakes and marshes and devoting to agriculture the portions of the plains occupied by the waters has been welcomed with enthusiasm.

The most important undertaking of this kind is the draining of the Copais lake, not far from the town of Thebes, which will shortly allow of the cultivation of nearly 25,000 hectares of land of wonderful fertility and the revenue from which is estimated at 10 millions francs. Colonists are wanted to work the new lands, and it appears that propositions from Swiss and Italian subjects have been already received.

Farming on a large scale is almost unknown. The extensive subdivision of the land is one of the most serious obstacles to the introduction of agriculture machinery, but it is hoped to popularise that latter in consequence of the scarcity of labour to work the drained lands.

Some properties are already administered in a particular manner, principally in Allica; but in the larger number of the farms, tools and implements of husbandry are in a more than primitive condition.

Greece, which should produce six times more wheat than it now supplies, is one of the European countries which yields the least. The average crop is only 1,700,000 hectolitres, or a little more than half of what is required for consumption. Wheat from the plain of Thebes and barley from Attica are well known. Rye and spelt of the stony districts are very fine, but the oats are only moderate. The cultivation of rice, practised on a large scale for some years in Thessaly, gives excellent results, as do the sowings of maize tried at Fubec and in Acarnania.

The climate is favorable for plantations of tobacco. The yield is generally very remunerative and produces about 6 million kilogrammes. This cultivation has extended to some extent since France, Belgium, England, and Egypt have taken to supplying themselves in Greece. Greek tobacco has a delicate perfume, it is light and is smoked principally in cigarettes; it is neither suitable for the pipe nor for the cigar.

The sugarcane, of which there are always plantations, was already known in the time of Alexander the Great. It is thought that the sugar beet will thrive very well in old bed of the Copais. The country is obliged to import, principally from France, a quantity of about 4,000,000 kilogrammes of sugar annually.

Fruits of every kind abound and offer, by their beauty and quality, all that is found in the most favourable climates of the globe. The fruit trees which flourish best are the orange, pomegranate, fig, almond, and apricot. The cultivation of the lemon tree, to which the soil and climate are, however, well adapted, has been neglected since Italy and Spain have almost monopolised the trade in lemons in all parts of the world. The fruit which is grown with the greatest success is the celebrated currant which constitutes the chief article of export from the kingdom. Foreign countries purchased it in 1888 to the value of 66 million francs.

Forestry produces about 8 million francs and will procure four or five times as much, says M. Bournouff, if an improved system of cultivation were practised.

The production of Valonia is very important, it is sought after by England and Italy, where it is used in dyeing and tanning.

The kingdom contains 108,000 horses.

The sheep number 3,465,000 or 167 per hundred inhabitants.

The wool of these sheep is white, very long, very coarse and often mixed with hairs and down.

Bees are numerous, and agriculture has largely developed. Greece is, moreover, a country which abounds in wild plants, the perfumed flowers of which give a honey of a peculiar aroma. The Kingdom produces annually 8,75,000 francs worth of honey, which has its chief market in Turkey. Greek wax is distinguished by its whiteness and beauty.

Maritime fauna abound. The sturgeon, salmon, mackerel, anchovy, tunny, and sword-fish which supplies a reddish and fine silk, is caught in the Ionian Sea. The Greeks devote themselves less to the capture of fish than to fishing for sponge and coral, which they practise with more skill than the Syrian divers, and for which they use more than 900 boats. They also apply themselves to the search for leeches.

Greece does not possess coal mine, but it contains lignite deposits at Marcopoulo, in Attica, and at Koumi, in Euboea. The lignite of Marcopoulo is of inferior quality; it does not contain more than 45 per cent. of pure carbon, while that of Koumi is equivalent to two-thirds of an equal weight in English coal.

Milo supplies sulphur, and Zante possesses springs of an excellent petroleum oil, which was utilised for public lighting by the ancient Greeks and Romans.

There is found, notably at Seriphos, magnetic iron which is one of the best kinds—that of slag, which is derived from the old mines of argentiferous lead of Laurium, the production of which is consumed to a large extent by Belgium.

The great wealth of the country in marbles of all colours, more precious even than those of Carrara, is only as yet but slightly developed. The marble of Paros, the most celebrated of all, well merits the excellent reputation it has always enjoyed. Its colour, more often of a white slightly tinged with yellow, imparts to statues which are made of it a beautiful effect, and when this tint is slightly shaded with a rose it resembles the color of human flesh. This marble has no equal for transparency; unfortunately it is frequently interspersed with sheets of mica which alter its homogeneity. The other well-known marbles are the white of Pentelie, of a finer grain than that of Paros, the red of Laconia, the speckled of Scyros, the black of Mantinea and Mount Hymette, and the famous green capitoline of Carystos. There also abound numerous varieties of serpentine stone, of different shades and qualities. Meerschaum, which is found near the Gulf of Corinth, enjoys a great reputation.

The dairy industry is very imperfect. The Greek cows give a bad butter, more or less rancid, incapable of withstanding the competition of Russian, English, and Scandinavian products, which are imported in large quantities. Cheeses, made with the milk of sheep and goats, are eaten by Europeans, but they suit the taste of the Orientals. Those of Mycane, in the Cyclades, are among the best.

Flour mills worked by water and wind number 1,200, whilst there are not 100 mills moved by steam. Rice-mills, factories of macaroni and other food pastes, have been established in several towns near the agricultural centres.

The distilling industries are represented by more than 200 establishments, producing annually 35 million litres of alcohol and 13 million litres of different liqueurs, of which the best known is the marasquin of Cephalonia.

Greece produces 1,800,000 hectolitres of wine, one-fourth of which is exported to Russia, Turkey, Egypt, Austria, France and England. Some wines have all the characteristics of the growths of Spain and Italy, while there are qualities of table wines which resemble Burgundy and Rhone wines. The best growths of the Greek peninsula are those of Corinth, famous for aroma and bouquet; those of Patras, esteemed for their extreme mildness; and those of Marathon, which are distinguished by their extreme delicacy, and which recall, by their general qualities, Sauterne and Barsac. The wine of Ithaca, Cephalonia, and Samos hold the first place in the Ionian Archipelago. Those of Santorin, Terios, Maxos, and other Cyclades, are always among the most approved in the Mediterranean. The vineyards Malvoisie have long ceased to exist. The name of the celebrated wine which they supplied is now applied to other growths.

Greece is the cradle of the manufacture of olive oil. The country produces annually five million kilogrammes of it, and if only necessary improvements in its manufacture were effected the production would be in a position to compete with the best of any other country. Already the Attica oil is very good, but almost all the oils which foreign countries purchase in Greece and which are not used in the soap works must be further refined in Europe before being put into consumption.

As regards Greek metallurgical industries the greater number of the machines used in the manufactures, and many of those working on board steamers have some years been constructed in the factories of the Piræus, Parnassida, Syra, Corinth, Nauplia, Corfu, or Zante. These factories have also succeeded in extending their trade in the neighbouring countries, and in the East.

The art of naval construction is much developed, and the vessels, whilst being excellently constructed, cost two-third less than French boats.

The perfume industry produces essences. That of the rose, the most valuable of all because of the sweetness of its perfume, is distilled principally in Thessaly, while the essence of lemon is prepared principally at Piræus.

The art of dyeing, so prominent in ancient Greece, has been preserved up to the present time. It is practised at Peræus, Laupa, Ambelakia, Syra, Corinth, Nauplia, Corfu and Zante.

Tanning is one of the oldest and most ancient in the country. Almost all the native cotton is used in the spinning mills. The latter chiefly supply the strong kinds, numbers 1 to 12, which have replaced English threads.

The manufacturers devote their energies to producing cheap tissues, which are superior, however, to the articles imported, and which are consumed in the country, and Anatolia, Peræus, which has been called the "Manchester of Greece" is the seat par excellence of the cotton industry, in which also participate Larissa, Turnavo, Ambelakia, Parnassida, Syra, Corinth, Nauplia, Patras, Corfu, and Zante.

The silk industry has taken a new development. It attracts buyers who admire the solidity, the finish and the fine indelible colours of its products. Spinning is carried on at Piræus according to the most recent processes, as well as at Calamata, Sparta, Nicli and Andros.

Weaving is carried on at Piræus, Calamata, Larissa, Syra, Hydra and Zante. The chief manufactures are transparent tissues, neckerchiefs, waistband, scarves and tissues of mixed silk and cotton.

Athens produces ready made clothing which leaves nothing to be desired as regards cut and finish. In the capital of the kingdom, there are also made good electric apparatus, guitars, mandolins, violins, and typographical articles which are not without merit.

Greece is an excellent outlet, not only because she is obliged to obtain from abroad the greater part of her articles of consumption and the raw materials necessary for her industry, but also because of the public works in course of execution or projected. Already the Germans have appreciated the importance of the Greek kingdom from a commercial point of view; they have recognised that the greatest obstacle which presents itself to the extension of Greek commerce is want of capital. In order to remedy this state of affairs, they have created a credit establishment which advances money on mortgage. They have also recognised, as well as the English and French, the importance of establishing in Greece branches of their banks.

The articles of import into Greece, for which competition is most keen are:—From England—steel, boilers, woollen blankets, sewing thread, iron in pigs, gloves, linseed, oil, machinery fixed, machine-tools, writing-paper, cotton tissues, and tissues of wool. From Germany—woollen blankets, faience, wrought, hammered and rolled iron, flannel, agricultural machinery, haberdashery, hardware, and printing-paper. From France—light stuff for women's dress, gloves, window glass, table glass, tools and procelains. From Austria-Hungary—cordage, cloths, glasses, packing paper, procelain and ready made clothing. From Italy—cloth, gloves, writing-paper and small wares. From Russia—cordage, &c.

MONGHYR.

Jamalpur, the 8th January, 1890.

Our New Year's festivities went off without the customary sports and races. On the contrary two river accidents marred the happiness of the advent. The steamer "Luckhee" (belonging to E. B. State Railway hired by the E. I. Railway Company for the time being while their own steamer "Bradford Leslie" was undergoing repairs at Monghyr), whilst plying between Sahebgunge and Muniharee on the 4th instant, in mid river, a few miles from the port, all of a sudden broke down, some of her machinery having given way.

Another steamer named "Margaret" belonging to the Company was forthwith engaged to carry passengers, &c. The latter whilst returning from Muniharee Ghat on the 5th instant with passengers and mail, got aground at the Ghat. Fortunately no injury was done to passengers. The Traffic Manager, his personal assistant, together with certain administrative staff numbering about 25 men have already removed to Calcutta. Another batch of 50 men is likely to go down by the 1st of next month.

Mrs. C. H. Denham, the Chief Engineer of the E. I. Railway, having retired, Mr. F. E. Robertson has taken charge of this line as Chief Engineer.

The Native breach of promise case alluded to in my last, although it went to court, has subsequently been compromised out of it. The tide of reduction in the E. I. Railway establishment has not subsided. Rumour has it that there will be a sweeping reduction yet. General Sir Strachey, the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the E. I. Railway Company, accompanied by Sir A. M. Rendel, Chief Consulting Engineer to the Board, is expected in this country shortly. Their object is to inspect the line and overhaul the system of accounts, as also to enquire personally into the matter of the proposed grand chord line to Calcutta from the N. W., which is now under survey.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large-languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

IT was at one time proposed to invite the Queen to Dublin next summer to open the Museum. The Dublin Corporation has since decided otherwise. The Nationalist Members were apprehensive that such an invitation might mean an abandonment of the Home Rule policy and acceptance of the detested Government. They seem to have been reminded of the Melody of the Dublin Nation :—

DOWN BRITANNIA.—BY EVA.

Down, Britannia !—brigand, down !
No more to rule with sceptred hand ;
Truth raises o'er thy throne at last
Her exorcising wand.
I see "the fingers on the wall"—
The proud, the thrice accursed, shall fall—
Down, Britannia, down !

Jubilate !—rings the cry
Exultingly from pole to pole,
With bended knee and glistening eye,
Glad shouts of triumph roll.
To power !—raise the song !
From sea to shore it sweeps along—
Down, Britannia, down !

For cold deceit through long, long years,
For iron rule with blood-stained sword,
For brave man's life and woman's tears,
For basely broken word,
There comes a loud terrific voice,
Bidding the long oppressed rejoice—
Down, Britannia, down !

The golden sands of Indian clime—
The China towers of old Pekin,
Have seen the desolating print
Of thy dark hoof of sin ;
And, ground and plundered to the death,
Their children cry, with latest breath,
Down, Britannia, down !

Still wailing at the Eternal Gate,
See myriad bloody spectres stand ;
They cry aloud, through night and day,
Against thy bloody hand,
For "Vengeance ! vengeance dark and dire !
O Lord of Glory, show thine ire !
Down with Britannia, down !"

Yes ! down—if Heaven will aid the brave ;
If life and strength have but this aim,
Accounting blood and toil as nought, • •
So trampled be thy name.

God grant to us the final blow,
Unto the dust to strike thee low.

Down, Britannia, down !

For this have heroes fought and bled ;
For this have pined in exile lone ;
For this the gallows bore its fruit,
And yet it has not won ;
But, oh ! 't is worth a struggle yet,
Though every hearth with blood were wet !
Down, Britannia, down !

When banded are the good and true,
We know at last the word is said ;
We march along the glorious way,
By heavenly teaching led.
Oh ! 't is at last the holy hour
For all to cry, with prophet power,
Down, Britannia, down !

THE Servian Government has authorized the Finance Minister to raise a five per cent. loan of 20 millions of francs at 75 per cent. It is intended by this loan to pay off the railway company and to indemnify the salt monopolists.

THE Russian Expedition to Thibet under Colonel Pevtsoff reached Keria at the end of September last. To avoid the intense summer heat, they proceeded from Yarkand into the mountains south-west of Kashgar. There they remained till the beginning of September. They were of course not idle. They made several zoological, botanical and geological excursions and then made for Khoten passing through Gouma. After a stay of five days in that city, the party proceeded to Keria. On the 16th October, the day following the date of his last letter, the head of the Expedition was to have left for the oasis of Nia. Leaving his surplus baggage there, he intended to examine the mountains on the north-west of Thibet for a practicable pass. Failing to discover the pass, he proposed to pass the winter at Cherchen, entering Thibet next spring by the course of the Cherchen river.

It has been pointed out that the Imperial charters of 1772 and 1789 recognised by the Czars Alexander, Nicholas I and Alexander II, secured to the Baltic Provinces and to Livonia their constitution and privileges. Even the present Czar in his manifesto of March 14, 1881 swore "religiously to respect the rights, privileges, and fundamental laws of his subjects in the Baltic Provinces including Livonia." But an Ukase of December 10 last makes the Russian language compulsory in the law Courts. Another prescribes the same language for municipalities in those Provinces. From the present month, it has been decreed that nothing but Russian is to be taught in the schools. This, it is contended, is a violation of the pledges repeatedly given, to the Baltic Provinces, and is but a development of the policy of warring against all the non-Muscovite elements of the Czar's empire. Germany cannot look on indifferently this Russifying process of the Baltic region. Such is the view taken by the Times' Vienna Correspondent.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

DURING his visit to Constantinople, the German Emperor is reported to have formed a favorable impression of the Turkish military forces. According to His Majesty, "the Turkish army was in an excellent state of organization, and well able to meet the military requirements of the empire. A war against Turkey would in future be a bold and difficult undertaking and any Power might well hesitate to expose itself to the risks of such a venture."

 read :—

"The wealth of the United States is increasing with fabulous strides. It has quadrupled since 1850, and doubled since 1870. In 1850 the assessed value of the Republic was 5,287,613,148 dols., and the actual wealth 13,652,499,739 dols. In 1889 the former had risen to a total of 23,719,000,000 dols., and the latter to 61,459,000,000 dols. There was a decrease in the decade ending 1870 as compared with the previous decade, due to the war. With this exception, the increase has gone on by leaps and bounds, which may well excite the envy of the States of the Old World. According to the New York World, 'the wealth of the United States now exceeds the total wealth of the whole world at any time previous to the middle of the eighteenth century, and the amount invested abroad is alone equal to the national wealth of Portugal and Denmark. The total wealth of only five nations is equal to the mere increase of the United States in the past nine years.'

A TREATY of Commerce has recently been concluded between Great Britain and Bulgaria.

"Art. 1 provides that British merchandise imported into Bulgaria shall be subjected to a Customs duty of 8 per cent. ad valorem, without prejudice to the most-favoured-nation treatment either as regards cost of transport or from any other point of view. Such merchandise shall also pay a duty of one-half per cent., as well as the communal taxes established by law in Bulgaria.

Art. 2 declares that spirits, tobacco, salt, gunpowder, and all other articles which, in conformity with the laws of the Principality, are subject to Excise duty, shall pay taxes fixed by special laws, in addition to the duties provided for in the previous article.

Art. 3 provides that Bulgarian agricultural and industrial products imported into the United Kingdom shall pay the same duties as similar products of nations enjoying the most-favoured-nation treatment.

Art. 4 states that the present agreement remains in force until Jan. 13, 1891; and if not repudiated by Oct. 13, 1890, by one of the contracting parties, it will hold good until Jan. 13, 1892."

The Novosti throws out the hint, that unless confirmed by the Porte, it is a violation of the suzerain rights of the Sultan affirmed by the Treaty of Berlin.

It has been detected by a Philadelphia physician—Dr. Mark Nardyz, that the so-called "kid" gloves are often times produced from human skin, and that tanning of human epidermis goes on largely in France and Switzerland. It is said that a man's back makes good sole leather. At one time there was such a trade in human skin in Massachusetts, but it was put down by General Ben Butler.

In Madras, they observe Her Majesty's Birthday as also that of the Prince of Wales. Why should they not add a third birthday to the list of public holidays—that of Prince Albert Victor of Wales? The more, the merrier, say the galley-slaves in the offices. What would the Bank of Bengal?

A CORRESPONDENT in the Madras Mail reports a strange birth at Valapallai :—

"A low caste woman gave birth to a child of preternatural appearance. The young visitant to the world had stripes (blue and black) all over the body and the neck. The hair was long and thick. The nails were roughly made and crooked. The face bore very close resemblance to a full-grown wild cat."

THE Telugu Harp reports that Mr. M. Kothandaram Pantulu, one of the leading pleaders of the District Court, was sued for a sum of money. He pleaded payment and argued his own case. From certain letters which the pleader had written, the Munsiff found that money was still due. Mr. Pantulu appealed to the District Judge, who too held him liable for the amount. This was too much for the pleader, and he preferred another appeal to the High Court. That Court not only upheld the decree of the two Courts below, but has called on the pleader to show cause why he should not be disbarred.

IN Madras, a gymnasium must be licensed. One Nainswamy Pillay has been fined Rs. 25 for keeping such a school without permission of the Police Commissioner.

AT Bombay, they order things differently. Last week, the Governor himself laid the foundation stone of the Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit Gymnastic Institution. In August of 1858, some citizens of Bombay started a sort of gymnastic institute for physical education of boys. At the end of three years, the Government was moved for and granted a free site on the Esplanade. That removed only one difficulty. They could not make it a free institution, and though it flourished as regards the number of boys, its capacity remained undeveloped for want of sufficient resources, as it had to depend on fitful donations. In course of time, the site granted by Government was required for a public purpose, and the gymnasium had to be removed to another site. It was then, three years ago, Sir Dinshaw came forward with his usual liberality, to give the institution a new life and a permanent habitation. The Government too made a generous grant. It secured to the institution 1,680 square yards of land and sanctioned Rs. 7,500, as half the cost of the building. Sir Dinshaw contributes Rs. 11,000.

POSTAGE on letters between India and Ceylon has been for some months charged at the Indian inland rates. Since the commencement of the present year, the parcel rate has also been reduced to the same inland rate.

DURING January, February, March and April, the mails for Europe and America will leave Bombay on Fridays, those from Europe and America reaching Bombay on Mondays. Mails from the Australian Colonies, China, the Straits and Japan leave Bombay on alternate Thursdays. The Burma Mails are timed from Calcutta every Wednesday and Saturday. But the Wednesday despatches will be detained till Thursday when the inward English mails do not reach Calcutta before Thursday. From Rangoon to Calcutta the mails will leave every Saturday and from Moulmein to Calcutta (direct) every Wednesday.

THE Revd. K. S. Macdonald writes to us explaining the extract in our last about a proposal for free marriages made among the clergy of Derby.

"Until lately almost all marriages in Great Britain were solemnised by Episcopal clergymen. The disabilities and disadvantages under which marriages by Non-conformist clergymen and civil marriages laboured have been removed of late with the result that now only 70 per cent. of the marriages are solemnised by Episcopal clergymen—the remaining 30 per cent. being by Non-conformist ministers."

Holloway's Pills.—Nervousness and want of Energy.—When first the nerves feel unstrung, and listlessness supplants energy, the time has come to take some such alterative as Holloway's Pills to restrain a disorder from developing itself into a disease. These excellent Pills correct all irregularities and weakness. They act so kindly, yet so energetically on the functions of digestion and assimilation, that the whole body is revived, the blood rendered richer and purer, while the muscles become firmer and stronger, and the nervous and absorbent systems are invigorated. These Pills are suitable for all classes and all ages. They have a most marvellous effect on persons who are out of condition; they soon rectify whatever is in fault, restore strength to the body and confidence to the mind.

THE Hindoo Patriot writes the following paragraph :—

"Inquiries are made of us whether the report is correct that a letter was received by the Honorary Secretaries of the so called Permanent Memorial Committee from the Private Secretary to His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor to the effect that the Deputation which was to wait on the Prince on the 9th instant would not be received, if Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee accompanied it; and whether it was a fact that the deputation met with a cold reception. Wild rumours are current on the subject, but we do not vouch for the truth of any of them. This much, however, is perfectly certain, that Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee was not allowed to accompany the deputation."

The Secretaries of the Permanent Memorial Committee had taken no notice of its appearance in the Patriot but the Indian Daily News having quoted it, they could not remain silent. They have published a contradiction in the latter journal. They say that "as Honorary Secretaries, they did not receive any communication from the Private Secretary to His Royal Highness or any other person whatsoever, to the effect that the deputation would not be received if Baboo Surendranath Banerjee accompanied it," and that there is no foundation for the rumours, and that it is not true that Babu Surendranath "was not allowed. He himself, they add, did not go, as he has studiously kept himself in the background so that his personal prominence may not in any way interfere with the success of the permanent memorial movement. The contradiction of the Joint Secretaries scarcely improves matters. All that their letter makes clear is that if there was any such communication, it was not addressed to the Secretaries. Their letter is inconclusive.

MR. C. T. Metcalfe, C.I.E., has retired from the Bengal Civil Service from the 29th October 1889. It is well for him and the Service.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE crisis in Portugal continues, if in an abated form. Considerable animosity naturally prevails against the English residents of Lisbon, and many English employés have been dismissed from service. These meditate sending a deputation to Lord Salisbury, urging conciliation. The Portuguese populace, however, is calming down and the press urges the necessity of prudence. In the despatches relating to Africa published by Portugal, an English telegram-writer finds nothing but persistent shuffling on Portugal's part, while Lord Salisbury is praised for firmness. It is also added that in replying to the Portuguese claims, the British Premier especially ridicules the pretensions founded on the ruins of the Portuguese forts, which are two centuries old. Why the older date of the ruins should make the claim in any way, far less, especially, ridiculous, is not explained. Portugal has addressed a Note to the Powers asking for their intervention, and expects a favorable reply. In the meantime, she has the sympathy of Spain and France, while the semi-official German press also speaks favourably. Russian official journals say that England should refer the dispute to arbitration.

Later telegrams are more unsatisfactory. Boycotting British merchandise continues, and foreign commercial agents are thriving. There is a lull in the popular excitement, but the feeling runs high. Several Portuguese subjects holding British decorations have returned their medals. The British Legation at Lisbon is guarded by troops. Rumours are circulated at Lisbon that the English have seized Quillimane.

CRETE is again in trouble. There has been fighting attended with loss of life.

MR. Gladstone speaking at Chester deplored the dispute with Portugal but declined to discuss the question before he was cognisant of the details. Speaking on foreign politics generally, he hoped that England would not imitate America by increasing the navy. He regretted the disturbances in Armenia and Crete.

MR. Goschen also regretted the dispute with Portugal, but attributed it to the unlawful encroachments of the Portuguese agent over territory to which that country had not a shadow of right. The British Government, supported by the confidence of the nation, would, he said, carry the matter to a successful conclusion. As to the Budget, he said he would rejoice if he was able to relieve taxation in any way, but discouraged any immediate hopes.

THE influenza shows some abatement. Telegrams about its ravages are not so frequent. One report gives the number of deaths in London in last week at 126. The Vienna doctors claim to have discovered the influenza bacillus which is similar to pneumonia. The epidemic seems to have crossed overland and appeared in Teheran.

OF the notable deaths from influenza is that of the Duke of Aosta, who caught it from his wife. The Princess of Wales is well.

LORD Napier of Magdala had wished for the plainest funeral, but his admiring countrymen, and in particular the officials, were differently minded. They determined that a brilliant career in the service of his country demanded a fitting display to mark public appreciation and sorrow, and decided that in point of magnificence, Lord Napier's funeral should surpass any similar demonstration since the funeral of the Duke of Wellington. He was accordingly laid to his last rest in St. Paul's Cathedral "to the mourning of a mighty nation." The hero of Abyssinia sleeps by the side of "mighty Nelson" and the Iron Duke. An imposing military procession passed from the Tower of London to the Cathedral. The route was densely crowded. The Duke of Cambridge attended as the representative of the Queen, and placed a wreath on the coffin from Her Majesty bearing the words, in her own writing, "As a mark of respect and admiration from the sovereign to one who served her so faithfully." The Cathedral was filled with officers. Sir Peter Lumsden represented the Indian Army. The Prince of Wales also attended.

GREAT storms are reported from various parts of the United Kingdom, attended with enormous damage to property and the shipping. The gales continued for some days last week, causing a tremendous tide along the South coast of England, and swamping the Esplanades at Brighton, Hastings and Sandgate.

THE Socialists in Europe seem to be gaining "caste." One telegram says that no less a man than Prince Bismarck has consented to attend and address a Socialist meeting. A later telegram reports the defeat sustained by the Government in their endeavour to carry through some anti-Socialist proposals. The Reichstag rejected an important clause, empowering expulsion in the Socialist Bill in defiance of the Government. The Emperor has held a Conference with the Ministers on the Socialist question.

THERE was great uproar in the French Chamber of Deputies, caused by the Boulangists objecting to M. Joffrin speaking. The Chamber had to be adjourned three times owing to the tumult which reigned. M. Deroulede who took the lead was ordered to leave the Chamber, and on his persistently refusing to obey the order, was ejected by the military.

IT was notified in September last that

The Marquis of Salisbury had received a note from the Roumanian charge d'Affaires, stating that persons wishing to obtain information as to the position and credit of Roumanian manufacturers and merchants, should apply direct to the Roumanian Chambers of Commerce. It appears that such applications are sometimes erroneously addressed to private individuals, who have an interest in recommending particular firms.

MR. E. H. Walker, Her Majesty's Consul at Coruna, in a report dated 1st August last, encloses copy of a Royal order in three languages, Spanish, French, and English, dated the 22nd September 1888, prescribing the regulations that have to be observed by foreign vessels visiting that port. The regulations in question may be seen on application at the Board of Trade, Whitehall Gardens, S. W.

IN these days of tuft-hunting, when men amongst us, and even women, are sighing and dying for honors, it is really refreshing to hear of any noble example in the direction of true manliness and self-respect. The mail brings the intelligence of the death of a Parliamentary veteran, Mr. Christopher Talbot, the Gladstonian member of Mid-Glamorgan-shire, at the venerable age of 87, who refused a peerage, rejoicing in his plain name to the last. Was he noble the less for want of a title?

THE Prince after touring in Sir Auckland Colvin's satrapy left for Lahore yesterday. At Lucknow where his Royal Highness arrived on the morning of the 18th, he was received by the Lieutenant-Gov.

ernor and the principal officials, after which the chief talukdars present were introduced. The Lucknow railway station was prettily decorated and thronged with spectators. In front of the Government House a shamiana had been erected, and it was here that the North West Provinces deputation presented the address of welcome. The address was read by Sir John Edge. After the Prince's reply, the Royal Party returned to Government House, and after breakfast, the Prince proceeded to open the Dufferin Female Hospital. The prince was driven in a charabanc drawn by four horses to the scene of the ceremony, stopping in the way to see a gathering of about 1,000 Native Christians who sang a hymn in Hindustani. After declaring the hospital open, the Prince left to witness the Residency and other sights of Lucknow. In the afternoon there was a Garden Party at the Wingfield Park, the scene being picturesque from the rich dresses of the talukdars. In the night there was a fete in the Kaiser Bagh given by the talukdars. The illumination of the buildings and grounds was beautiful. His Royal Highness witnessed the fireworks from the minaret, after which he returned to the dais, where hars and atar and pan were served to the Prince by the President of the Talukdars' Association, to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor by the Vice-President, and to the Staff by the Secretary. The Royal Party arrived at Cawnpore on the 20th. Visiting the public gardens at Cawnpore, the Prince Albert planted three willows and two cypress trees round the memorial over the spot of the massacre not far from the well. The special train then carried the Prince to Bhurtpore where the Maharaja has made arrangements for a day's shooting. The party then returned to Agra, where the Prince presented new colours to the 4th Bengal Cavalry which had marched in to Agra from Jhansi for the ceremony. On the night of the 22nd, the Taj was illuminated with electric light. The next day the Prince went out pigsticking. The Ball given by the Maharaja of Bhurtpore was a brilliant pageant, the Prince dancing with Miss Colvin, and Mrs. Martelli. Lahore is filling with feudatory Princes.

We read in the Indian Daily News under the head Summary of News, Bengal, Hooghly :—

"The entire little station of French Chandernagore has been thrown into a state of great excitement and commotion by the announcement of the Republican Government that every resident who has attained his twentieth year must enrol himself as a soldier, and, as rumour goes, after learning the rudiments of drill and discipline, will have to go to Cochin-China, and to places wherever his services may be deemed necessary by the Republic. In addition to diet and clothing, every soldier shall receive a salary of Rs. 10 per mensem, and shall be entitled to all the privileges of military men. Those that are above twenty have been given the option of volunteering to serve in the cause of the Republic, if they like to do so. This announcement has already struck terror into the hearts of the native residents of the place, who have memorialized the French Government that such a hard-and-fast law of conscription is entirely unsuited to Bengal, and will prove to be of the greatest hardship to them all. The French Governor says that the orders of the Republic are imperative, and that he has no hand in the matter. Those Congress people who burn to enrol themselves as volunteers under the British Government should not lose the present opportunity. Let them remove to the French station, become naturalized subjects of the Republic, and then they can march into Cochin-China or elsewhere, and show their valour and prowess by winning laurels in the Republic's service. They will thus set an example to their Bengali fellow-countrymen, and at the same time falsify the gloomy forebodings of the Europeans that Bengali Baboos are not at all fit to be soldiers."

The feeling is not confined to Bengal. In Pondicherry, the Chairman—a Hindu visitor from Madras—of an anniversary meeting of the Hindu Union School, is reported to have said :—

"We will be proud to be connected in some way with that magnificent Army of the French nation, whose annals are replete with glory, but I feel that I am expressing the views of my countrymen when I say that the necessity of being sent to Saigon to be disciplined there will be felt as a hardship by the community. It will militate against the religious sentiment and caste restrictions upon which the fabric of the Hindu social system is rooted. But it is to us a source of consolation that this step will not be taken hastily, and without serious consideration, and that the Government of France will faithfully act up to the pledge given to us to the effect that the policy of the administration will be so shaped as to preclude any interference with the immemorial and highly-valued rights of the people. The measure in question will not only, from sufficient ground, be extremely unpopular with the Hindus, but also with the other communities under the French flag."

The truth about the matter is that the decree has just been proclaimed, though it does not come into operation before October next, and the byelaws have not yet been framed. There is panic at Chandernagore, and people have begun to leave or avoid the French settlement to avoid conscription. It is time for the Administration to allay the fears by another beat of drum. The Governor, ignorant of the ways of our people, blindly proclaimed the decree passed in Paris.

We approve of the action of the Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta in regard to the Calcutta Public Library. A venerable institution, rich in its past traditions, could not be allowed to die without giving a wrench to one's ideas of the fitness of things. The argument that its benefits are confined to the higher and better educated classes, and that on that consideration it is not entitled to be subsidized from the purse of the general body of rate-payers, apparently had great weight with the General Committee of the Corporation. That argument has, indeed, some force, but there are limits within which it should prevail. If the outlay of a small sum of Rs. 8,000 a year from the funds of a rich Municipality like that of Calcutta, could rescue a great institution founded and maintained for the cultivation of learning among the respectable classes of the citizens, it were the height of philistinism to withhold it. The Corporation lives for all classes, high and low, and, under the lately amended law and indeed the liberal spirit of the scheme of local Self-Government, enjoys much greater latitude of discretion in ordering its expenditure than before. The promotion of education is one of the objects under the present law to which the Municipal Funds may legitimately be devoted, and although we would be the last person in the world to allow any great abuse being made of the enlarged discretion which the law now gives to the City Fathers, we do think that in the present instance their action deserves support and approval. The Public Library is an institution of which any great city may well be proud, and its extinction for want of support would have been a shame to the Calcutta community. It has for a long time been going abegging before the public and the Government, and the municipal grant now sanctioned may be regarded as only a grant made by the public of Calcutta interested in its preservation through the organized agency of their City Corporation. All honor, therefore, to Dr. Sircar for his gallant support of a noble though failing, cause.

His conduct on the present occasion is worthy of his scholarship and his antecedents. A man who has spent quite a fortune on his own private library could not but feel keenly for the fate of another. Dr. Sircar has saved the honor of the community, and we congratulate him on his splendid success. A contemporary has been led to denounce his conduct in this connection in very strong terms. But we are sure he would have spoken with more temperance and respect if he knew to what expense Dr. Sircar has gone and what he spends even now for providing himself with his own literary and scientific requisites. Dr. Sircar had no selfish motive in moving his amendment, and if he were at all to blame,

"The love he bore to learning was in fault."

THE attempt of the Suburban devil tooust the town brotherhood has once more failed. They have been at it since the amalgamation of the Suburbs with the town. The Commissioners at their meeting of Thursday rejected the proposal to give out any printing work of the Corporation on contract. They will retain their own establishment, increasing the staff and materials for the additional work thrown on the Department.

LAST night, Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur entertained native Calcutta to Nautches, in celebration of the marriage of his two eldest sons Moulvis A. F. M. Abdur Rahman—Baqister-at-law—and A. K. M. Abdus Subhan, Deputy Magistrate and Collector. The rush of guests was great. From the highest downwards all sections of the community were there, including not only the residents but the notabilities present in the metropolis. The rains interfered with the arrangements for the reception of guests but the Nautches were kept up till nine this morning, and those who remained enjoyed them the better for the showers. There could be seen the Nawab Bahadur of Moorshedabad and his brother, the Mysore and Oudh Princes, the Maharaja of Vizianagram, the Maharaja of Cooch Behar, the Maharaja of Durbhunga and his brother.

MR. C. W. Boltoh has been marked as the next Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation. He is already holding unofficial Levees of the Commissioners.

M. NORET, the Governor of French India, is expected at Chandernagore next week.

THE CONVOCATION OF THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.

THE last Convocation of the Calcutta University was of more than usual interest. The occasion of the first Native Vice-Chancellor's appearance to discharge the annual academic function drew many who might have otherwise excused themselves from attending. Not a few were there, simply as a matter of etiquette, and to offer their tacit or express congratulations. At any rate, the Viceroy was influenced by this special consideration in coming, though his Excellency was all the same desirous of marking his interest in the University by his presence. Lord Lansdowne paid a glowing and eloquent compliment to Dr. Gurudas Banerjee and warmly congratulated him on his appointment. His Lordship was peculiarly happy to find that his choice in this instance had met with satisfaction from all quarters, and that there was not one discordant note to mar the general expression of approval with which Mr. Justice Banerjee's nomination to the Vice-Chancellorship had been hailed. His Lordship could not refrain from making a passing allusion to the usual attitude of the press towards the Government and its measures. He said he had been long enough in the country to be aware that in such cases it was not always easy to please every one, and he was all the more gratified, therefore, at finding the singular harmony of opinion that had been manifested in the present instance. Lord Lansdowne then referred to the constitution of the Senate. The way in which nominations had been made to the Senate in past years had served to swell the governing body of the University to a cumbrously large number, and explained the necessity of gradually reducing it. In pursuance of this idea, his Excellency said he had refrained from filling up the entire number of vacancies in making his nominations this year, and this plan would be continued until reduction to the desired extent was attained. In regard to future nominations to Fellowships, Lord Lansdowne announced his desire of making a new move, and one, certainly in the right direction. He wished to have the assistance of the University in filling up a portion of the vacancies. His idea was that the M. A.'s should make one or two nominations from themselves, which, if not open to serious objection, would be accepted. His Lordship's final decision on the question would be announced at the next Convocation; meanwhile this suggestion was thrown out, at a rather early stage, to show that in a case of this kind, his Excellency wished to take the University into his confidence.

The Vice-Chancellor's address embraced a variety of topics of educational and general interest, and was characterised by great moderation and practical knowledge of the subject. The tone of gentle suasion was all that could be wished, and where he differed, or even remonstrated, his modesty was unmistakable. He disclaimed all intention of making any ambitious effort and warned the audience not to lay up disappointment for themselves by expecting anything extraordinary or brilliant. A brief retrospect of the past, and a forecast of the immediate future, with the interposition of just a few remarks suggested by his official experience, was all that he aimed at, and if this did not promise any great treat to those who had come to hear a great address, nevertheless he claimed their attention on the ground of the intrinsic importance of a movement like that of the University. Several hundreds of young men who represented the cream of the intelligence of the rising generation and who were destined to influence in a variety of ways the future of a great province are annually sent out to the world. A machinery of such vast potential energy ought to command interest on its own account. With this preface, Mr. Justice Banerjee proceeded to dwell upon the great progress, as marked by the steadily increasing numbers of candidates at the several examinations, which the University had attained since its foundation about a third of a century ago. This was, indeed, a result worthy of congratulation, but there was a shadowy side to the picture. The Vice-Chancellor asked if the results of the Examination were altogether as satisfactory as the great increase in the numbers of competitors. Speaking of the percentage of failures, he said that the normal proportion had hitherto ranged from 40 to 60, which, if not quite satisfactory, was accepted without comment. This normal limit had, however, been considerably exceeded in the last year, not only in the Entrance Examination in which the proportion of failure stood so high as 70 per cent. but in all the other examinations in which it was higher than usual. The Vice-Chancellor's remarks on this subject are deserving of attentive and earnest consideration at the hands of college and school authorities and of the public. He said:—

"These apparently unexpected results naturally evoked much discussion. There came from various quarters a good deal of thoughtful criticism and sensible suggestion, and also a mass of thoughtless talk and senseless abuse. In thus speaking rather unceremoniously of our critics, I am not at all speaking in anger or defiance, but am simply stating a plain fact. Nor have I any reason to be intolerant of criticism. I am not one of those who think that our University system is perfect, and does not admit of improvement. On the contrary, I firmly believe that with honest intentions and earnest exertions we can always progress from good to better, and that free and fair criticism is one of our best guides in the path of progress. Only I would gently remind our critics that when they have to find fault with an institution like this University, which is earnestly striving to do good work, they ought not to cry it down in language calculated to bring it to ridicule, and to undermine in infant minds the foundations of respect for authority. Unjust failure at an examination may defer for a year the progress of those who have suffered, the wrong done having every chance of being set right in the year following; but if they are taught to glory in their failure and to despise examinations and examining bodies, depend upon it that the habits of laziness and irreverence that this will engender will be sure to mar their prospects for ever. The Senate has appointed a Committee to inquire into the causes of these large failures, and as the Committee has not yet submitted its report, it would be premature for me to hazard any opinion on the subject. One thing, however, I may say, as it is not any matter of opinion, but is a fact, or rather the admission of a fact, by those interested in denying it. In reply to the inquiries made by the Committee, the heads of the institutions which sent candidates to our examinations have almost invariably admitted with commendable candour that the candidates that were found fit to pass in their judgment were not much larger in number than those who have actually passed, though some have stated that, between the date of application of candidates and the date of examination, many candidates were expected to be able to make up their deficiency. The results, therefore, were not altogether unexpected by those who knew best. But whether expected or unexpected, these large percentages of failures indicate an amount of waste of time, energy, and money which the University ought to prevent if possible. These large failures may be due either to the standards being difficult, or to the examination being unfair, or the candidates being badly prepared. Very few persons, however, seriously complain of the standard being too difficult, and opinion seems to be divided between attributing the failures to unfair examination and to bad preparation."

This is one of the burning questions of the day in connection with the University, and although Dr. Banerjee disclaimed any intention of anticipating the decision of the Committee of Enquiry, he plainly hinted that if there was room for improvement in the methods of the University examinations, the system of teaching was not less responsible for the result. This is a view which cannot fail to be accepted on all hands. Who that has any experience of our educational institutions and their methods, does not deplore the extensive prevalence of cram? While, however, we freely concede this point to the Vice-Chancellor, we must, at the same time, say it does not wholly account for the unprecedented failures of the year. Nor does Dr. Banerjee himself deny that the University has faults of its own, and that the public have just grounds of complaint against it. We have no objection to the University insisting upon a high standard of proficiency or even steadily raising that standard in its examinations, but a standard once adopted, should not show marked oscillations from year to year. For such sudden changes in the severity of the standard, the competitors as well as the trainers cannot be prepared, and they place them at an unfair disadvantage. That there have been such oscillations will be admitted. That there have also been other abuses in the examinations has also to be admitted. The University itself has had after enquiry to pronounce a number of examiners to have been guilty of great neglect and perfunctoriness in their work. For the rest, the faults which have crept into the methods of teaching in our schools and colleges, are to no small extent due to the character of the examinations as prescribed by the University. If cram largely prevails, it is the direct effect of the examinations as they are now conducted. It cannot be difficult to so regulate and modify the examinations as to make them a real test of intelligent knowledge as distinguished from superficial cram. The Vice-Chancellor himself is perfectly alive to all the aspects of the question, and when it has been declared that there is earnest intention on the part of the authorities to purge the University of its abuses, let us be content to wait in hope.

The most important part of the address was Dr. Banerjee's reply to the charge of barrenness which is laid against the Calcutta University. Without having a particularly strong case to rebut the charge, he was, nevertheless, not prepared to take quite a cynical view of the question. His observations on this as well as on other points were both thoughtful and of practical value.

THE PROSPECTS OF ART IN CALCUTTA.

THE opening of the first Exhibition of the Calcutta Art Society took place the other day in the lobby of the Indian Museum under the presidency of the Viceroy and before a respectable gathering of gentlemen and ladies. Sir Steuart Bayley, President of the Society, opened the proceedings with a good speech. After complimenting Mr. Westmacott to whose inception and energy the Society owes its successful foundation, Sir Steuart entered into some explanation of the necessity of the institution and of its objects. He said:—

"The cynics will tell us that the only reason for its existence is that other similar Societies exist in Simla and in Poona, and therefore Calcutta thought it necessary to put forward its own claims. There is, of course, a substratum of truth in this as there is in most cynicism, just the half truth which gives cynicism its value by calling attention to the existence of a lower and baser element in all human endeavour, and so conducing to a stable judgment lest we think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. But even if this view were sound it only throws the question one step further back, and induces us to look into the reasons which led to the formation of such societies elsewhere. Well, the reason is not far to seek. We have in India a number of amateurs with a feeling for art and a desire for improvement who work under great difficulties—want of leisure, and in the plains a climate which is in every direction antagonistic and baffling. These are two of the most noticeable difficulties, but, above all, is the rarity of competent criticism, especially of that best form of self-criticism which comes from contrasting one's own work with the superlative work of great artists. In other countries students can benefit not only from the great historical collections, but also from annual exhibitions of all the best work done by the greatest living artists. In India amateurs are entirely cut off from both provinces of education. Well, then, amateurs bring their work together at an Exhibition like this with the object of seeing what others achieve, and of improving their own work by a standard of comparison. But besides our amateurs, there is the public, who do not paint pictures, but take an interest more or less real in those that are painted for them. They get amusement and instruction out of an Exhibition of the kind, and by giving prizes for competition, help to improve the standard."

Sir Steuart then acknowledged the liberal encouragement and patronage which the Society had received from the Viceroy, and looked upon it as an augury of happy omen that the Society should hold its first Exhibition under the auspices of a nobleman to whom the patronage of art was an heritage and whose family had for several generations been conspicuous for their generous encouragement of art and artists. After bearing testimony to the help received from professional artists and from Mr. Jobbins, Principal of the Calcutta School of Art, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal concluded with a strong appeal for funds for the supply of a habitation for the Society and its collections.

Lord Lansdowne then rose and made an excellent and hearty speech. Modestly disclaiming any pretensions to art, his Lordship said there was an ancient proverb that men should learn religion from the irreligious, and it was upon a similar assumption with regard to Art that he rested his claims to be an authority on the subject. His Lordship then referred to the great importance of art-culture to any community claiming a place in the civilized world, and said it was very desirable that Calcutta, which was the seat of the Government of India and the centre of political and commercial activity, should also be a centre of artistic activity also. He then passed his judgment on the collection displayed in the first year's Exhibition. Though, of course, not one by the side of which the Royal Academy or the Paris Salon might be said to sink into insignificance, still judging it as a first attempt and making allowances for all the difficulties always surrounding a first attempt, there was no reason to be ashamed of it. His Lordship's criticism of the pictures went far to belie the modest personal references with which he began. Lord Lansdowne dwelt upon the advantages possessed by Calcutta for the cultivation of portrait painting:—

"There is no place in India in which, year after year, a greater number of notable persons is gathered together. High officials, gallant soldiers, great leaders of commercial enterprise, Indian Princes, and gentlemen of high station are all in the habit of resorting annually to Calcutta. Only think what a collection of the portraits of Indian worthies might have been formed, if, in years past, it had been the custom for every distinguished man who came here to have his picture painted! I am glad to see that a special prize is offered by my friend Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, of whom by the way an excellent likeness from Mr. Archer's easel is exhibited, for portraits painted by his fellow-countrymen, and I cannot avoid referring to the pleasure which it gave me to see some extremely promising work in portrait painting exhibited by students of the Calcutta School of Art—notably a most conscientiously executed three-quarter length of a gentleman, whose name is not given, by Mr. A. P. Bagchi, the Teacher of the School of Art, and an extremely clever and really powerfully painted picture by Mr. Lalit Mohun Bose, a young artist educated at the same school,—a picture which has, I understand, won the Maharaja's prize.

I am disposed to take a very sanguine view of the future of portrait painting in this country. The Art itself, far from being strange to India, is indigenous in the country. No one who has had an opportunity of examining the old Indian drawings and paintings to be found in your museums and collections can have failed to be struck by the extraordinarily conscientious character of the human likenesses. It is quite true that the execution is often to our taste hard and unsympathetic, and that the drawing does not accord with modern ideas of Art. The same remark, however, might be made of some of the works of the earlier Dutch and Italian artists. This, at any rate, may be said without fear of contradiction—that your Indian students have displayed a rare power of reproducing upon canvas with correctness and fidelity any object which they have striven to depict. This characteristic is displayed to a marked degree in the studies from still life exhibited at the lower end of the room, and also in the pen-and-ink architectural and technical drawings exhibited alongside of them. These are qualities which only want careful training and the inspiration of true artistic feeling and artistic taste in order to become fully developed into real artistic excellence, and I sincerely trust that the School of Art, which has been ably presided over by Mr. Jobbins, will in no respect relax its efforts in this direction."

His Lordship then illustrated the value of the accomplishment as an aid to the personal happiness of its fortunate possessors, from reminiscences of his late tour in the North-Western Frontier.

"I do not know any accomplishment which adds more to the happiness of those who are fortunate enough to possess it, and to that of their friends. It is an accomplishment which stimulates the power of observation; it affords the most interesting of recreations to those who are hard-worked, and the most agreeable of pastimes to those who are happy enough to have leisure hours at their disposal. The superiority of a person who can paint or draw over one who can do neither asserts itself at every turn. I will mention one case in point which came within my notice not long ago. I had the misfortune, during my recent tour on the North-West Frontier, to meet with a railway accident. It was an accident of the mildest and most harmless description, but it involved a temporary arrestation of our journey. Some of us bemoaned the hard fate which obliged us to spend several hours in a remote locality with which we had no special desire to form a closer acquaintance; some abused the engine, others found fault with the line, some thought of the anxiety which their non-arrival would occasion to their wives; others, more materially minded, asked whether there was any chance of getting dinner before midnight. But a not inconsiderable number of our party belonged to the noble army of artists, and it was most striking to observe how what was a misfortune to the rest of us was regarded as a positive piece of good luck by them, for before our train had been five minutes off the metals, quite a little host had seized upon dominating positions and had begun with the utmost good humour to transfer the scene of our mishap to their sketching-blocks. This is only one illustration of many which could be given of the advantages of being able to use pencil or brush, and many more will, I have no doubt, occur to you. But we have come here to see the pictures, and I will not detain you longer except for the purpose of reiterating what has been so well said by his Honor—the expression of the obligation which we are under to the Members of the Committee for their exertions on behalf of this Exhibition. Few of us, I expect, have any idea of the amount of labour which such a task involves. To the Members of the Committee it has, I am sure, been a labour of love, but that ought not in any degree to diminish our gratitude. And, ladies and gentlemen, if our thanks are due to the Committee, they are certainly due, in a special degree, to one Member of it—the gentleman who has undertaken the duty of Honorary Secretary, and whose perseverance, courtesy, and deep conviction of the strength of his cause have contributed in no small degree to the success of the Exhibition."

The Viceroy with Lady Lansdowne then spent some time in examining the exhibits, and having declared the Exhibition open left, when the meeting broke up.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE DINNER.

THE public dinner given in the Town Hall on the night of Wednesday the 22nd in honor of Mr. King, M. P., by the members of the Uncovenanted Service, was a marked success. Among the guests, there were several distinguished members of Calcutta society, the Bench, the Bar, the Civil Service, the mercantile community and the Press being all represented by their conspicuous and leading men. Altogether some 160 persons sat down to a splendid banquet, purveyed by M. Bonsard. The Town Hall was most effectively decorated, and presented a brilliant spectacle. The most notable features of the decorations were two transparencies, one painted over the stage representing the diminishing rupee, and another over the gallery showing a number of walking sticks, bearing the names of the different branches of the Uncovenanted Service, laid out on a cushion marked "Civil Service Association," the whole being bound together by a blue ribbon marked "Unity." The design of these devices was appropriate to the occasion, and the whole of the arrangements is pronounced to have been creditable to the executive committee as well as to those that were in charge of the illuminations and other decorations. Sir Alfred Croft was in the chair.

• Quite as affective, if not more, were the speeches after the dinner. The speech of the evening was, of course, Mr. King's, but the whole speaking was of a high character. Nothing could have been happier than the Chairman's several speeches. Sir Alfred Croft showed an admirable tact in turning even the formal toasts to the Queen and the Viceroy into opportunities in his hands of driving home the great argument he had to urge for the Uncovenanted Service, and the relief of its grievance. The main point which was the subject of discussion on the occasion was the reduction, in consequence of the present state of exchange, of the stipulated pension of Rs. 5,000 a year to which senior members of the Uncovenanted Service are entitled on their retirement under the terms of the old contract between them and the Government. When they came out to this country, a pension of Rs. 5,000 meant a pension of £500, and so little did Government anticipate the serious depreciation which has since taken place in the exchange value of silver that in the Pension Code, and in all official despatches, the sum of £500 was regularly used as the equivalent of Rs. 5,000. The present condition of exchange was entirely unforeseen by both parties to the contract. The old members of the Uncovenanted Service now find that by the time they have served their term and earned their retiring pension, that pension has dwindled by about one-third of what they expected to enjoy. To their representations about the hardship and suffering in which they find themselves involved by such an unforeseen accident, the Government has one reply. It points to the terms of the contract, and what the service complains of is that this, if strictly just, is not equity. This is in brief the case between that Service and the Government, and now let us see how Sir Alfred Croft makes use of the usual loyal and complimentary toasts which as Chairman he had to propose, for the practical purposes of the business in hand. In proposing the Royal toast, Sir Alfred, referring to what is sometimes said about the waning influence of the principle of loyalty to the throne on the present generation, gave an emphatic and graceful contradiction to such a supposition, and pointed to the events of a fortnight ago as a sufficient refutation of the calumny. The little speech was then rounded off with a most effective peroration—effective, that is, as an appeal for generous treatment of the uncovenanted servants. He said:—

"And, gentlemen, it is the special privilege of those on whose behalf I speak, and indeed of the great majority of those whom I have the honour of addressing, to be not only the subjects of the Queen but her servants; and in that relation it is and will be no less our pride than our bounden duty to render her Majesty always and in all circumstances, loyal and faithful service to the utmost of our strength and ability."

The force of the hit will be felt. The Viceroy's toast was in the same felicitous manner turned to account, for another powerful appeal. Sir Alfred showed a rare knack in covering the strongest argument for the Uncovenanted Service in the glowing tribute of praise he paid to the Viceroy. The concluding sentence is a gem in its way, and nothing can surpass the cleverness and delicacy with which the chief argument for the Service is urged upon the acceptance of the Government.

"To investigate questions of difficulty by the light of broad principles of equity and right, to pass beyond the formal terms and limits of a proposition to the wider political issues that it involves—these are the attributes of a statesman; they are the qualities by the exercise of which Lord Lansdowne has won his way to distinction and fame; and they are those by which we are confident that his Excellency's policy will always be determined."

Sir Alfred Croft's speech in giving the toast of the evening was equally admirable. He spoke with no less moderation than with force, and paid his compliment to the champion of the service and the guest of the evening in words marked by thorough literary finish. We may quote one passage.

"Well, these arguments have been urged from time to time, but unhappily without avail. And, then, in our darkest hour of need, when we found ourselves chained to the rock of the Indian service, with the cruel and hungry jaws, if I may be permitted so violent a metaphor, of the depreciated rupee waiting to drag us down and devour us—then suddenly out of the sky, to the rescue of this uncovenanted Andromeda, sprang forth in full panoply our Perseus, eager to do battle with the monster. But, to quit the realm of metaphor, this intervention of Mr. King at once raised the discussion to a higher level and into a freer air."

The way in which large questions of this kind are regarded in the House of Commons differs, and perhaps necessarily differs, from the way in which they are regarded by a bureaucracy like the Government of India. Anyhow, the shifting of the arena of controversy, the hearing of our cause by a fresh set of judges, and, above all the unlooked-for support of Mr. King's untiring and enthusiastic advocacy—these new elements could not but turn to our great advantage, and they inspired us with new hope."

The other speeches at the banquet were equally of an excellent order. The speech of Mr. King was characterised by his usual forcible eloquence. It was an elaborate and earnest vindication of the claims of the Uncovenanted Service—its dignity and its importance and its achievements. The toast of the Chairman was given by the Hon'ble Justice Prinsep who spoke in sympathetic terms of the movement. The object of the movement, he said, was not to embarrass the Government, but to make it manifest that the Government was not acting in the full interest of the services concerned, in turning a deaf ear to their representations. The toast of the Press was given in a humorous and graceful speech by Mr. Justice Norris whose personal references were received with bursts of laughter. Mr. Macdonald of the Englishman responded to this toast in a speech that provoked many cheers. Altogether, the dinner was a perfect success and the character of the speaking was of more than usual interest.

THE WELCOME TO THE PRINCE IN CALCUTTA.

ON previous occasions of honoring Royal visitors in the metropolis of British India, the Municipal Commissioners took the lead. The only instance in which it was otherwise, was that of the Duke of Connaught. Even then, though there was an independent Committee, the then Municipal Secretary, Mr. Robert Turnbull, was the Treasurer and had a very important position on it. He materially assisted Mr. Apar in the management of the affair, and Mr. Ghose in the settlement of the details of the entertainment.

In entertaining the last Royal visitor, the Corporation and its Chief were kept out in so far as it was possible to keep them out on such ceremonial occasions. A Committee was organised. The leading spirits of the Committee soon asserted themselves. Mr. Apar, in consequence of his previous experience, soon proved to be of great help to the Committee and his efforts brought the arrangements to a satisfactory termination. Calcutta is much indebted to him, as almost all the local arrangements, excepting the entertainment details on the night of the fête, were left to him. The details of the entertainment were taken up by the other members and the President himself whose earnest endeavours and indefatigable industry were highly praiseworthy. The unique character of the several items of the entertainment, such as the Khuttuck dance, the Bhootea wild gyrations, the performance of the Lathials from Pubna, which formed the best portions of the fête, were all due to the originality of Mr. Apar. The refreshment arrangements were also chiefly due to him and to Lady Wilson. The European community of Calcutta will gratefully carry the reminiscence of her excellent arrangements for a long time in their memory. The gratitude of the city is also due to Mr. Jobbins for the tasteful display of the coloured lights in the tree illumination of the Maidan and the Eden Gardens which drew admiration from the Royal party and all appreciative sight-seers. To confess the truth, the illuminations on this occasion in the town of Calcutta far outshone the effects of similar ones on other occasions, for they were too commonplace and did not suggest any idea of originality or give evidence of any scientific skill.

Men of affluence, of taste, and of working habits, fairly contributed towards the success of this entertainment. But for their earnestness, the fête would never have been the brilliant success it was, though we are given to understand that in some departments the arrangements had been slightly unsatisfactory, for example, the native refreshment place which was literally besieged by native policemen in consequence of which no respectable people could get access to it.

The principal pavilion of refreshments, though stocked with right royal commestibles and drinkables, was the resort of only European policemen and Jews and Parsee gentlemen after the retirement of the Prince's party.

THE ENGLISH SPARROW IN THE UNITED STATES.

Captain W. F. Segrave, Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore thus reports under date the 23rd August last, the destruction of property by birds and more particularly by the sparrow in the United States :—

The inhabitants of this continent have turned their attention to the house sparrow (Paper Domesticus), and all their energies are now devoted to his destruction.

The sparrow, unlike the indigenous animals of this continent, is a wily bird and will die hard, and if the people of this country continue to pursue their present tactics, it will be by no means prudent to predict that their efforts will be crowned with success.

The universal ill-will borne to the house sparrow, here called the English sparrow, is somewhat astonishing to English people who are accustomed to regard him as a domestic, companionable bird, remarkable for instinct and cunning, who balances the, no doubt, considerable amount of mischief which he perpetrates by a still more extensive benefit which he confers on the householder and agriculturist.

In this country he is said to be the deadly enemy of the gardener and fruit-grower. It is alleged that he destroys vast quantities of grain, that he defiles buildings, that he refuses to eat American insects, and that he actually protects and causes an increase of worms and caterpillars by driving away those native birds which would prey upon them.

Previous to 1850 the house sparrow was unknown on this continent. In that year eight pairs were imported into New York, but for some unknown reason they failed to obtain a footing and did not thrive or multiply. Some years later they were brought over in large numbers which bred and spread gradually over the neighbourhood.

But the sparrow was not firmly established in this country for many subsequent years. Indeed, it was not until 1870 that he may be said to have commenced his migration westward.

From that time to the present he has, with marvellous rapidity, spread over at least half of the continent.

His adaptability is phenomenal as he thrives and multiplies, not only in the tropical heat of the Southern States, but in the arctic temperature of Canada.

His fecundity is marvellous. In Maryland and the neighbouring States he is said to hatch out from four to six broods in a season, with an average of about five birds in a nest. And an ingenious individual has calculated that under the most favourable conditions the progeny of one pair of sparrow would, in 10 years, amount to over 275,000,000 of birds.

If all the sins which are here laid to the charge of the sparrow have no more reliable foundation than that of driving away and destroying the native birds, they are surely a well and unjustly abused family.

The vast majority of the native birds found in the Northern and Middle States are not permanent residents but are migratory, and are therefore possibly looked on by the sparrow as strangers and interlopers. But the native birds are driven out and exterminated in consequence of the wholesale slaughter which is carried on in the season of migration, which is also the season of pairing, and in the interest of milliners, whose customers persist in adorning their persons with feathers.

At this season every idle loafer and boy who can afford a ten-dollar gun, is busy stalking the lovely birds which are moving northward, and each of whose skins represents a certain number of cents.

In Canada, where wholesale slaughter is not carried on as a business, possibly because the native birds are not endowed with such gaudy plumage, no such charge is made against the sparrow.

On the contrary, he who pleases may see them feeding in company with the native birds, in perfect harmony, all over the country.

It is a well-known fact that numerous species of native birds have become almost extinct in Florida, where nevertheless, the sparrow is altogether unknown, not having as yet found his way to that State."

Take for instance, the American robin (Memla migratoria) which American ornithologists regard as one of the most valuable insectivorous birds, and which they charge the sparrow with having driven out of the land.

The American robin is a migratory bird, about as bulky and large as an English starling.

In spring and early summer every game seller and provision dealer displays strings and bunches of robins hanging outside his stall. Every eating-house advertises "Robin on Toast," one of the most favourite dishes of the masses when they are sufficiently in funds to justify the expenditure, and with this enormous destruction just at the breeding season, the world is gravely informed that the little sparrow is responsible for the exaggerated price of "Robin on Toast" and for the increase in worms and caterpillars which the said robins would have destroyed but for the wicked sparrows.

It may be safely asserted that a traveller will see more robins in a day's drive in Nova Scotia than in a month in the Middle Eastern States in this country, and yet it is not pretended that the sparrow is less aggressive in Canada than he is in the United States.

Another cause to which may be attributed the vast multiplication of sparrows on the continent lies in the enactments which are in force in many States, termed 'Scalp Acts.'

This Pennsylvania 'Scalp Act,' which may be said to be model on which similar legislation is based in other States, provides a bounty of 50 cents (2 s.) each on hawks, owls, weasels, &c., and a fee of 20 cents to the official taking affidavit.

It is stated that an average sum of 60,000 dollars is paid in this State annually in bounties, representing the destruction of about 100,000 of the abovenamed animals, the vast majority being hawks and owls.

It is calculated that the annual loss in poultry killed by them amounts in value to about 1,250 dollars. Thus you have a community expending 60,000 dollars to save farmers a loss of 1,250 dollars.

But this estimate by no means represents the actual loss to the tax-payer, for it may safely be calculated that each hawk and owl would destroy a vast number of sparrows, mice, and destructive insects.

Therefore, omitting all reference to the huge increase in the number of these noxious animals, when Nature's means of holding them in check has been removed, the lowest computed estimate of the value of each hawk and owl to the former would be about 2 dollars annually.

The enormous loss incurred by the tax-paying public in carrying out the short-sighted policy of destruction can thus be easily calculated.

But Nemesis is close upon their heels.

The great 'blizzard' of March 1888 destroyed multitudes of sparrows, and as a consequence, the past and present summers have seen a vast increase in grubs and caterpillars.

Already in many large cities the inhabitants through the public press are complaining of the destruction of their ornamental trees, the diminished number of sparrows being unable to keep in check the vast increase which has taken place in noxious grubs, worms and caterpillars.

THE HEARSEY-ALLEN CASE.

The inquiry into the charge of libel brought by Capt. Hearsey against Mr. G. W. Allen of the Pioneer was resumed on Wednesday the 22nd January in the Police Court before Mr. F. J. Marsden, Chief Presidency Magistrate. Mr. Avetoom, instructed by Messrs. Remfry and Rose, appeared for the complainant and Messrs. Pugh and Gasper, instructed by Messrs. Sanderson and Co., appeared for Mr. Allen.

Mr. Avetoom, in opening the case, said that the defendant in this case was Mr. Geo. Wm. Allen, who was managing proprietor of the Pioneer newspaper, published in Allahabad, and which is also circulated all over India; the complainant was a gentleman who bore a name distinguished in this country—Capt. Hearsey. He charged the defendant with having published a libel which had formed the subject of previous actions. That libel was written under circumstances which were most ungenerous and un-English. It was a wicked thing to do inasmuch as when the article appeared the complainant, Capt. Hearsey, had that very day been sentenced to one month's imprisonment by the Magistrate at Allahabad for assaulting Mr. Chesney, the editor of the paper. Whatever might be the character Captain Hearsey bore in Allahabad, in Calcutta at all events he was known to be a person who had a reputation, which had been damaged by the article in question. The circumstances under which the articles were written shewed that it could have been written with no other object in view but to hurt the complainant. He would be able to satisfy the Court as to the publication of the libel in Calcutta. Indeed, he would go further and show that the person who wrote the article in the Pioneer of the 26th January was the defendant, and he submitted when he had done all this the onus of proving non-publication in Calcutta would lie on the defendant. That would appear clearly on the authorities which he would place before his Honor, and when he had made out a prima facie case, it would be for the magistrate, either to try the case summarily or send it to the sessions. The learned counsel here proceeded to briefly read the libel commencing "one Andrew William Hearsey," and remarked that the prosecution had put in an additional charge of abetment under section 109. Before proceeding to call any witnesses, he thought it his duty to inform his Honor that one or two witnesses for the prosecution were not in attendance. One of them was a gentleman who had to attend a civil case at Scramore and the other Mr. Byrne was seriously ill. He would, therefore, ask for a further adjournment after all the witnesses present in attendance had been heard. He then called—

Geo. Machlachan Chesney, sworn :—I am the editor of the paper called the Pioneer. I have been editor for the last five years. The paper is published at Allahabad and has a circulation all over India. I know the defendant in this case, Mr. Allen. He is the managing proprietor of the Pioneer, and has been so for many years. As editor it is part of my duty to see the leading articles. By leading articles I mean the articles which appear on the front page. The leading article which appeared in the front page of the Pioneer was seen by me. On the 25th, 26th and 27th January 1889, Mr. Allen, the defendant, was the managing proprietor. The article beginning "One Andrew William Hearsey" refers to the complainant. I have seen copies of the Pioneer for sale at Messrs. Wheeler & Co.'s bookstalls at various railway stations. I have not seen any kept for sale at Messrs. Newman & Co. Messrs. Fitt & Co. are the Calcutta agents of the Pioneer and were so on the 25th, 26th and 27th January last. The Pioneer is sent from Allahabad by post and train to Calcutta. I have no personal knowledge whether the Pioneer is sent to Messrs. Newman & Co. Mr. Allen wrote the article complained of. I have been subpoenaed to produce the original manuscript of that article, but I have not produced it because it is not in my possession. I should think it was destroyed. I have no idea when it was destroyed. There is no rule in the Pioneer office as to keeping the manuscripts, but I do not suppose they will be preserved for more than a couple of months. I have no press-copy of the article. I have been subpoenaed to produce the press-copy. I am not certain that the press-copy has been destroyed, but I presume so. I presume it was destroyed about two or three months after it went to the press.

Cross-examined by Mr. Pugh :—I remember proceedings being taken against me in reference to this same article by the present complainant. Mr. Henderson appeared for the complainant at that time. The complainant was examined and his deposition was taken as to the truth of the matters complained of in that article.

Mr. Avetoom objected to his learned friend going into former proceedings and, after some discussion, the Magistrate decided that his learned friend had a right to do so. The cross-examination was then continued :—

Mr. Chesney :—I remember his being cross-examined by Mr. Gasper, upon the same subject. It was stated in the article complained of that Mr. Hearsey had been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for an assault committed upon me. But with regard to the previous article for which Captain Hearsey assaulted me Mr. Allen had nothing whatever to do. At the time when those proceedings were taken Mr. Allen was in England. Mr. Allen returned from England in the last days of October. The correspondence in the Pioneer office passes through my hands. Since Mr. Allen's return no application has been received from Mr. Hearsey, or on his behalf, making any inquiry as to who was the writer. So far as I know the name of the writer of the article has never been demanded by Captain Hearsey, or on his behalf, at any time. I received a communication from Mr. Allen in England on the institution of proceedings against me. It was a telegram to this effect which I produce :—"Avow me solely responsible, Hearsey scrap. Urge consequent delay November, Allen, London." [Mr. Avetoom objected to this telegram being tendered in evidence.]

Re-examined by Mr. Avetoom :—Proceedings were also taken against me in Howrah.

Mr. Pugh objected to his learned friend referring to the Howrah proceedings.

Mr. Avetoom said that his object was to show that, when the proceedings were taken in Howrah, Mr. Allen was in India, but his learned friend's clients did not voluntarily come forward and reveal the authorship of the article, and yet by producing the telegram the prosecution desired to show how generous Mr. Allen was in at once coming forward and saying "give up my name and let the proceedings be taken against me." After some discussion the Magistrate refused to permit the learned counsel to refer to any matters which did not properly arise out of the cross-examination.

The next witness called was—

Charles Allen Dickson, sworn :—I am manager of Newman & Co. Newman & Co. are booksellers in this city and sell also periodicals and papers. We take the Pioneer. We receive it from Allahabad by post. I am not aware of any arrangements being made with anybody in the Pioneer office as to the sending of copies of the paper to Calcutta. I have been subpoenaed to produce letters from the Pioneer office. I produce them.

Mr. Avetoom here asked for the letters.

Mr. Pugh, interrupting, asked his Honor if this was a proper mode of proceeding.

Some discussion ensued during the course of which—
Mr. Dickson said he was not at all prepared to show these letters unless he was compelled to do so: he had simply produced them in obedience to the subpoena.

The Magistrate finally did not permit the learned counsel to inspect the letters.

Howard Hensman, sworn:—I am one of the correspondents of the Pioneer newspaper and have been so for some time. I am also a member of the Bengal Club in Calcutta. I know the defendant, Mr. Allen. Mr. Allen is also a member of the Bengal Club in Calcutta. The Bengal Club take in the Pioneer, and have done so for some time. I was in Calcutta on the 26th January last. I read the article complained of there, but I do not know that it was from this very paper. The Pioneer newspaper is invariably kept on the table of the Bengal Club. I really do not know whether the defendant, Mr. Allen, is publishing in Calcutta. I do not know who arranges about sending the paper to various places in India; it does not come within my department at all. I have never seen the complainant to my knowledge all my life. I cannot swear as a fact within my own knowledge whether Mr. Allen carries on a business in Calcutta.

Mr. Avetoom proposed to put several other questions as to whether the witness saw Mr. Allen reading the paper in the Bengal Club, but the Magistrate over-ruled them as being in the nature of cross-examination.

Mr. W. H. Fitze, who was summoned by the prosecution, was the next witness called, but, as he did not respond to his name and as it was proved that the subpoena was served on him, the Magistrate issued a warrant of contempt against him. Some discussion then ensued as to further postponement in view of the absence of several witnesses for the prosecution, which was interrupted by the arrival of Mr. Fitze, who apologised for his delay in coming. He was then put into the box and his evidence taken.

Mr. William Henry Fitze, sworn:—I am merchant and agent. I am the Calcutta agent of the Pioneer newspaper. My firm have been agents since the Pioneer was established. We were acting as Calcutta agents of the Pioneer on the 25th, 26th and 27th January last. We in the ordinary course of business receive copies of the Pioneer from Allahabad for sale in Calcutta. I believe we received copies of the Pioneer of the 25th, 26th and 27th January 1889 from Allahabad. We were appointed Calcutta agents of the Pioneer by Mr. Allen. Mr. Allen is the gentleman sitting over there. We also receive advertisements for the Pioneer and send them on to the manager.

Some discussion then ensued as to the postponement, Mr. Avetoom asking that further proceedings be adjourned in order that the prosecution might have an opportunity of calling further witnesses to complete the evidence of publication in Calcutta. Mr. Pugh said that he was anxious to examine Mr. Hearsey; and would not detain him for more than five minutes. He based his application on section 208 of the Code which runs as follows:—"The magistrate shall, when the accused appears or is brought before him, proceed to hear the complainant, if any, and take in manner hereafter provided all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution, or on behalf of the accused, or as may be called for by the Magistrate." The Magistrate declined to do so until the prosecution had closed their case.

After some discussion, the case was adjourned to the 4th of February.—The Statesman.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detain our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

ALFRED.

(BORN AT WANTAGE, IN BERKSHIRE, A. D. 849).

Written A. D. 1849.

By the late Martin Farquhar Tupper.

COME, every true-born Englishman—come, Anglo-Saxons all !
I wake a tune to-day to take and hold your hearts in thrall ;
I sing the king—the Saxon king—the glorious and the great,
The root and spring of everything we love in church and state.

'T is just a thousand years to-day—oh, years are swift and brief—
Since erst uprose in majesty the day-star of our chief.
Since Wantage bred a wondrous child, whom God hath made the cause
Of half the best we boast in British liberties and laws.

Last-born of royal Ethelwolf, he left his island home,
Ulysses-like, to study men and marvels in old Rome ;
And, thence in wrath returning, overthrew the pirate Dane,
And, young as Pitt, at twenty-two began a hero's reign.

Oh ! Guthran swore, and Hubba smote, and sturdy Hinguar stormed,
And still like locusts o'er the land the red marauders swarmed ;
But Alfred was a David to scatter every foe,
The shepherd, psalmist, warrior, king, unblamed in weal and woe.

Aye, hiding with the herdsman, or harping in the camp,
Or earnestly redeeming time beneath the midnight lamp ;
Or ruling on his quiet throne, or fighting in the fen,
Our Alfred was indeed an Agameinnon, king of men !

Unshrinking champion of the right, in patriot strength he stood ;
Declare it, three score fields of fight, and mark it down in blood !
Unflinching chief, unerring judge, he stoutly held the helm ;
Tell out those thirty years of praise, all Albion's happy realm !

A Solomon for wisdom's choice, that he loved learning well
Let Oxford chimes with grateful voice from all their turrets tell ;
A Numa and Justinian too, let every parish sound
His birthday on the merry bells through all the country round.

A Nestor, while in years a youth, he taught as Plato taught ;
A Constantine, a Washington, he fought as Scipio fought ;
A Wellington, his laurelled sword with Peace was glory-gilt,
And Nelson's earliest wooden walls of Alfred's oaks were built !

Oh, gallant Britons ! bless the God who gave you such a prince—
His like was never known before, nor e'er hath been since ;
The fountain of your liberties, your honors, and your health,
The mountain of your sturdy strength, the Ophir of your wealth.

And now arouse thee, royal ghost ! in majesty look round ;
On every shore, in every clime, thy conquering sons are found.
By kingdoms and dominions, by continents and isles,
The Anglo-Saxon realm is fifty hundred thousand miles !

Aye, smile on us and bless us in thy loftiness of love—
The name of Anglo-Saxon is all other names above !
By peoples and by nations, by tribe, and sept, and clan,
Two hundred millions claim it in the family of man !

They claim it, and they claim thee too, their father and their king !
O, mighty shade ! behold the crowds who claim thy sheltering wing !
Thou hast o'ershadowed, like an Alp, the half of this broad earth ;
And where thy shadow falls is light and Anglo-Saxon worth !

The energy, the daring, the cheerfulness, the pride,
The stalworth love of freedom with religion well allied,
The trust in God forever, and the hope in man for time—
These characters they learnt of thee, and stand like thee sublime !

Where'er thy gracious children come, a blessing there they bring ;
The sweet securities of home around that place they cling ;
Warm Comfort, and pure Charity, and Duty's bright blue eye,
And Enterprise, and Industry, are stars upon that sky.

Stout Husbandry amid those fields with soft Contentment meets,
And honest Commerce, early up, is stirring in those streets ;
And all the glories of the sword and honors of the pen
Make us the wonder of the world, the cynosure of men !

And, hark ! upon my harp and tongue a sweeter note of praise—
How should a Saxon leave unsung what best he loves always ?
O dearer, deeper, nobler songs to thrill the heart and mind,
The crown of womanhood belongs to English womankind !

Young maiden, modest as the morn yet glowing like the noon—
True wife, in placid tenderness a lustrous silver moon—
Dear mother, loving unto death and better loved than life—
Where can the wide world match me such a mother, maid, or wife ?

Fair Athelwytha Alfred's own, is still your spirits' queen,
The faithful, the courageous, the tender, the serene,
The pious heroine of home, the solace, friend, and nurse,
The height of self-forgetfulness, the climax of all verse !

And now, great Alfred's countrymen and countrywomen all,
Victoria ! Albert ! graciously regard your minstrel's call !
Up, loyal, gentle, simple folk ! up, first, ye men of Berks,
And give a nation's monument to Alfred's mighty works !

In Anglo-Saxon majesty, simplicity, and strength,
O, children ! build your father's tomb for very shame at length ;
The birthday of your king hath dawned a thousand years this day,
It must not die before you set your seal to what I say.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE new Protestant Church at Bethlehem, in Palestine, was but half finished in 1888, when it was stopped by order of the Sultan. That order has now been rescinded. It is due to the intercession of the German Empress during her recent visit to Constantinople.

THE four columns at the two entrances of the Hall of Fame in the Arsenal are to be capped with busts of Scharnhorst, Stein, Roon and Bismarck. Such is the order of the German Emperor.

AN Anglo-Italian steamship company has contracted for three direct sailings monthly between Naples and London.

AN American claims to have invented an electrical magic lantern by which he can reflect advertisements on low dark clouds overhanging large towns. He is said to have secured several contracts from advertising firms in the New World.

MR. G. F. Watts, R. A., has presented to the Leicester Art Gallery his celebrated picture, "Orlando pursuing the Fata Morgana." It was first exhibited in 1848 at the British Institution. The present is intended to mark the donor's recognition of the services which a Leicester townsman, Mr. John M. Cook, has rendered to "make the nation's name respected by admirable administration and honourable dealing, more especially in Egypt." Mr. Watts has besides a faith in the humanising influence of Art collections.

It is reported from Sheffield that "The bulk of the ivory sold at the periodical sales finds its way here, and enormous quantities are used in the cutlery and silver trades. The growing scarcity and ever-increasing cost of ivory has, however, compelled manufacturers to turn their attention to the production of various substitutes. One of these is celluloid, and thousands of tons of this material is annually worked up in Sheffield. One firm alone, who made a speciality of this article last year, sold upwards of 1,800 dozen table-knives with ivory-grained celluloid handles. Great improvements have been made in the manufacture of this material recently, and certainly the prejudice entertained against it is not shared by Sheffield cutlery manufacturers, who boldly assert that it is superior to ivory in some respects, although it only costs about one-sixth the money. No amount of heat will cause combustion unless the celluloid is brought into direct contact with flame. It stands hot water better, and retains its beautiful creamy polish longer than ivory, for which it seems to be a really perfect substitute so far as Sheffield trades are concerned."

THE "Journal de la Chambre de Commerce de Constantinople" of the 9th November last says that the Egyptian Minister of Finance has definitely decided that the current season must not exceed 15,000 feddans of land in all provinces of Upper and Lower Egypt, for cultivation of tobacco, and that any authority for a larger area must not be granted.

THE port of Jeddah is being improved. A quay has been constructed. A powerful crane for loading and discharging ships has been placed on the quay and a railway laid from the quay to the custom house. This will greatly facilitate the working of ships, and probably give an impetus to the trade of the port.

THE Ministry of Agriculture at Rome estimated the wine crop of Italy in 1889 at 22,200,000 hectolitres, or a deficit of 10,300,000 hectolitres on the crop of 1888. Four-fifths of the crop last year were good, the remainder being of medium quality or bad.

THE fish-tinning industry in Auckland, in New Zealand, according to a local paper, is developing to important dimensions in various parts of the province. In addition to the important tinning establishment of Ewing and Co., in the Kaipara waters, there are now two tinning factories started and in working order at the Bay of Islands. The fish tinned at the latter place are mullet. There is likely to be a great stimulus given to the export of frozen fish to the Australian colonies.

BARON Theodore d'Ungern Sternberg has published an account of his ascent of the extinct volcano Elburz, the crest of which is now capped with eternal snow. He set out from the village of Oransby on August 9. His party consisted of himself, Mr. G. J. Staritsky, a land surveyor, his guide, a Tyrolean named Franz Hofer, four hunters, and one servant. On the second day they reached the first châlet in the valley of Bakhsan, the same place from whence earlier climbers set out on their respective ascents. But the Baron avoided the beaten track—the Terskol gorge, of Mr. Freshfield or the Asaon glacier, of Professor Mushketoff. In five hours and a half the Baron and his party reached an altitude of 10,860 ft., or the limit of perpetual snow. One day was spent in fixing precisely the snow limit, and it was found to vary at different points from that altitude to as much as 12,200 ft. The camp on the second night was pitched at 11,977 ft. above the sea, but the nights were not very cold, the thermometer registering 6 degrees centigrade. The scene presented by the Caucasian range above and the mountain stream of the noisy Bakhsan 4,340 ft. below is described as having been magnificent, while Elburz itself reared its lofty crest into the heavens, whose blue almost approached blackness. The Baron took the precaution to take with him the tent, wraps, and provisions. Favoured by fine weather, he safely crossed the several dangerous crevices between 14,000 ft. and 15,000 ft. At an altitude of 15,368 ft. Staritsky became ill, and when he had proceeded 500 ft. higher he skirted the mountain and made his descent by the well-known track on the northern side. At this point the real difficulties of the ascent began for the Baron and Hofer. Each barrier of snow which promised to be the last was succeeded by another. The Baron thus describes his sensations:—

"There was a perfect calm and the sun burnt us. Not a breath of air came to refresh our lungs, which acted with increasing difficulty. Nothing, absolutely nothing, served to distract our attention in those gloomy solitudes. Only the firm determination to attain our objects sustained our strength, and time seemed infinite in those infinite regions. Our tongues and throats were on fire, and to slake our thirst we had only frozen snow, which gave us momentary relief to be followed by still greater torture."

At the altitude of 17,840 ft. a splendid view was obtained of the Black Sea, but Mount Ararat was nowhere. In the further ascent an icy wind from the west caused the travellers much trouble, filling the ears and mouth with small particles of frozen snow. The travellers reached the summit at an altitude of 18,469 ft., and they found a crater on the top of Elburz. The Baron states that there are remains of two craters on the summit of the west cone, which is the true crest of Elburz. Baron Sternberg remained only 10 minutes on the top, but even in that brief space he was slightly frost-bitten. The descent was attended with much danger, as the cord had been left with Staritsky, and when Baron Sternberg reached the pass he did not find his companions, with whom he had also left his tent, wraps, and provisions. He however found the hunters at an altitude of 11,370 ft., where they encamped for the night on a bed of lava and by the shores of a frozen lake, but without coverings or fire. Staritsky was not found till the following day, when it was discovered that instead of descending he had passed the night in the pass, where he would probably have died but for the fact that he had the tent and furs.

A BOMBAY report says that the Secretary of State has accorded to Mrs. Crawford and her daughter subsistence allowances or pensions of £300 and £70 per annum.

A CIRCULAR has been issued by the Government of Bengal, ruling that no officer attached to the Secretariat or any of its connected offices shall become correspondent of any newspaper without the permission in writing of the Chief Secretary as well as that of the head of the office to which he belongs.

THE Bengal-Nagpur Railway between Purulia and Chakradharpur, a distance of 72 miles, has been opened for goods traffic. That makes 120 miles opened since the 15th December. There still remain 140 miles to connect Nagpur with Assensole.

THE Mohunt of Tirupati has been completely humbled. After a long and protracted investigation, he has been found guilty and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. To enable the prisoner to appeal, the Sessions Judge, on representation, made the first month's imprisonment simple. The Assessors did not consider the case proved, but the Judge was fully convinced of the guilt of the accused, and characterized the Assessor's verdict as perverse.

THE Cheap Passage movement threatens to fall through. Messrs. William Watson & Co. have resigned the agency. They consider the scheme not practicable and the rates of passage money ruling between Europe and India quite equitable, regard being had to the limited traffic and the numerous departures.

SIR LEPEL and Lady Griffin have arrived in India. They pass through Calcutta to Burma.

THE Parsees have beat the English team—Mr. Vernon's Eleven—by four wickets.

THE Rupee has been valued at one shilling and five pence for adjustment of financial transactions between the British and Indian Governments for the next financial year.

IN the late investigation into the case of tampering with question papers in the B. L. Examination of the Madras University, material assistance was rendered to the Registrar by several graduates. That the examination of the University might be beyond suspicion, a re-examination has been ordered.

THERE are other scandals in Madras. Large tracts of Zemindari land in the delta of the Kristna were under concealed irrigation through the collusion of subordinate officials, thereby causing a loss of revenue to Government, estimated at half a lac annually. A great portion of the loss will be recovered by penal assessment.

THE Madras Budget is more than ever highly satisfactory. The revenue for 1890-91 is estimated at 387 lacs. and the expenditure at 288½ lacs. But for a minus entry of 17½ lacs on account of a special contribution to the Imperial Treasury, and an expenditure of 4½ lacs on account of the Ganjam famine, there would have been a considerable surplus.

AT Thursday's meeting of the Calcutta Corporation, Babu Amarendra-Nath Chatterjee carried his amendment that "having regard to their importance, the building regulations be referred back to the Bye-laws Committee for further consideration and report, with reference to the suggestions and directions of the general public bodies who were officially invited to express their opinion thereon." The Bye-laws Committee, it was hoped, would expedite their report as much as possible, in view of the great practical difficulties now felt, not only by the executive but also the builders in the absence of proper regulations. The other bye-laws referring to drainage, cess-pools, privies, the markets, &c., were considered seriatim and passed with slight alterations.

The proposal to give Mr. Kimber 5 per cent. on the sum of Rs. 1,00,100 for supervising the construction of suburban water-works, gave rise to considerable discussion, and the meeting ultimately agreed to the 5 per cent. commission on the cost of the work done before the amalgamation. The Chairman's rider to include the value of the pipes in such cost was lost. The raid against the Printing Department continues. If the Department is not to be abolished, the men must be replaced—very likely by others from the suburbs. A Committee of twelve Commissioners to enquire into the working of the printing department and report on any changes in the personnel of the establishment and other things likely to improve its efficiency, was moved and carried unanimously.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE rejection of the Socialist Bill by the Reichstag seems to have caused some disappointment to the Government which had pressed for a division. The Emperor William in his speech from the throne at the closing of the Reichstag promised the introduction of further laws for the benefit of the working classes, and expressed a hope that these classes should learn to look to Parliament, not for violent measures, but for the improvement of their condition.

The military forces of China and the condition of the Russian forts on the Chinese frontier, were the subject of discussion at a conference, held at St. Petersburg, at which officers of superior rank and several Grand-Dukes were present.

The President of the United States, in receiving the Ambassador of the Brazilian Republic, congratulated him on the peaceful change that had been made in the régime, and professed the most friendly feelings with the new Republic.

Count Andrassy is reported to be in a moribund condition. The Grand Duke Nicholas is suffering from cancer, and has been ordered to Nice.

A firman of the Sultan lately promulgated in Crete is reported to have restored quiet.

A serious riot of university students is reported from Cracow. The military had to be called out, and charged with the bayonet, one student being wounded.

HER Majesty the Queen of England is expected to be at Aix-le-Bain in March.

A telegram calls the late storms in the United Kingdom "phenomenal." The floods have destroyed bridges and carried away large numbers of sheep and cattle. Huge seas were washing the coasts, doing damage to the esplanades, piers, &c., to the extent of thousands of pounds.

Mr. Justice Manisty was early in the week reported to have had a stroke of paralysis while on the Bench. There was some temporary improvement, but again there has been a relapse. Four other judges are also disabled through various illnesses. Another notability, Sir William Gull, the eminent physician, has had a stroke of paralysis. He has since died.

One million of Russian gold was paid into the Bank of England on a single day, the 26th January.

Private settlement of Mr. Benzon's case having failed, he has been examined by a Magistrate, before whom he made a clean breast of his embarrassments, and admitted having forged the cheque for one thousand pounds in the hope of recovering his losses by gambling.

A movement is on foot for a memorial to Lord Napier of Magdala and a Committee has been formed to invite funds.

Dr. Tanner has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for slandering Mr. Arthur Smith Barry, member for South Huntingdon, and calling him "a hound and cowardly bastard" at a meeting of the Cork Board of Guardians.

Lord Wolseley, in an article in an American magazine, condemns the uniforms of the English army, and likens generals in British uniform to "dressed monkeys."

In an interview with a reporter of the Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Bradlaugh spoke of the great benefit he had derived from his Indian trip, though he still suffered from petty ailments. Of the Congress he evidently carried the most favorable impressions. He said that the varied and representative character of the Congress had more than ever convinced him of the ignorance of Englishmen about India and its affairs.

THE weather in Calcutta continues chilly since the rains on the night of the 24th January. We are informed that on the 20th January, in Zillah Bagoora, Thana Shibgunge, it rained and hailed violently. The hailstones kept the ground for three days without melting. We hope the meteorological reporter will notice the fact. The recent rains appear to have been general all over the country, and brought on seasonable weather in the fag-end of winter which has been of abnormal warmth this year.

The Prince arrived at Lahore on Saturday the 25th January. The reception, as elsewhere, was official. The Nawab of Bhawalpur, the Raja of Nabha, and other Chiefs were present. The roads to Government House were gaily decorated. In the forenoon, His Royal Highness was engaged in exchanging visits with the Native Chiefs, and in the afternoon, accompanied by the Lieutenant-Governor and Staff, paid a visit to the city. From the Delhi Gate, the party mounted elephants and proceeded on these to various points of interest, including Ranjit Sing's tomb, where the priests sang a special hymn in honor of the Prince. In the evening there were fireworks and illuminations which His Royal Highness witnessed from one of the bastions of the Fort, after which a procession was formed to go back through the illuminated streets which presented a most picturesque appearance. A conversation was afterwards held at the Montgomery Hall, where Native Chiefs and officers of Native regiments mustered strong, many of the latter being introduced to the Prince who touched their swordhilts. During the evening an address was presented on behalf of the European and Native community. The address was enclosed in a handsome gold casket, and referred to the rapid progress made in the Panjab in the extension of railways, the advance of education, the pacification of the Khyber tribes and in other directions, during the period of 14 years which has now elapsed since the visit of the Prince of Wales. The Prince in his reply spoke of the Queen's immense interest and sympathy towards her Indian subjects, of which His Royal Highness said he could give no better idea than by telling them that, notwithstanding her inability to visit her Indian Empire, which she never ceases to deplore, Her Majesty has, by the greatest diligence, acquired some knowledge of the Hindustani language. The Prince then said:—

"Other provinces of India may be richer than the Punjab, some may present scenes of greater beauty, but there is no province in India that can boast as the Punjab can that it is the bulwark of defence against foreign aggression, or that can be termed with some significance the guardroom of our Eastern Empire. As the Punjab is one of our greatest recruiting grounds, so it is also the home or place of service of a large portion of the Army in Northern India; and it is particularly gratifying to me to think that it is here, in this soldier's land, that I shall see, at Muridki a force of cavalry such as is seldom brought together in any part of the world."

On the 28th, a Grand Parade of all troops was held at the Muridki Camp. The troops, numbering 7,000, were after the arrival of the Prince, walked, trotted and galloped in the usual manner. In the walk past, the cavalry of Patiala, Bhawalpur, Jhind, Nabha and Kapurthala took part and presented a creditable appearance. There was then the gallop past, after which the troops formed into line in review order. The Commander-in-Chief, in presence of the Prince, then addressed the officers, some of whom were then presented to the Prince. The Prince left Muridki for Peshwar the next morning.

At His Royal Highness's arrival at Peshawar, on the 30th, he was met at the railway station by Colonel Ommay, Commissioner, Colonel Warburton, Political Officer for the Khyber, General Keen, and other heads of departments. The forenoon was spent in driving through the city. At Gor Katri, the Prince alighted, and the Municipal Commissioners who had assembled were introduced to His Royal Highness. From this place the Prince had a fine view of the surrounding country. The next morning, the Royal party started for Jamrud, where His Royal Highness presented the medals for the Black Mountain Expedition to Major Aslam Khan and other native officers and men of the Khyber Rifles. To curtail the ceremony, only ten men had their medals pinned on by the Prince who then addressed them speaking in high terms of the bravery shown by them in the expedition as well as the alacrity with which they had volunteered for the service.

After a ride through the Khyber, and meeting the Chiefs of the Shinwaris at Lundi Kotla, the party returned to Jamrud where Major Aslam Khan provided a sumptuous tea, and thence to Peshawar where there were dinner and theatricals in the evening. The Prince started at midnight for Rawalpindi.

In September 1888, the Committee of the Caspian Fisheries paid into the Astrakhan branch of the Russian State Bank the sum of 5,000 roubles (about £500) for the discovery of means for the protection of fish against infection, and for the treatment of people suffering from the effects following the consumption of poisonous fish.

The prize is open to men of science irrespective of nationality who will be able, within 5 years, to

(1) Determine by careful analysis the physical and chemical nature of fish poison.

(2) Investigate by experiments on animals the action of fish poison on the heart, circulation of the blood, digestive organs and nervous system.

(3) Determine the rapidity of the absorption of the poison in the digestive channels.

(4) Ascertain and describe the symptoms which distinguish healthy fish from those in a diseased condition.

(5) Indicate the measure to be adopted for preserving fish against the development of fish poison in them.

(6) Discover an antidote for and the nature of the medical assistance to be rendered in cases of fish poisoning.

Essays on the subject may be written either in the Russian, Latin, French, English or German languages and to be sent in print or manuscript, not later than the 1st (13th) January 1893, to Ministry of Imperial Domains, which will submit the compositions to a commission consisting of the Chairman of the Medical Council of the Ministry of the Interior as President, two members appointed by the Academy of Science, one by the Military Medical Academy and another by the Society for the Preservation of Public Health.

The commission will report the result of the competition to the Minister of Imperial Domains not later than the 1st (13th) January 1894, and the Minister will, in accordance with the conclusions of the commission, give necessary orders for the payment of the premium to the author of the essay or work which shall be acknowledged as containing the most satisfactory solution of the propounded problem. At the same time, the non-solution of Nos. 4 and 5 of the foregoing questions will not be considered as an obstacle to the award of the premium in full, should the other four questions be satisfactorily dealt with. In case it be considered that not one of the essays or works submitted has solved the problem in its most essential parts, the commission may award as a secondary prize the sum which shall have accrued as interest during the five years on the sum of 5,000 roubles to the author of the work which shall have satisfactorily dealt with a portion of the programme, and which may facilitate a further study of the nature of fish poison.

A POINT, which was regarded in some quarters with doubt, arose in connection with the Pioneer first libel case. The point in question is, whether the legal advisers of the journal had any power to interfere with the course of events in the High Court so as to save the case from being wrecked by an objection which they and their clients had tacitly agreed to waive. True, the objection regarding the sufficiency of proof of publication was raised voluntarily by the trying Judge although when the charge against Mr. Dare, the publisher, had been previously dropped as an act of courtesy, it had been dropped on the clear understanding that responsibility for publication would be frankly admitted. But, it is urged, the defendants were prepared to keep their promise, only the Judge would not let them, and they were powerless to set aside his Lordship's objection. This does not sound very straightforward. As for their being powerless under the circumstances, a single word admitting responsibility would have set the wheels of the law revolving in a moment. That this is so is shown beyond a doubt by the procedure in Lord Euston's case at Bow Street the other day. Mr. George Lewis, on opening the case, began to marshal the usual evidence of publication. He had actually a solicitor present, to swear that he had bought a copy of the offending paper at a certain spot, on a certain date. The old farce had begun, when Mr. Lockwood, Q.C., promptly cut it short. "It is unnecessary," he said, "to proceed with the evidence, as the publication of the article is not disputed, or the ownership of the paper." Had these words been spoken in the High Court, the fanciful, overwrought objection would have vanished and the country would have been spared the reproach of a litigant wandering like a lost spirit from Court to Court seeking a fair trial. The position is certainly anomalous. It is generally admitted that the High Court decision is unsound, and yet, in courtesy, it may be deemed binding by obsequious subordinates. On the other hand, while a trial is thus barred, there is nothing in the law that can prevent the complainant from keeping on asking for a trial till he has exhausted the round of all the Courts in India. It is plain, therefore, that the position adopted by Mr. Justice Norris should, for the sake of the law, be argued fully and before a full bench, so that what at present is a perfect anomaly may be authoritatively decided one way or the other. This could be done by the Local Government instructing the Crown lawyers to apply for a hearing on this very point with respect to Mr. Currie's ruling in Howrah.

MR. Allen, like Mr. Chesney, offered to admit publication in the case now pending before Mr. Marsden. But the prosecution, warned by previous experience, has taken time till the 4th inst. to produce full evidence of publication in Calcutta.

ON the 27th January last, Captain Hearsey filed in the Calcutta High Court, a suit for Rs. 50,000 damages against Mr. Allen, managing proprietor of the Pioneer. If the suit is allowed to proceed, Mr. Gasper will have another opportunity of cross-examining the Captain on his whole career.

THE following estimates have been sanctioned for the next official year in Bengal.

Salary of the Lieutenant-Governor ...	Rs. 96,000
Staff and household of the Lieutenant-Governor ..	30,500
Tour expenses... ..	34,000
Legislative Council	22,800
Civil Secretariats	4,88,000
Board of Revenue	2,73,000
Commissioners	5,21,000
Civil Offices of Accounts and Audit	98,000
	Rs. 15,63,300

The Accountant-General had estimated Rs. 15,71,000 for the said purposes.

Orders have been passed to include in the next year's budget Rs. 17,000 for a grant to the District Charitable Society in case it is decided to extend the compound of the Leper Asylum in Calcutta or to remove it to a more suitable site, and to exclude a grant Rs. 500 in aid of the Sailor's Home at Chittagong.

THE whole of the British troops quartered in Fort William has been told off for certain manoeuvres down the river from the afternoon of Friday the 14th to Monday the 17th. The general officer commanding the Presidency Division has invited the Calcutta Volunteers to move into Barracks during the said period and undertake all duties and guard in the Fort. Here is an opportunity, which is rarely offered, for our Volunteers to do regular duty.

W. BLOCKLOCK, Vice-Consul for the United States in Samoa, complains to the Washington State Department that the largest amount of cotton goods there is of British manufacture, the reason being that the principal trade is in British hands, and the only steam connexion is with British colonies. American cottons, however, are superior, and American prints especially are gaining favor every day, being the only goods of this class that can be guaranteed for fast colors.

FOR conversion to Christianity, the late Prosonno Coomar Tagore disinherited his only son Ganendro Mohun Tagore and willed away his vast property to his kinsmen Jotindro Mohun Tagore and others. The Christian Courts to which Ganendro appealed gave an estate for life to Jotindra only with remainder to Ganendra absolutely. The last mail has brought the intelligence that Ganendra died on the 5th January, from an attack of paralysis. He leaves, we believe, only one daughter and a number of creditors, who had advanced him money on the strength of the Privy Council judgment in Tagore vs. Tagore.

It is an ill wind that blows no body good. Even the present rate of exchange, trying as it is to all and sundry, affords an illustration. Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, the retired Judge of the High Court, will draw his pension in India in sterling pounds, not in depreciated rupees.

THE vacancy caused in the Syndicate of the Calcutta University, by the translation of the Hon'ble Dr. Gurudas Banerjee to the Vice-Chancellery, has been filled by Mr. Anand Mohan Bose, the Mofussil practising barrister. Two other names—those of Father Neut and Baboo Bankim Chunder Chatterjee—were proposed, but the meeting, under previous priming, was in no mood to discuss the respective merits of the three men, and voted solid for the Mofussil man.

THE Faculty of Law of the Calcutta University has recommended Pundit Prannath Saraswati for the next Tagore Law Professorship. He is exceptionally fortunate in securing the nomination in the first year of his candidature.

THE Maharaja and Maharani of Cooch Behar gave a Garden Party at the Woodlands on Thursday afternoon which was largely attended. Their Excellencies the Viceroy and the Marchioness of Lansdowne were present.

MR. Justice Wilson has been appointed to hear Original appeals, the Chief Justice taking his place on the Original Side for two or three days.

NAWAB Munirul Mulk, the last surviving son of the late Salar Jung I. is dead. He had been suffering for some time and died on the 26th January of pneumonia. He was 26 years of age.

THERE have been some interesting weddings in Calcutta. The other day, at the Armenian Church, Mr. A. T. Apar, M.A., L.L.M. Cantab., barrister-at-law, was joined to Miss Balthazar in holy wedlock. After the ceremony, the party adjourned to No. 3, Camac Street, Mr. Apar's residence, where the Maharaja of Durbhanga presented a costly diamond spray to the bride. Among Mr. Apar's native friends, Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadoor and Mr. Abdur Rahman, his son, were present.

A notable feature in the wedding of Mr. Swinhoe's daughter which was solemnized on Wednesday was the presence of a numerous party of native gentlemen who had been invited on the occasion. Mr. Swinhoe spared nothing to make his guests happy. There were nautches, and native confectionery provided.

NAWAB Abdool Luteef Bahadur gave a grand dinner to the Mahomedan community on Sunday last, in celebration of the wedding of his sons. About a thousand guests sat down to a feast served up in right Oriental style.

IN MEMORIAM. ROBERT KNIGHT.

SUDDEN the Indian sky is overcast,
And all the land is shrouded deep in gloom ;
A wail goes forth from many an Indian home,
And tears from old and young are streaming fast.

For where is he, our fearless champion bold,
India's unflinching advocate and friend,
Whose lofty purpose and whose cherish'd end,
Were—Justice, Truth, and Righteousness 't' uphold ?

Alas, the gen'rous soul is now no more !
Hush'd the large heart, whose love our hearts had won !
O noble Knight, thy mortal warfare o'er,
O weary pilgrim, thy long journey done,

Rest, from thy loving toil and labour rest,
Repose in peace in thy Redeemer's breast !

RAM SHARMA.

MR. KNIGHT

As delineated amongst the Elect in Ram Sharma's Last Day.

And now comes one who, in a madding world
By passions torn, and full of jealousies,
And all uncharitableness,—amidst
The juggles of diplomacy, the pranks
Of power, and summersaults of clowns in brief
Authority enrobed,—all calmly, quietly,
And silently, much noble work achieved
In loyalty to Conscience and his God.
Ah ! who now cares for either ? Politics
Knoweth no God, and, surely, 'tis no man's Business to mind the other ! And doth not

The world without both get on all the same—
 Nay, better far without such hind' rances?
 What more clear than that Vice in purple shines,
 While Virtue goes about in sorriest rags?
 So reason Vanity Fair's blind frequenters!
 Villainous inference from premise false!
 But spurning the vile Gospel of the damned,
 With ken beyond the hazy, fleeting Present,
 And fixed unalterably on Jehovah's
 Blazing throne, on the Christ that bled for man,
 He thro' the weary years did consecrate
 His mind and all its powers to his kind.
 A dauntless Knight! he battled gallantly
 For his weak brethren in an alien land,
 And smote the smiters with a heavy hand,
 His potent pen, e'en like Ithuriel's spear,
 No falsehood base, or unctuous hypocrisy
 Enduring. Champion, lover, friend of Truth,
 Such life as thine, so good and beautiful,
 So full of love and human-heartedness,
 Springing up e'en midst influences vile,
 Like a white lily from wild sedge and slush,—
 Is truly sweet and grateful to the Lord!

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1890.

ROBERT KNIGHT.

A NOBLE spirit has passed away. A man of rare personality is gone. India's devoted, loving champion,—the never-failing friend of the poor and oppressed,—the Knight sans peur et sans reproche of the Indian Press is no more. After a somewhat long struggle with a complication of liver and other complaints, he expired on Monday last. That the end could not be put off long was anticipated. Yet did it seem to come quite too soon, and it was not wholly expected, when it came. The change to Darjeeling had done some good; only the benefit did not continue, and he had to be brought down to Calcutta, but his condition was not regarded quite so critical, and it was even hoped that a change to England might bring him round. It had accordingly been decided that in March he should return home. Fate, however, had determined otherwise. The symptoms took a worse turn, and weak as he already was, he was prostrated, and rather suddenly succumbed. The veteran journalist almost died in harness—a martyr to work. The perplexities of his position had kept him to his work in the midst of illness, almost to the last. An enquiry into the origin of his life-long perplexities and embarrassments would open up a view of the brightest side of his life. A thoroughly good man, full of trustful confidence in men, of ardent religious tendencies, he could not hear of a brother man's distress but his soul would flow over, with generous impulses, and he must run to the sufferer's rescue, often to his own peril. All Mr. Knight's difficulties were the self-inflicted penalty of his self-forgetful generosity. He was a great publicist, but he was perhaps a greater man. It is an irreparable loss. His place will not be easily filled. A rare influence has departed from journalism. He was a finished public man—of great knowledge and wide experience of affairs. For reading, he had a passionate thirst. His collection of books, especially on finance, currency, statistics and cognate subjects, was of the rarest. As a writer he wielded a powerful, trenchant style that struck home like cold steel. He was an ardent hater of wrong and injustice, and the staunch friend of the weak and downtrodden. He was all this as a publicist. But as a man, his claims on our regard are higher still. It is the combination of his personal and public virtues that was the secret of his marvellous influence. Great has been our loss. Its extent will not be fully appreciated now. As time goes on, it will be seen in its true perspective.

The veteran dies a martyr to work. He literally worked himself to his grave. The Indian Statesman did not exhaust all his energies. He had other literary as well as business avocations. Work was a sort of religion to him—next to duty to his God. He worked himself to death. And yet if one man could stand such strain better than another, that man was Mr. Robert Knight. His was a wonderful vitality. His capacity for work was boundless. Alas, work alone would not have precipitated the catastrophe! Work under the inspiring smiles of fortune would have rather tended to still more season his natural powers of endurance. But Work and Care proved too much, and he succumbed.

The whole country mourns for Robert Knight. Never had a journalist so won the affections of those for whom he labored. His loss is felt almost as a personal bereavement. His name is a household word to all sections of the Indian people. His popularity is as real as it is extensive. A man of the rarest gifts of head and heart, his writings sank deep into the consciousness of the people. This wonderful popularity had a moral basis. A popularity which has stood the test of nearly half a century—grown steadily in depth and volume—never waned—not once passed under a temporary shadow in an eventful, public career in which he necessarily made many enemies—must have been kept alive by character. His goodness was unique. His benevolence bordered on the romantic. His rectitude had conquered the frailties of man's lower nature. Those who had the privilege of knowing him, know of what fine elements he was made. The virulent opposer of wrongs—the hard hitting critic of public men and measures—was the sweetest, the tenderest-hearted of men. He had too much of the milk of human kindness. His benevolence was of the patriarchal type. He would thrust his good offices upon those whom he found in distress. He gave help unasked. He would ask you about the state of your affairs, when delicacy sealed your own lips, and he would move heaven and earth for your good, not unoften at the sacrifice of his own. Had there been more of the world in his nature, he would not have died now. Indeed, as we have said, he succumbed to over-work, to anxiety, and to embarrassments. And all his embarrassments which he valiantly tried to cope with and which he had in a manner conquered at last, were the effects of his self-sacrificing goodness and benevolence. He incurred personal liabilities that he might help others. His chivalrous support of protégés—his unworldliness—his simplicity and almost unbusiness-like ways in his dealings with the hard world—brought on all his later perplexities.

Mr. Knight came out to India at the age of twenty-one in connection with some mercantile firm in Bombay which he soon quitted for journalism. He became editor of the Poona Observer, and in a short time made his mark. Now came the Indian Mutiny, and unhinged the Anglo-Indian mind. The celebrated Dr. Buist was at this time editor as well as part proprietor of the Bombay Times. Dr. Buist had been a great friend of the natives, but the Mutiny turned him against them, as it did so many others. He began to propagate the wildest proposals of vengeance upon the people. With the zeal in a new faith, he devoted his undoubted talents to stir up the worst feelings of the Government and of private Europeans against the natives. The people of Bombay were alarmed. Hindus, Mahomedans and Parsis, —all cast about for a way to stop the evil.² The flood of bad bile which the infuriated doctor kept pouring forth every day must be checked at all hazards. The means was found, and the discovery was characteristic of commercial Bombay. They set their heads together, and they began to buy up the shares of the Bombay Times as they were available in the market. In a short time something less than half these shares passed to their hands. They had managed this so quietly as to excite no suspicions. At any rate, Dr. Buist who had no inconsiderable interest in the property knew nothing of the coup that was to be sprung upon him. Having now gained a hold on the business, they convened a meeting of shareholders to consider the policy of the paper and the conduct of the editor. They condemned the policy of Dr. Buist and resolved to remove him. Dr. Buist became mad with rage, and having the paper yet in his hands, inveighed against the new shareholders in the foulest terms of abuse. This, however, only precipitated the crisis. Dr. Buist was removed, and Mr. Knight was called to his place. Comparatively a new and untried man, with no experience of India to speak of, Mr. Knight had no small reward in this responsible appointment for the way in which he had conducted his first journalistic duties in this country. It was as signal a proof of confidence as the native community of Bombay could well give. Nor on his part did he disappoint them. Upon taking charge of the Bombay Times, he gave it the imperial name it still bears. The Times of India thrived well in his hands, and rose to a higher plane of politics. Indeed, in all Mr. Knight's long and varied journalistic career, provincialism and narrowness have never characterized his concerns. The Times of India was in name as in substance a paper for the country. During the indigo riots on our side of the country and the sitting of the Indigo Commission, no Bengal journal, save the then Hindoo Patriot stood up so manfully for the cause of the oppressed tenants as did this Bombay paper. During the Mutiny his conduct of the paper did much to moderate, if not, to turn back, the tide of angry feelings which ran high against the natives. The Times of India in his hands made itself felt by the powers that be. Many were his journalistic triumphs. His exposure of the Inam Commission at last brought the Bombay Government round to his side. His services to Native States were simply invaluable. When he had once espoused a cause, he never rested till he had won. He would keep harping on the same string. His earnestness was phenomenal. A notable instance of this was the pertinacity with which he advocated the reform of the currency. The cause of bimetalism could not have a more powerful advocate, and before his death he had his reward in the acceptance which that cause had commenced to meet with at the hands of its late opponents. For journalism he had a natural penchant. His head was full of grand projects. He once meditated starting a Times of Asia. It was during his connection with the Bombay Times that he projected and successfully carried out the system of telegraphic communication between this country and Europe, which he afterwards sold to Reuter. No better proof of the fertility of his resources and of his enterprise could possibly be given. He was really marked out for the calling of a journalist, and if he may be called the Father of the Indian Press, he was also the founder of the Indian Telegraphic Service. After conducting the Times with his characteristic power for some years, he severed his connection with it, and started the Bombay Statesman. Mr. Knight then left for England, and so high did he now stand in the esteem of the Bombay people for all his services during the Mutiny as well as in connection with the Inam Commission, that they paid him public honor on his departure and presented him with a purse of a lac of rupees. Mr. Knight in leaving the editorship of the Times of India, likewise sold his proprietary rights in the journal. The Statesman in Bombay he also sold afterwards. He now came to Bengal. Here he tried to turn his great knowledge of finance and political economy to account, and started the Indian Economist, the Indian Agriculturist and other journals. This was a new field in journalism which his especial knowledge admirably fitted him to occupy. The ability with which he conducted these journals and his exceptional knowledge of the hard subjects of economy and statistics soon established his fame in Bengal as they had done in Bombay. Sir George Campbell, then Lieutenant-Governor of these provinces, had known him from a long time before, and had observed his ability. It was probably at the instance of Sir George, now at the head of the Provincial Government, that Mr. Knight came to Bengal. Sir George Campbell determined to have the benefit of his knowledge and counsels in the general administration of his territory. The post of Assistant-Secretary in the Agricultural Department of the Government of Bengal was purposely created to make room for him and it was offered to Mr. Knight. Mr. Knight's incumbency in this office was a short one. In fact he was never made for office, and it is no wonder he hurriedly emancipated himself from its trammels to be free to criticise the then Indian administration. Sir Richard Temple was at this time the Financial Member of the Government of India under Lord Northbrook, and some articles having appeared in the Indian Agriculturist in condemnation of the famine policy of Lord Northbrook, Sir Richard Temple, the real adviser of that policy, and then the exponent of the wisdom of the East in the heyday of his influence with that Viceroy, did his best to set the Supreme and the Local Government by the ears. It was represented that the criticisms of The Indian Agriculturist really belonged to Sir George Campbell, and not to Mr. Knight. Much bad blood was excited between the two Governments and, at Sir Richard Temple's suggestion, the Government of India entered upon a course of vindictive persecution of the Government of Bengal. The real victim, however, was Mr. Knight, the editor, the heaven-born Civilian's only loss being that of Mr. Knight's counsels in his administration. Mr. Knight's Agriculturist was started and maintained, as such technical journals alone could be, with a handsome Government subsidy. The first act of persecution was suddenly to reduce this subsidy to half, and subsequently to stop it altogether. Mr. Knight threw up his place in the Secretariat in a huff. Made for journalism, he could not bear the restraints of office. There was much in the policy of Government which he condemned, and which he ardently wished to show up in its true colours. The loss to Sir George Campbell's administration was gain to journalism and to India. Mr. Knight was now free to devote his whole talents to his own proper vocation. He again started the Statesman, and after establishing its popularity upon a stable basis, returned home leaving Mr. Riach, already on his staff, in charge of the paper. Nor in England, was he inactive. With the cooperation of his friend Colonel Osborne, he started and conducted for a short time the London Statesman with the object of informing and interesting the English people in Indian questions.

Mr. Knight began and ended his journalistic career with the same political creed. His principles never changed—his sympathies for the people of India never cooled. This is no small proof of high character. The difficulties of such a singular position to an Englishman in the midst of the hostile camp of Englishmen may easily be conceived. His sacrifices for maintaining it were incalculable. The temptations to change, few can resist. But he heroically braved all. The temptations of the world—the weakness of the flesh failed to prevail. In every struggle—and his whole life must have been a series of such struggles—the conscience invariably won. These were the triumphs of the spirit, to be followed by as great political triumphs which rewarded his pen.

Such was the man whose death we mourn. In the present sorrow, let India but remember a tithe of what he has done and what he has suffered in her cause, and her heart will overflow with loving admiration and gratitude.

THE JURY TRIAL IN THE MOFUSSIL.

AMONG the many demands of the Congresswallahs is the extension of the Jury system throughout India. I don't think any one who has a little experience of the working of this system in the Mofussil would recommend it generally for all the places in India. In some Presidency towns where able, impartial, and intelligent jurors are available, it may work well and with advantage. But in most of the Mofussil stations it has proved a total failure, nay, a scandal. I think nothing can be more unfortunate for any section of the community than to have a set of stupid, partial, and dishonest jurymen. In many cases, within my knowledge, murderers, forgers, and other criminals have been let off, because the Jury were gained over somehow or other. The present tendency of the High Court is not to interfere when the Jury have acquitted an accused. In the Mofussil, the Jury are selected without the least regard to their education, intelligence, respectability, or other qualifications. A petty Muktear, a common Bunnia, an illiterate Chamar, an unprincipled amla, an ignorant Zemindar are usually selected. There are many Jurors who are as much competent as a scavenger understands the science of engineering. They cannot understand even what the witnesses depose, not to speak of their demeanour and other delicate and difficult matters. They doze all the time the pleaders address the Court or argue. Sometimes the foreman is the entire Jury, and his opinion is unhesitatingly adopted by the other Jurors. Often times, the Judge's opinion is the verdict of the Jury, and they openly declare it as their own.

On one occasion, a man was charged with culpable homicide before a Magistrate and discharged. Immediately after, he received a summons to serve as a Juror in another similar case in the Court of Sessions. The pleader who had defended him in the lower Court was engaged in the Sessions case. He knew how to work, and got out his client scot-free.

In some districts not very far from the metropolis, they know how to value a juror's vote, and jurors are known to make a good round sum during the Sessions. The rates are sometimes as low as Rs. 10, if no one bids from the opposite side. My own belief is that in such a district any person who can spend Rs. 5,000 can easily murder without impunity any poor person who himself is, or his relations are, unable to fee the jury. If the jury system is to be retained at all, the mode of selection at random without any regard to qualification should be given up, and the selection made on some fixed and solid principle. Education, respectability and honesty must be the first qualifications in a juror. If we cannot get such men, the system ought to be abolished at once. It is far better to be tried by an honest and experienced Judge than by half a dozen donkeys. The High Court says that 5 men's judgment is better than one man's judgment, but it does not know to what class those 5 men belong and what is their status or qualification. Let it be a rule that the juror should always be selected from among the Pleaders, respectable Muktears, Honorary Magistrates, Municipal Commissioners, Members of the District or Local Boards, or other respectable persons. If you want a good institution you ought to find the proper persons to work it satisfactorily.

I do not believe that my countrymen of superior classes take such interest in public matters that they would willingly undertake the duty of jurors, which is not at all palatable and in most cases is very inconvenient. Our good men try their best to get their names out of the Jury list, because they do not like this sort of troublesome work.

When this is the state of things, how can we aspire to have all western institutions introduced into our country, for which it is not now prepared? It is all very good to talk in meetings and deliver speeches upon the merits of a system of which you have little practical knowledge or experience.

If the agitators had been aware of the miscarriage of justice which is taking place in some districts almost daily, on account of this scandalous jury system, they would have never asked for its wholesale introduction in a country where the Honorary Magistrates' Benches have not as yet proved a success in all cases. In some districts, these Benches are the centre and source of all sorts of injustice and scandal and are mostly presided over by such men whose general education and knowledge of law are most miserable, and who are mostly guided by private motives and recommendations in deciding cases. Their courts are nurseries for all sorts of malicious and false charges, for the purposes of vexation and extortion. Yet in 10 years not a single person has been committed for perjury or for instituting a false complaint. These Anari Magistrates as they are called by the masses have been imposed or rather forced upon the people, who do not want them and bitterly complain of their doings. These men have neither courage to punish, nor do they punish adequately to check crime. They are afraid of Badmashes and are often anxious to oblige them, for their own safety. Each instance of their being insulted in public courts by the suitors shews that they command no respect or confidence from the public who vindicate their wrath against them by wicked and improper means. When they feel compunction at the injustice done to them, they summarily take their revenge. These instances are becoming common, and they are sad commentaries upon the so called success of Local Self-Government. Municipal Commissioners have been assaulted by the rate payers for their misconduct, but the matter was kept out of court, and for more than one reason. Men who have little time to devote for the purpose, are appointed Honorary Magistrates.

I think there are many experienced Judges who have repeatedly given their opinion against the present jury system and are well aware of what I have written in this letter. We must ourselves first judge what is good or bad for us before troubling the members of Parliament with our grievances, whether real or imaginary. When most of our rulers in this country do not yet know what are our wants and grievances, it will be a century before the M. Ps. will know our real condition during a hurried tour of a few weeks or months.

A JUROR.

THE NAVAL AND MILITARY POWERS IN 1889-90.

The relative strength of the five Great Naval Powers of Europe has not much altered during the year 1889. The adoption by Great Britain of a new programme of naval construction has not yet had time to produce its effect; and although during the past twelve months we have completed for sea a considerable number of battleships, armoured cruisers, and protected cruisers, all the other Powers, with the exception of Germany, have done likewise. When the Naval Defence Act shall have begun to produce its fruit, our available maritime fighting force as compared with that of other nations will, according to present appearances, occupy a very commanding position; and even at the present moment its strength is far from unsatisfactory. We have consulted and carefully collated official documents bearing upon the subject, and from these we gather that in the event of an outbreak of war, say, to-morrow, we should be able to send to sea within a month, all ready for action, 44 modern battleships and belted cruisers to cope, in case of necessity, with France's 23, Russia's 15, Germany's 12, or Italy's 10; so that no possible combination of any two of the Great Powers against us would put us at a numerical disadvantage so far as vessels of these classes are concerned. The case as regards protected cruisers is almost equally gratifying. We should have 10 such craft to France's 3, Russia's 3, Germany's 2, or Italy's 7. The weak spot in the situation arises out of the fact that in addition to her 23 battleships and armoured cruisers, France has, among her numerous coast-defence ironclads, six or seven which, at a pinch, could take their places in the line of battle. In the following table we have endeavoured to show exactly what forces could, in the event which we have imagined, be disposed of by each of the five Powers. We omit reference, in order to save space, to semi-obsolete ships built previous to 1867, as well as to unprotected cruisers; and confine our attention strictly to those vessels upon which the ultimate issue of a naval war may be expected to depend.

In torpedo vessels we are not so well off as we are in the other classes of war ships. Leaving them aside, we have 59 ships, 543 heavy guns, and 25,350 men, as against France's 43 ships, 451 heavy guns, and 17,550 men; Russia's 24 ships, 183 heavy guns, and 8,200 men; Germany's 27 ships, 222 heavy guns, and 7,530 men; and Italy's 17 ships, 168 heavy guns, and 7,200 men. But this is not all. The displacement of our ships averages 6,582 tons, while that of the French ships averages only 6,150, that of the Russian only 5,086, and that of the German no more than 3,946; so that, upon the whole, we have bigger ships as well as a bigger navy than our neighbours; and size, it should be remembered, has much to do with speed and weight of armament. Italy alone exceeds us in the average size of battleships and protected cruisers; but the comparative smallness of her navy more than neutralises any advantage which she might be imagined to derive from this fact.

Neither has the relative strength of the military Powers of Europe greatly altered during the year. A German expert has provided us with the following tabulated statement of it as it stands at present. It should be explained that the "1st class" represents the peace strength of the various armies; the "2nd class," the additional strength in war time; and the "3rd class," the still further additional strength that may be arrived at by calling out all the available reserves. The ultimate military strength of each country is numerically represented by the sum of these three classes; but as our informant reminds us, "mere numbers go for very little. Training, general education, excellence of armament, and many other factors will always modify the significance of figures; and it may well be that several of the Powers have the nominal command of many more soldiers than they could transport or feed in war-time."

These figures—which do not take into account a number of men who are liable to be called upon to join a levée en masse, but for whom neither arms nor equipment have yet been provided, even on paper—show that a Continental war might bring into the field no fewer than 10,200,000 officers and soldiers, and considerably over 15,000 pieces of artillery.—The Daily News Jan. 2, 1890.

THE DANGERS OF CANNED PROVISIONS.

The following is an extract from a report dated 23rd August last, by Captain W. F. Segrave, Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore :—
Commercially all canned provisions that are hermetically sealed are packed in cans made of tin plate, i. e., sheet iron superficially alloyed with tin.

This article is imported exclusively from England and is subject to an import duty of one cent. per pound. The average import for the past three years has been 3,600,000 boxes, which paid in duties 3,960,000 dollars. There is no tin plate manufactured in the United States, and yet with nothing in the tin plate trade to protect, the duty of a cent. a pound is still imposed on it.

One hundred and thirty millions of cans are every year manufactured in Baltimore city alone, and two million pounds of solder are consumed in making them.

Equal parts of block tin and lead form the best solder, but no doubt a baser description of solder, composed of a larger proportion of lead, is by no means uncommon. A flux of powdered resin or a much more deleterious flux composed of chloride of zinc, containing free muriatic acid, is applied to the tin surface to be soldered and the unfortunate and dangerous practice is to apply this on the inside.

The use of an acid flux for inside soldering is objected to as a possible source of danger, whereas in cans where resin is used, it is asserted and no doubt with good reason, that it communicates its taste to the contents of the can.

To obviate both objections the law which is compulsory as well in France as in Germany, should be passed and enforced in this country, to the effect that all cans containing articles of food should be soldered on the outside.

Laudable efforts have no doubt been made by the trade to abolish entirely inside soldering, but not as yet with such entire success as they deserve.

The first danger from inside surface solder is direct solvent action on the lead of an acid fluid, when acid vegetables or fruit are preserved without syrup. The second source of danger as at present is from galvanic action.

There is one special hermetically sealed product, which even in this country and in the trade has a peculiarly evil reputation, and that is the American sardine, in which there is great possibility of danger as at present put up. Notwithstanding the label is French, in the well-known yellow and black letters, the contents are not sardines, nor are they put up in "huile d'olive pure," but in cotton seed oil.

Professor Tonry, of this city, states in a report :—

"I have now before me one of these sardine tins, with the solder on the inside, and fully one quarter of the interior surface of the metal eaten away !

The fish that were contained in this tin were nearly all eaten by 3 persons, 2 of whom were children, and all were taken sick within half an hour after consuming them. The child who had eaten most freely died in 24 hours.

I made a chemical examination of the viscera of the dead child and found lead, lead was also found in the oil and remaining contents of tin."

A Coroner's inquest was subsequently held, the verdict found being that death resulted from lead poisoning from a sardine tin improperly soldered.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—These remedies are unequalled throughout the world for bad legs, wounds, foul sores, bad breasts, and ulcers. Used according to directions given with them there is no wound, bad leg, or ulcerous sore, however obstinate or long standing, but will yield to their healing and curative properties. Many poor sufferers who have been patients in the large hospitals under the care of eminent surgeons, and have derived little or no benefit from their treatment, have been thoroughly cured by Holloway's Ointment and Pills. For granular swellings, tumours, "piles," and diseases of the skin there is nothing that can be used with so much benefit. In fact, in the worst forms of disease, dependent upon the condition of the blood, these medicines, used conjointly, are irresistible.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE PILGRIM MOTHERS.

EXOTIC blossoms ! brought to grace Old Plymouth's rocky glen ;
Proud mothers of a noble race
Of stern and stalwart men ;
Strong was the trust with which ye braved
The dangers of the sea,
And strong the unseen power that saved
The mothers of the free !

When swiftly o'er the smiling deep,
The fragile Mayflower flew,
While stars their solemn watch would keep
On yonder fields of blue—
Full oft your forms, as slight and fair
As any flower of spring,
Were meekly bowed in trusting prayer
To heaven's exalted King.

Cold was your greeting from the shore,
That seemed in dreams so fair ;
The wintry tempest's sullen roar
Sung ye a welcome there ;
The Indian peered above the hill,
With wonder in his eye,
The noisy sea-birds answered shrill
The tempest-spirit's cry.

Oh ! Pilgrim Mothers ! few the lyres
Your praises to prolong ;
Though fame embalms the pilgrim sires,
And trumpets them in song ;
Yet ye were to those hearts of oak
The secret of their might ;
Ye nerved the arm that hurled the stroke
In labor or in fight.

The fire of freedom warmed each breast,
Through many a weary day,
Where pillowed soft in dreamy rest
Our infant fathers lay !
Ye taught them when their simple prayers
Were breathed beside the knee,
The lessons that in after years
Were bulwarks for the free.

Ye taught to spurn the tyrant's claim,
And bow to God alone !
Ye kindled in their breasts the flame
That trembled in your own !

In after years flowed purple gore,
And fields were strewed with dead—
Firm hands the starry banner bore—
Aggression trembling fled !

Oh ! Pilgrim Mothers ! though ye lie
Perchance in graves unknown,
A memory that cannot die
Hath claimed ye for its own ;
A sacredness to that bleak shore,
Your dust shall aye impart ;
Your requiem—the ocean's roar,
Your shrine—a nation's heart !

ORIOLE.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

ON January 6, the Feast of Epiphany, Her Majesty, according to ancient custom, made the annual "oblation of gold, frankincense, and myrrh" at the altar of the Chapel Royal, St. James. The custom was long observed by the sovereigns in person. Now it is done by deputies. It commemorates the visit of the Wise Men of the East to Bethlehem with similar treasures on the birth of Christ. The late Colonel Yule, following the Persian legend, explains that the gold signifies the Kingship, the frankincense the Divinity, and the myrrh the healing powers of the Child born in the manger.

COUNTESS Fleury, the widow of the General who aided Napoleon III. in his coup d'état, is dead. She was one of the brilliant women of the Empire, and took rank as such with the Empress herself. In St. Petersburg, the Count, as Ambassador, and his wife, had made a conquest of the late Czar and his family. It is said, the elegance of the Countess, her dresses, and balls, and the stud of the General dazzled even the fashionable world at the Russian capital. They never counted the money they spent. They considered it an investment for the good of the Empire, and the Empire bore all their expenses.

THE St. Peter's pence, during 1889, amounted to about 120,000/ or 6,000/ less than in 1888. The European States which contributed nothing were Turkey, Montenegro, Greece and Servia.

THEY have, at Stratford-upon-Avon, come upon Shakespeare's table, the only furniture that was wanting to complete the collection for holiday visitors. John Wheeler, aged eighty, has sworn before a Justice of the Peace that the table was long the property of his family and known among them as "Shakespeare's table," and that his grandmother used to say that she had purchased it from a woman who in her turn had remembered purchasing it at a sale at Shakespeare's house in Henley-street.

A BERLIN telegram of January 7 says that Professor Weber, of Halle, affirms that the excitant of disease in influenza is a fungus which was discovered some years ago to exist in nasal secretions.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

ON Saturday January 4, the German poet Theodor Fontane, "the Poet of the Mark," celebrated his seventieth birthday. The same day, in his honor, the Berlin Literary Club and the Berlin Press Association gave a banquet. There were present about 300 persons, including all the artistic and scientific celebrities of the German capital. The health of the poet, the guest of the evening, was repeatedly proposed in prose and verse. A significant toast was proposed by Dr. Von Gossler, Minister of Public Instruction. He toasted "The Berlin Press." It showed that that Press had ceased to be in bad odour with the Government. The Minister admitted that German literature had taken a prominent part in the development of the Empire, and had contributed much to it. He therefore thought it desirable that the relations between the Berlin Press and the Government should become better, and that the former should attain the position in society which it deserved according to its importance.

THE Vienna Board of Health recommends beheading as the quickest mode of execution. The American system of killing by electricity has not yet been sufficiently tested for the final verdict in its favor. Hanging is immediately followed by insensibility and there is no knowing what may happen in the few minutes between insensibility and death. The Board considers beheading as instantaneous, safe and irrevocable.

AN Elgin correspondent in an English paper of the 6th January writes:—

"Yesterday Peter Lating, the Elgin centenarian, entered on his 106th year. He is a carter and still continues to enjoy excellent health, all his faculties being unimpaired; and any day he may be seen in the streets of Elgin in charge of his horse and cart. He is come of a family celebrated for longevity. His father died when 109 years of age, and his great grandfather, who fought under the standard of the Duke of Cumberland at the battle of Culloden, died at the remarkable age of 135. Peter lived in the time of Burns, and his memory is so retentive that he can recall an episode in the life of the Scotch National Bard. He was over sixty before he was married, and since his wife died, over thirty years ago, he has been his own cook, and housekeeper. He has a most robust constitution, his diet being brose, porridge, potatoes, and salt herrings; and he confidently declares that a change in the shape of dainties would be to him worse than drugs. He was never known to have an illness with the exception of an occasional slight attack of rheumatism in one of his legs, and had never any doctor's drugs."

THE weather has been abnormal in the Baltic. Usually, by the end of October or the beginning of November, the winter sets in and the ports are blocked and navigation is suspended. But up to the beginning of January last, the weather was reported to be beautifully mild and autumn-like. There were neither sledging nor icebound waters, and steamers were running.

WE read in an English paper:—

"Professor R. H. Thurston, an American writer, who has devoted much attention to the problem of aerial navigation, summarises some curious results of recent experiments with birds and wings, including those of Professor Langley, the astronomer, which are as yet unpublished. Professor Langley has found that the power exerted by the eagle in full flight instead of being about thirteen horse-power, as computed by Navier and his followers, is actually but a fraction of one horse-power. Mr. Chanute computes the power exerted by a pigeon flying 2,200 feet per minute (25 miles an hour nearly), at 1-200 of a horse-power per pound, or 9 1-3 horse-power for a flying machine of equally good form, weighing one ton, at 25 miles an hour, or about 50-horse power per ton weight at 50 miles. Mr. Alexander makes the maximum allowable weight per horse-power of all the apparatus, 122 pounds; while Mr. Wenham, of our Aeronautical Society, finds, in the pelican, an expenditure of 1-11 horse-power by 21 pounds of bird; this is one-horse power to 231 pounds, or about a horse-power for the weight of a man, allowing ample margin for surplus power. The birds are found to have, according to the deductions from observations of Mr. Thurston's colleague, Professor Wilder, and others, a surplus lifting power of about one half. The investigations of Lucy, Marey, and Pettigrew, and others show that insects flutter wings of enormous area in proportion to their weight, at the rate of 200 or 300 vibrations per second; while the pelican makes but one per second, the area of surface employed being a trifling fraction of that needed by the smaller creature, per unit of its own weight. The vulture is one hundred times as heavy as the swallow, but its wings are only fifteen times as large. The Australian crane weighs three million times as much as the gnat, while the latter has 150 times as much wing-surface per unit of weight. But the power demanded is proportionate to the weight to be carried, and the muscles of birds' wings are found to weigh more than all their other muscles put together. From these facts Mr. Hannel computes the spread of wing that would be required by a flying man at about twenty feet, or say about 150 square feet area. For a machine weighing 3½ tons he makes the needful spread of wing about eighty feet, but Professor Thurston computes it at a much smaller figure."

What is Mr. Percival Spencer's experience? His aeronautical undertakings, he says, have a definite object, namely, "to solve the problem of aerial navigation—to be able to steer an ærostat through the air with the same facility with which a mariner navigates the ocean."

NOTWITHSTANDING the Margarine Act, the Inspector of Food and Drugs for South Derbyshire, during the closing two months of the past year, found upon analysis that, out of the fifty samples of "Guaranteed Pure Butter" received from abroad, very many of them were mixed with from 10 to 30 per cent. of margarine. In our own city, the Ghee Act has proved a dead letter. Notwithstanding occasional prosecution of the vendors and destruction of the adulterated article, pure ghee is not to be had for love or money.

SEVERAL persons residing or trading in the East-end of London have been charged, under the Trade Marks Act, with applying a false description to certain cigars, or with being in possession of cigars to which a false description had been applied. Three of the defendants are partners and are stated to have been concerned in a practice of passing off, as manufactured at Vera Cruz, cigars really manufactured at Shoreditch.

IN 1883, Messrs. Baring Brothers were robbed of a parcel of securities valued at 22,000*l.* Hatfield Thomas Turner and Frederick Clarke were being tried in London when the last mail left, for feloniously receiving five South and North Alabama Central Railway five per cent. Bonds of 200*l.* each, being a portion of the said securities.

THE anonymous donor of 100,000*l.* for a Convalescent Home within easy access of London, is believed to be Mr. Peter Reid. He is a Governor of St. Thomas's, St. Bartholomew's and many other hospitals and charitable institutions. He is one of the most popular of City men. He had been a partner in the firm of P. Casenove and Co., the members of which have always been noted for munificence. It is the practice with Mr. Reid to devote one-tenth of his income to charity.

THE "Journal de St. Petersburg" of the 26th August last publishes the following:—

"The correspondence of the Nouveau Temps at the fair of Nijni Novgorod announces that cottons sell slowly, that their prices have dropped by 5 per cent. compared with those of last year. The rumours of a considerable reduction which one of the largest houses was about to make has produced considerable excitement among the purchasers; those who have arrived from the Caucasus and have already transacted important business have suddenly suspended operations in presence of this rumour. Last year furnished great advantages to the trade of the fair, and the success obtained showed clearly the development of Russian commercial relations with Persia. The preparation of tissues in the Oriental style already occupies a large number of factories; but it is to be regretted that the Persian and Armenian agents allow themselves to be influenced chiefly by cheapness, and purchase cottons of inferior quality, thus discrediting Russian products on the Persian markets. This circumstance, combined with that of the depreciation of Persian money, acts very unfavorably on Russian operations with the East."

Another Russian paper receives similar information from its special correspondent. Thus—cotton tissues sold slowly at Nijni and ready money was scarce.

The significance of the information will be better understood when it is remembered that cotton constitutes not only the principal article of Russian export by the Eastern frontiers, but also the most important manufactured article in the home markets. The large majority of the population, nine-tenths of whom are engaged in agriculture, has always need of cheap stuffs, and especially of Cambric muslins.

A CANADIAN paper sees no sufficient reason why Canada should not produce all or the greater part of the sugar it consumes. The soil and climate are well adapted to the growth and cultivation of the sugarbeet. Efforts have been made in this direction in the province of Quebec. There is a large and well equipped factory at Berthier, for the manufacture of sugar from this vegetable. It has been found that beets grown in the vicinity of Berthier possesses as large an amount of saccharine matter as any grown under the most favourable circumstances in France, Germany, or Austria. That paper is certain that not only that particular locality, but about all the available lands in Quebec, Ontario, and North-West are equally adapted to that industry.

THE Australian fruit is not in favor in France. A special correspondent of the Melbourne Argus at the Paris Exhibition writes:—

"It is to be regretted that in France at least, the prospects of business in Australian fruit are by no means promising. In fact, the attempts to find market for the last shipment, in spite of the fact that specimens were recompensed with a first prize, and that most flattering opinions were expressed on their quality in high places, resulted in complete failure. Of the 100 odd cases, which formed shipment of Victorian fruit, the 50 which were available for sale were disposed of at the Central Markets by auction and realized the absurdly low price of 3s per case, or less than a 1d per lb. It must be remembered, however, that this was not in a season when ready buyers for apples can be found in Paris and of course, in this matter also, demand rules prices. It may also be remarked that in the matter of fruit the public of Paris is exceedingly conservative, and will not readily take to anything new. Some months ago some Florida fruit-growers tried to introduce Florida oranges to the Paris market, and failed dismally. The bulk of the first and last shipment was disposed of at prices as low, if not lower, than the Victorian fruit retailed. What Tasmanian fruit remained was being retailed at a temporary stall close to the Tasmanian metal trophy, but, in spite of much energy on the part of the person in charge, with but small success. The prices asked varied from a penny for one apple to a penny for three—prices which, considering the state of fruit, accounted for the slackness in the demand."

Mr. Herbert Gladstone originally claimed 5,000l damages for the libel against himself in the Allahabad Morning Post. The Post was let off with an apology, and the writer Colonel George Bruce Malleson, of 27 West Cromwell Road, London, was proceeded against in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. The Colonel had no defence to make, nor would he deny that he wrote and published the libel. The case was consequently narrowed down to the question of the extent of damages. In the Sheriff's Court, for assessment of damages, Mr. Herbert Gladstone deposed that the whole story as published in the Allahabad paper was a fabrication from beginning to end. He did not know Colonel Malleson personally, but he thought it right to come into Court to vindicate his character. He knew nothing as to the circulation of the paper. He did not desire to make money out of the case. So far as the paper was concerned, he accepted the apology which was printed. The jury retired for ten minutes, and assessed the damages at 1,000l.

DURING the 21 days in January that the Indian Museum was open to the public, the visitors numbered 35,429, namely, natives, 26,363 males and 7,402 females, and Europeans—that is those bearing European names—1,236 males and 428 females.

A NEW Public Works Division to be called the Sikkim Division has been sanctioned. It will comprise all works in Sikkim and will be under the charge of Mr. J. C. White. He will be both Assistant Political Officer at Gantok and Executive Engineer of the Sikkim Division.

INLAND steam-vessels commanded by licensed pilots have been exempted from the provisions of section 28, sub-section (1), clause (a), and section 28, sub-section (2), clause (a) of the Inland Steam-vessels Act—VI of 1884. Certificated Serangs will be allowed for two years more to take charge of inland steamers measuring not more than 200 tons gross. After that time, no Serang who will not have obtained a certificate of competency will be allowed to be in charge of any such vessel.

LAST Saturday, Mr. Percival Spencer made a successful balloon ascent and a parachute descent. He essays a higher feat this evening. He will go up two miles and drop from that height and descend in sight of the spectators.

Holloway's Ointment.—Miners and Workers in the Goldfields.—This invaluable and renowned Ointment is extensively used and patronized by such people to their very great advantage, being easy of application and portable in small compass. When used in conjunction with Holloway's Pills in accordance with the clear and concise directions for use which accompany each pot and box, there are but few of the diseases which afflict mankind which will not yield to the sanative powers of the combined remedies. Holloway's Ointment and Pills do not deteriorate by keeping nor by change of climate, and as they contain no deleterious mineral drug, they can be used with the most perfect safety under the most adverse climatic and sanitary conditions.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

EMPEROR William has taken up the Labor Question. His Majesty has directed a rescript to Prince Bismarck to sound the British, French, Swiss and Belgian cabinets, and, the Powers agreeing, to invite them to a Conference with a view to meet the wishes and needs of workmen. Only recently, in the Reichstag, any further steps in favor of workmen were deprecated.

Notwithstanding the eulogy passed on the German Press by the Minister of Public Instruction at the Fontane Dinner, the persecution of the Press continues in the Fatherland. The Cologne Gazette reproduced from the Times an article on the strained relations between the Emperor and his mother. The Emperor took it as an insult, and the editor of the Gazette has been sent to prison for two months. The Kreuz Zeitung is under a ban too. It has been prohibited in the royal palaces and the reading rooms. The head and front of its offence is that its editor Baron Hammerstein was a candidate at the Bielefeld election, where the Emperor's name was introduced in a manner not agreeable to His Imperial Majesty.

A naval station in the Baltic near Libau is to be established immediately. The cost has been estimated at thirteen million roubles.

Siberia is to be strengthened with more troops. An order has been passed for two new rifle regiments in the Eastern districts.

The crops have failed in Russian and Austrian Poland. There is distress with famine ahead.

An electoral meeting at Strassfurth, in Saxony, has ended in a serious conflict between the people and the police. The police had recourse to firing, killing one woman and wounding four men.

AN order from the Horse-Guards allows officers, Warrant officers and non-commissioned officers of the Infantry, Engineers and Artillery—excepting the Royal Engineers in India—the liberty to apply for exchange into the Linked Battalions, after eight years' service at home or abroad.

In place of Lord Napier of Magdala deceased, General Chesney has been given the appointment of Colonel Commandant of the Royal Engineers. Whatever other people may think of it, the Military Member himself finds no meaning or worth in the appointment. He only awaits the official intimation of the death to draw the Colonel's allowance which is now his portion.

The oldest Judge in England, the Hon'ble Sir Henry Manisty, of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, aged 80, is dead.

A colliery explosion is reported from Abersychen in Monmouthshire. By the latest accounts, 150 persons have been entombed.

THE Prince arrived at Rawalpindi on the 1st instant and, after witnessing a parade of troops and a theatrical performance in the evening, proceeded to Lahore the next day. On the morning of the 3rd, His Royal Highness laid the foundation-stone of the Jubilee Museum and Technical Institute. His speech on the occasion was characterised by "military brevity" which he thought was in keeping with the military spirit and military material so conspicuous in that province of action. The Victoria Jubilee Hall, erected at a cost of Rs. 60,000, as a memorial of the Queen's fiftieth year was then opened, when the Prince drove to the Government College and the Chief Court. The Shalmer Gardens were the scene of a large gathering in the afternoon, where the whole station was invited to meet the Prince. The Masonic Fraternity of Lahore presented the Prince with a souvenir in the form of a level. The ball at the Montgomery Hall in honor of the Prince was a brilliant affair, His Royal Highness remaining till two o'clock and taking part in most of the dances. After a visit to the Aitchison Chiefs' College, the Prince left for Chunga Munga where he had excellent sport. The Prince was at Amritsar on the morning of the 6th, where, at the Town Hall, he was met by several native gentlemen, and shown different articles of local manufacture. One of the principal carpet manufactories was visited. After a drive through the public gardens, His Royal Highness left in the night for Kapurthala, where the next morning he had capital sport in the pig preserve. The Prince's visit to this State is described to be a great success, all being charmed with his courteous and considerate ways.

THE Overland Mail of the 17th January, under the title "Unthrift at the India Office," commences an article thus:—

"Some time ago Lord Cross, with a laudable desire to reduce, if possible, the burthen on the Indian revenues of the Home Charges, appointed a Committee to review the expenditure at and through the India Office. It sat, it examined, it considered, it reported. Nothing much has come of the inquisition beyond the Act for enabling the Secretary of State to save a few thousands a year by reducing the number of his Council. Since then peace has reigned, and a sense of vindicated virtue prevails in the large building in Charles's Street."

The extract does not exactly describe the situation. Lord Cross is more mindful of the interests of India. In his Despatch No. 144 (Financial), dated the 4th July 1889, the Secretary of State for India thus advises the Government of India:—

"From the examination of the Home Charges which has been made by the Committee, Your Excellency will see what a very large proportion of them (about 78 per cent.) consists of fixed payments for interest and superannuation, in which no reduction can be anticipated for many years. The payments for the recruiting and depot charges and transport of troops are equally necessary; no immediate diminution of the payment to officers on furlough can be effected; and the cost of the stores indented for from India can only be reduced as the resources of that country may gradually be utilised to a greater extent * * *

* * * It is, therefore, evident that no material reduction of the Home Charges can result from the direct action of the Secretary of State, and that it is only by the careful watching of the probable consequences of measures adopted by the Government of India that any real check can be placed upon them. * * * And if the departments in India can be accustomed to use articles made in that country when of an ordinary character and not needing special inspection during manufacture, they might be procured of sufficiently good quality, even though somewhat inferior to those which would be obtained by paying a higher price in England; and thus a perceptible diminution might be made in the payments in this country. I commend these points to the very earnest attention of Your Excellency's Government."

The Mail is not content with the opening remarks, but hints at a possible source of reduction of the Home Charges. By a comparison of the Director-General's figures, it points out that the India Office suffered a loss of £3,643 in six years from 1883 to 1888, or an annual average of £8,940, in excessive insurance on Railway stores as compared with actual losses. The Government pays 1 per cent., whereas the insurance could be done in India or London at $\frac{3}{4}$ ths to $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The article thus concludes:—

"There are rumours in India that when the report of the Director-General for 1883 appeared, that official received an intimation from the India Office that he was not to allude to the subject again. He certainly was acting strictly within the limits of his official duty in pointing out that the India Office was paying far too much in the insurance of these stores, for it is quite certain that, if the Secretary of State does not deem it prudent for the Government to insure its own stores, notwithstanding the manifest advantage it would gain by doing it, insurance could have been effected during all this period for less than one-half the rate the Government has been paying. Evidently the insurers have been making a good thing out of it. Some member of Parliament would be doing a useful service by asking early next session for some explanation of this seemingly unthrifty mode of conducting business."

It is the usual way. Till very recently, the Calcutta Port Trust was pursuing the same unthrifty course when a sturdy member protested and protested, and the insurance of its Warehouses was thrown open to competition and insurance effected at very much reduced rates.

The Secretary of State has found his way to a partial relief of the Home Charges by relaxing the rule of ordering all articles for India through the India Office. Further relief may be found in a more equitable system of accounts in the capacious building in Charles's Street.

COLONEL Alikhanoff has been deprived of the Merv command. A Turkoman deputation arrived at Merv to lodge a complaint against the chief of the Merv military district before the Commander-in-Chief, General Komaroff, of the Transcaspien Province. The Colonel ordered the men to be dispersed. Under that order, they were attacked by a body of soldiers, several of the deputation being killed and many wounded. Pending investigation into a charge of arbitrary and cruel conduct, the hero of Panjdeh has been for the moment humbled. This furnishes the Pioneer with opportunity to indulge in a fling at the Bengal press. It writes:—

"A few years ago the hero of Panjdeh and a promoted native was much in the mouths of Bengali papers who used to point out that under the British Government there were no Alikhanoffs in India. After this last incident the want should cease to be much of a grievance."

But our contemporary forgets that the promotion and the punishment point to the same supremacy of Justice in the counsels of the Russian Government. Alikhanoff is sacrificed in pursuance of the same statesmanlike policy that raised a qualified Native to the command of a military district.

THE Times has at last found it prudent to compromise with Mr. Parnell and has paid him £5,000 damages for the publication of the Pigott letters. The Solicitor-General had declined the leading brief for the leading journal.

We publish elsewhere the conclusion of the Hearsey-Allen proceedings in the Police Court. The Chief Magistrate has made up his mind to commit Mr. Allen to the Sessions which begins on Monday, the 17th February. He would not himself pass any orders even if the defence admitted publication in Calcutta or pleaded guilty. He considers it a case preeminently for the Jury and the High Court. Mr. Allen seems to have grown sick of the prosecution, and no wonder. He would have been glad to get off with a nominal fine. He has now a great precedent in the course taken by the Times regarding the Pigott letters, and why not earn peace for his own concern and the public by compounding with Captain Hearsey? The Captain is determined not to be kept out of them till he has found justice in our courts.

THE Chief Justice has decided to open the first Sessions of the year in person. At Allahabad, Sir Comer Petheram signalized himself by the indignant attitude he assumed against the late Mr. Laidman in his persecution of Captain Hearsey. The same Captain is now an applicant for justice at his Lordship's hands against a higher and mightier individual.

We have so far refrained from noticing the Durbhanga temple destruction case. Before making sure of one's facts, it is not safe to speak, far less to take sides. In the meantime, party-feeling is running high, and not in Durbhanga alone. The loudest newspaper agitation has been set a-going. The usual methods of holding public meetings and adopting resolutions and memorials have been employed, and the telegraph has also been laid under requisition. We have received telegrams too. The evidence, already published, would seem to indicate that the Municipal Executive have borne themselves very arbitrarily in the matter. Into the merits of the case, however, we do not enter now, for the good and sufficient reason that the enquiry by Mr. Boxwell, Commissioner of the Division, is not closed, and his report will soon be before the public. We have just one word to say in the meantime, and that is to express our regret, if not surprise, at the indiscreet manner in which the agitation is being conducted by some writers in the press. An ordinary case of, at the worst, municipal high-handedness has been raised to the gravity of a race question and a question of religion. That there is no race question in the business, is best proved by the evidence which several Mahomedans have freely given before Mr. Boxwell in support of the case for the temple. True, the Vice-Chairman of the Municipality happens to be a Mahomedan, but what does that prove? Are things really come to such a pass that the Vice-Chairman could, even if he chose, be all-in-all, and turn his office into an opportunity of feeding his religious bigotry, supposing he had any? Are the Municipal Commissioners nothing? Was not the District Magistrate, Mr. Beadon, the Chairman and the head Executive of the Municipality? Mr. Beadon has since assumed the entire responsibility for the proceedings, and the sensational story of race and religious antipathy on the Vice-Chairman's part must now fall to the ground. Indeed, the proceedings were easily explicable otherwise from the first, viz., that if any order were issued under the Vice-Chairman's signature for the removal of the temple, it was done in the usual course of business. At the worst, it is one of those Municipal vagaries of which we hear so often. But why turn it into a question of race, and foment religious antipathies and widen the gulf between sections of the people which every right-minded man wishes to see bridged over? As well might the attempt of Sir Henry Harrison and a minority of the Calcutta Municipal Commissioners in the late Jain temple case of Burrabazar be traced to a similar origin!

THERE are now several measures before the Supreme Legislative Council of India. Some of them are intended to remedy the defects in existing enactments. Others are required for extending the local application of some laws to newly acquired territory or to other territory where they have not been heretofore extended, and the opportunity is taken to introduce such amendments in them as are suggested by experience of their practical working. The most important of these measures is, perhaps, the Bill for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of which the Hon'ble Mr. Hutchins is in charge. In introducing the Bill, the Home Member made a speech characterised at once by keen sympathy with the objects of the measure, thorough grasp of the subject in its varied bearings, and moderation and practical experience. He began with freely acknowledging what some of the Local Governments had done in past years towards the prevention of cruelty to animals. There are special enactments on the subject in Bengal, Assam, Madras, the North-West Provinces, and Bombay, and if these constituted the whole of British India, said Mr. Hutchins, there would hardly be much necessity for pressing the matter further at present. There are, however, other important provinces which have no legislature of their own. These depend for their laws on the Supreme Council, while the only provision for the prevention of cruelty to animals in force in these provinces is Section 34 of the Police Act V of 1861. The Hon'ble member then showed the insufficient and unsatisfactory character of this provision. This section cannot be extended beyond the limits of a town nor can it take cognizance of any cruelty which is not committed on a road or in a street. It was further hedged in with other restrictions which made it an exceedingly precarious instrument for the object it was meant to secure. As, however, it is all the present law on the subject in these provinces, it requires to be amended, and the opportunity is availed of to prepare a general law which can be adopted by an Local Government.

The English law for the prevention of cruelty is perfectly general and reaches all kinds of the offence whether committed in private or in public, in towns or in rural tracts. There are considerations, however, which make it inexpedient to introduce in this country a general enactment of such a comprehensive character, however desirable it might be on abstract grounds and in the interests of humanity. "The habits of the people, the varying character of the agency by which the law will have to be enforced, the enormous size of the rural tracts, the paucity of competent tribunals—these, and many other things have to be borne in mind, and therefore it is that most of the existing enactments can only be put in force in towns, while in all, the Executive Government has retained in its own hands the power of prescribing the places to which alone it shall apply." The Hon'ble Mr. Hutchins, while fully alive to these considerations and quite satisfied of the wisdom of proceeding with caution and carrying the people with the Government in a matter of this kind, is of opinion that the time has come for taking a step in advance. He is inclined, in consultation with Local Governments, to give the proposed enactment immediate operation everywhere, or at all events in all towns, particularly when the limitation is accepted that it is to reach only acts of cruelty committed in public; or, if that is not considered possible, to merely declare the particular acts of cruelty which are covered by Section 3 penal wherever committed, like the acts provided for by Sections 4 and 5. On these points, the opinions of Local Governments will be taken. In the meantime, however, the Bill has been framed upon the old lines and with existing limitations. Local Governments, it is very wisely said by the Hon'ble Member, will be very much chary about extending its operation if we gain a right of entry into private houses, and the prevention of open cruelty over a wide area is likely to do more good than thorough measures within more restricted limits. The power of entry is only claimed in Sections 4 and 5 in regard to two specific acts, viz., the killing of an animal in an unnecessarily cruel manner, and the employment of an animal on work for which it is unfitted by disease, infirmity, wounds or sores. The barbarous practices of butchers of flaying live goats, or of cutting out the tongues and allowing them to bleed slowly to death in order to whiten their flesh, will be covered by Section 4, while Section 5 is taken from the Bengal Act.

A general law for the prevention of cruelty to animals in its numerous shapes of barbarity for the whole of British India, leaving Local Governments and minor administrations to regulate its application to their territory to any extent they might deem expedient, is a good idea. But the great difficulty of enforcing such a law lies in the inadequacy of the machinery for carrying out its humane objects. We badly want a sympathetic Magistracy to make the law an effective protection of dumb animals. As it is, the law is but a dead letter in all but the great Presidency capitals, and even as regards these, the credit for the enforcement of its provisions, such as it is, in a great measure is due to the zeal of the Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty.

At the meeting of the Supreme Legislative Council on the 31st January last, the Hon'ble Mr. Scoble introduced a Bill for amending the Factories Act of 1881. Our readers are aware of the agitation made in England on the subject of factory labor in India. This agitation was started by English manufacturers in their own interests, though, of course, ostensibly in the interests of mill operatives at Bombay and at other Indian manufacturing centres, whose condition was represented to be an extremely hard one and such as required the interference of the legislature. The introduction of the English Factory Acts into India was strongly recommended as the best remedy for the evil. All this display of philanthropic zeal for the alleged sufferings of Indian labourers was, however, really meant to cover an attack on the rising cotton industry in this country, and the true motives of the agitation were soon discovered. There were, nevertheless, powerful interests involved in the success of the agitation, and in the House of Commons it had influential supporters. In consequence of this, a Commission was appointed by the Bombay Government to consider the subject in all its bearings, while the Government of India on its own part also turned its earnest attention to the question. The conclusion arrived at by the Government of India, after making enquiries of Local Governments and other authorities, is contained in a despatch to the Secretary of State of 5th March 1889 and is as follows:—

"It is a well-attested fact that the employés in Indian factories reach a standard of comfort and content which is not attained by persons in their own rank of life who are engaged in pursuits of a different nature. Machinery moreover is, owing to the comparative absence of competition, driven in the factories in India at a pace so slow that it would not be tolerated in England; and it is estimated that in many of the mills in India about twice as many operatives are employed as would be employed in mills of the same capacity in England. It follows that the work of the operative in an Indian factory is far more desultory and less exhausting than that of an operative working in England, and that provisions which are rendered necessary by the exacting nature of the labour in English mills are not demanded in the interest of the Indian operatives, who would indeed be prejudicially affected by them."

The English Factory Acts being inapplicable, the present Bill has been introduced, to make only such minor amendments as experience, and a consideration of the great mass of evidence, which has in the meantime been collected on the subject, have shown to be necessary. The proposals in the Bill are thus summarised by the Hon'ble member in charge:—

- (1) to extend the operation of the Act to factories in which not less than twenty persons are employed;
- (2) to raise the minimum age at which children may be employed in any factory from seven to nine years;
- (3) to limit the hours of employment for women to eleven hours a day;
- (4) to secure to women, as well as to children, proper intervals for food and rest during the day, and not less than four days' holiday in each month;
- (5) to secure a proper supply of water for the use of operatives;
- (6) to ensure proper ventilation and cleanliness in factories;
- (7) to prevent overcrowding likely to be injurious to health;
- (8) to give Local Governments greater power to obtain returns and make rules for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the Act."

These provisions are moderate, and quite calculated to secure the interests both of the operatives and their masters. But there is some difficulty in carrying out the law in regard to these big unwieldy concerns. So far, the official Inspectors of Factories have not had the pleasantest experiences of them. The power obtained in the last provision should be firmly enforced.

WE have elsewhere referred to Sir Charles Elliott's excellent address at the Medgesseh distribution of Prizes. Nothing could have been conceived in better spirit. A warm friend of the cause of native education and progress, in general, and particularly of our Mahomedan fellow-subjects, his encouraging advice and suggestions deserve to be carefully and gratefully laid to heart. The avenues to appointment in the Government Service may be closed, but that need not depress our students. Education itself is an instrument of independence. More of the students should devote themselves to mechanical training. Pure literature with its many branches ought also to furnish occupation to others. He expressed his regret and surprise at there being so few literary men in this country, and noticed Mr. Justice Banerjee's Convocation speech on the subject in the most sympathetic manner imaginable. Novel-writing was recommended as an art in which an imaginative and ingenious race like the Mahomedans were sure to succeed, while there were many departments of inquiry, researches into local history, into language, into dialectic differences, into social customs, into folk-lore, into the growth of religious opinions—all which, said he, were subjects on which one would expect dissertations to flow freely from an educated Native pen. Why is their number, he asked, so small?

Of books by native writers, Sir Charles said, their number is increasing without any increase in the quantity of information they contain. Newspapers also are increasing, but the writers are not more "accurate or laboriously desirous of getting at the real facts they discuss," and he gave a ludicrous instance of inaccurate history in a native author's account of Warren Hastings. The concluding portion of the address must have been highly acceptable to his Mahomedan audience. He said:—

"Success in the world does not depend solely on education, nor even mainly on education: it depends principally on conduct. This is where you Mohamadans may hope to excel your Hindu brethren, who are, as is generally thought, quicker to learn and more skilful in passing examinations than you are, but who have not your great history or your memories of a glorious past. In Bengal it is true that a far larger number of the higher official posts is held by Hindus than by Mohamadans. In Upper India, on the other hand, a far larger number of such posts is held by Mohamadans than by Hindus. Now, what is the reason for this difference? It is not that they are better educated; there are fewer Mohamadans B. A's. and M. A's. in the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab than in Bengal; there are fewer who know English than in Bengal. If you ask any one who knows Upper India well he would tell you that the Hindus are generally subtler, quicker, than the Mohamadans; but the Mohamadans have got the habit of command. They are manly themselves, and they know how to deal with men. They are not afraid of responsibility. They inherit the traditions of Government. They respect themselves, and therefore others respect them. Young men of the Medresseh, this is the example I commend you to follow: and if you are beaten in the schools by nimbler intellects, say to yourselves, 'at least I will not forget the traditions of my ancestors, and I will strive to excel and to gain a position of honour and influence by manliness of character and uprightness of conduct.'"

We do not know how the comparison will be relished by our Hindu friends. But the Mahomedans of the day are certainly not to blame if they are, in fact, heirs to traditions of sovereignty and to all the moral advantage of being born to such traditions.

It was a capital address all through, full of the spirit of hearty sympathy, and showing a thorough grasp of the question of Indian education in all its bearings.

DR. SIRCAR has appealed for further funds in aid of his Association for the cultivation of Science. The Association has yet to be assured of a permanent position, and the Founder is naturally anxious on that score. Towards this, permanent professorships have to be provided for, and a suitable house for the Laboratory. It were a pity to suffer the institution to languish for want of adequate support. The Government and the wealthier classes have indeed done a good deal, but more should be done to confirm what has been so far achieved. The benefits of scientific education conferred by the Association have only to be realized by our countrymen and the general public to ensure a cordial response to Dr. Sircar's appeal. He had, however, better not be sanguine as to the surplus of the H. R. H. Prince Albert Victor Reception Fund. He must look to other quarters. Lord Lansdowne has taken up the appeal. The Viceroy has consented to lay the foundation stone of a new laboratory. The day has not been fixed, but it will be some time in the middle of next month.

THE Indian Mirror would not allow a native of this country to be called a Native, but would always call him an Indian. The Amrita Bazar Patrika proposes to honor every Indian as a Babu. The object aimed at by both is the same or, at any rate in the same line of haute politique. The Mirror seeks to stamp out the idea of lowness sometimes given to the word Native by abolishing it altogether. The Patrika advocates the extension of the honorific title to the whole of India, to oppose a serried phalanx of Babus against the attacks of the European press on the Babus proper of Bengal. But will the Babu Sahebs relish the recipe?

We hear from Bhopal that Moulvie Siddiq Hassan, the husband of the Begum and the virtual ruler, is seriously ill. During the whole of last year, he had been permitted to administer the affairs of the State, although from behind the Purdah. In consequence of her earnest and repeated solicitations—at the instance of the husband—the Government dispensed with the services of Colonel Ward and allowed the Begum to choose her own Prime Minister. On the high recommendation of her husband, Her Highness selected Moonshee Imtiaz Ali, a Pleader of Lucknow. And the Moonshee has, as in duty bound, been performing his duties, under instructions from the patron, communicated through two of the most notorious characters in Bhopal—Mirza Inayat Ali Beg and Mirza Afzal Ali Beg.

MIRZA Agha Ali Khan Bahadur, known throughout Oudh and the North-Western Provinces as the Aghaee Saheb and Nazim Saheb, has just died at Lucknow. During the reign of the late King of Oudh Wajid Ali Shah, he was for many years the Nazim or Commissioner of the Sultanpore Division. In that capacity, he was on the most intimate terms with the British officials in the border Districts, and when the Mutiny broke out, he went over and sided with the British. After the reoccupation of Oudh by the British Government, he was, from his experience, intelligence, wealth and influence, of great help to the authorities, in the peaceful settlement of the country. Ever since 1858, he had invariably been the most trusted, honored and valued adviser of the authorities of Oudh from the Chief Commissioner and Lieutenant-Governor down to the Assistant Commissioners and other minor officials. Being one of the wealthiest men of Lucknow, besides being a man of letters and extraordinary energy, he was looked upon by all classes in Oudh with great respect and confidence. He had served the Oudh Government for 24 years, and been the honorary adviser of the British for upwards of 30 years. He was about 85 years of age when he died, retaining his faculties unimpaired till the last.

He leaves a worthy son, in Mirza Mahomed Abbas, the Assistant Commissioner at Hurdul in Oudh. Mirza Abbas is one of the first young noblemen who were selected for the Statutory Civil Service. He once or twice also officiated as a Deputy Commissioner. The young man inherits a vast fortune, but we hope he will not give up a life of active usefulness and sink himself in the life of ease and idleness of many of the wealthy of Oudh.

THERE is a familiar figure vanished from the higher grade of the Subordinate Executive Service. Baboo Ramakhoy Chatterjee has just retired on pension. He has exceeded the official age of 55 and had had some extensions. But, unlike his brethren who seem to grow young in the service, he makes room for others below him. A Hindoo of the old type, he never outraged the feelings of his countrymen. In office and in society, he always commanded respect. Wherever he has been, he always left a good and lasting impression. He was last at Cuttack, where, on his departure, they presented him with a farewell address with expressions of gratitude "for the kindly smile you always had for every body, the sound advice and counsel you gave to all who sought them, and for the devotion with which you administered to the wants of the sick."

BABOO Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhuri, of Chanchal, in the Malda District, has attained his majority and will be released from the bondage of the Court of Wards on the 11th. The investiture will be marked with some eclat. The festivities have been fixed for the 26th.

THE Governor of Pondicherry is on a tour of inspection of all the French possessions in India. He has visited Karikal and Mahe. Last Saturday, he arrived at Chandernagore and to-day he leaves for Yunnan. We may inform the Natives who took alarm at the new military rules about conscription, that His Excellency has arrived at the opinion that the rules should not be applied to the native-born subjects of the Republic.

SIR John Edgar has been poorly in health for some time, and, under medical advice, takes long leave from the 1st May next, returning to his post in November. In his absence, Mr. Colman Macmillan officiates as the Chief Secretary.

Mr. Peacock's time is nearly up. Sir Henry Harrison replaces him on the Board of Revenue. Mr. Smith must pine away in the Presidency Commissionership. Mr. Bolton, from the Board of Revenue, as we announced before, comes in as Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation. The late Chairman of the Suburban Municipality has a sort of claim to the headship of the amalgamated Corporation. The position is a difficult one, and in the dearth of talent in the Civil Service, no one else probably is coming forward for the office. Mr. Bolton is a smart and intelligent officer.

FROM the commencement of the present month, Rai Bahadr Shurruth Chunder Ghose, late in charge of the Eden Gardens, has been put in divisional charge of the Shibpore Workshop, where he will have greater latitude to prove his mettle, as at Akra.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1890.

THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.

THERE has been some criticism in the press and on the platform of Dr. Gurudas Banerjee's defence of the Calcutta University from the charge of barrenness. The charge is an old one and has often been repeated, and it is not unnatural that a native Vice-Chancellor, himself a distinguished graduate of that University, should attempt an explanation. The defence, however, is somewhat weakened by his own admissions, and is an explanation rather than a defence. Dr. Banerjee practically admits the charge. He confesses that long as is the roll of graduates which the University has sent forth to the world, their literary and scientific achievements, so far, have borne no proportion to the number. Admitting this, Dr. Banerjee denies that the barrenness of results is at all due to any defect in the University system of education. This is a strong opinion, and it should not surprise him, if, in the face of the actual results, people hesitate to accept it without adequate grounds. Dr. Banerjee from his long connection with the University must be in a good position to judge of its system of education, and an opinion coming with his authority cannot be summarily set aside. The subject, however, is a difficult one, and without a thorough knowledge of the internal economy of our Colleges, one can scarcely be in a proper position to take part in its discussion. The popular impression as to the character of the Calcutta University is far from flattering, and Dr. Banerjee's own complaint of cram gives color to that impression. Cram may have a wider range than the lower examinations, and even if it were confined to these, it may still affect the higher education.

Dr. Banerjee accounts for the poverty of results with some plausibility. He says the University is yet in its infancy, and the first batches of its graduates, who generally belonged to the struggling middle classes, were naturally absorbed in the more lucrative professions. They found better prospects in the Judicial and Executive Services and the Legal and Medical professions, while there was little encouragement for labors in the fields of literature and science in the shape of fellowships and in other shapes in which such labors were remunerated in Europe. There could therefore be no fair comparison between the Calcutta University and the Universities of the West. The latter were, in the first place, far older, and, further, they had special endowments for the encouragement of original scholarship. The present barrenness, however, need not continue. There were hopeful indications, said the Vice-Chancellor, of a different state of things in the future. The professions were already overstocked and this was just the time for the endowment of fellowships to attract the best talents to the fields of original culture. Dr. Banerjee, while he admitted the comparatively meagre results of University in this direction, was not prepared to admit the charge in toto. The University had borne some few fruits, and if the harvest was small, it contained promise of a fuller one under more favorable circumstances. On this point he said :—

"I shall say nothing of the professional work of those who have taken themselves to the learned professions, but confine myself to work purely of a literary or scientific character. I am happy to be able to see that the best living poet of Bengal, and the first and the best living Bengali writer of fiction, are both graduates of the Calcutta University, and they have enriched the literature of Bengal with all that the gorgeous magnificence of the East and the sombre grandeur of the West could contribute. If their labours and the labours of those that have followed their footsteps had been better known to our European friends, it might have helped to remove much of that reproach to which our graduates are subjected. Nor must I omit to mention the labours of another distinguished graduate of this University, the learned and indefatigable Secretary to the Science Association. Aided no doubt by the enlightened liberality of his countrymen, and the valuable co-operation of a distinguished foreigner, he has done all that could be expected to lay the foundation of the study of science. If he has made no scientific discoveries, it is because he has been less selfish than he might have been. He has not occupied any limited ground and concentrated his intelligence and energy therein to enable himself to make any contributions to science, but he has attempted to clear up much larger ground, ground sufficient for the cultivation of science by himself and his countrymen, and this he has to some extent succeeded in doing. It is time now for his countrymen to invest more of their pecuniary and intellectual capital in the enterprise, and the prospect of a fair harvest would not be far distant. In the abstruse regions of mathematics, a distinguished young graduate has commenced work and has already given fair earnest of a promising future."

We have now, we hope fairly, stated the Vice-Chancellor's views on the subject. These views have not passed unchallenged. Let us see how they have been received in different quarters. It has been said by some that Dr. Banerjee would have done well not to enter upon such a controversy without having a better case. Why so? The reproach of barrenness has often been made against the institution, and there is no reason why it should not be boldly met, if possible, or an explanation offered. The Convocation of the University affords the best occasion for the ventilation of such questions, and in so far as a discussion on the subject has been started by Dr. Banerjee's remarks it is a public gain. The University cannot lie under imputations on its character without causing discomfort to its governors. In the earlier days of the University, one of the most distinguished of its Vice-Chancellors, Sir Henry Sumner Maine, entered upon an elaborate vindication of it from the charge of cramming, which he learnedly justified as a method for the imparting of a maximum of knowledge within a minimum of time. His successor had undoubtedly a better case to fight for. We are already in possession of his views, and it would now be desirable that the discussion were followed up by experts with knowledge of the inner details of collegiate education.

The Vice-Chancellor's proposal for the endowment of fellowships has elicited a rejoinder from the Pioneer who cannot allow any state funds to be devoted to advance the cause of higher education, when so little was being done for the primary education of the mass of the population. But Dr. Banerjee never asked for state funds. He merely threw out a hint that the present time was opportune for the foundation of fellowships, and expressed a hope that the idea might commend itself to the wealthy noblemen of the land.

The Englishman dissents from the Vice-Chancellor's theory on the subject of barren results, and says:—

"Perhaps the least satisfactory part of the Vice-Chancellor's address was that in which he attempted to explain the 'barrenness of results,' which is a standing reproach to our educational system. It is vain to ask what work worthy of the name has been done by Indian students in the fields of literature and science. There is little encouragement, we are told, for original intellectual work in the shape of fellowships and endowments; but surely Dr. Banerji does not mean that the supremacy of English and German scholarship is solely or even mainly due to the existence of rich endowments. It is notorious that much of the best intellectual work both of recent as well as of former years has been done by men who never touched a penny of public or private donations, and whose lives were a perpetual struggle with hardship and poverty. Leaving the pursuit of literature out of the question, as a hopelessly poverty-stricken line of business, the personal history of modern scientific research is almost a continuous record of heroic and self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of knowledge, without hope of pecuniary recompense. The story of such lives as those of Hugh Miller, of Dick of Thurso, of George Stephenson, and of a host of other 'self-made' men,—and the list might be indefinitely extended,—affords a complete and crushing reply to the pretext that poverty is at the bottom of this educational mystery."

Sir Charles Elliott also noticed the subject in his other day's admirable address at the Medresseh. Speaking of want of leisure as an obstacle to original intellectual pursuit, he said that it was only the busiest men who, as a rule, achieved anything. Sir Charles's remarks were conceived, however, in the kindest spirit. Mr. Justice Banerjee, he said, could only point to one author of admirable poetry, another author of admirable fiction, a gentleman who has shown great research in medicine, though he has not been so fortunate as to make any important discovery, and one accomplished student of mathematics, but where he could only refer to one, nothing less than fifty would satisfy Sir Charles. The results are, indeed, disappointing, and are hardly to be reconciled with Dr. Banerjee's high estimate of the University system of education.

GROUP SANITATION OF MUNICIPALITIES.

Dr. Gregg, Sanitary Commissioner of Bengal, has submitted a report on the drainage, conservancy and water-supply of the municipalities lying on the left bank of the Hooghly north of Calcutta. The report bears evident marks of great care and pains which Dr. Gregg has taken in acquainting himself with the sanitary defects of this important area, while the moderation of his proposals, and his apparent desire to carry the people with him with due regard to all circumstances, and, above all, the funds which may be available for his purposes, give them much practical value. As regards conservancy, Dr. Gregg does not propose to force the system of night-soil service on those municipalities which are of a semi-rural character. In the more thickly peopled towns, however, the latrine system, he tells us, must be introduced and strictly enforced. But the great difficulty in this connection is to find suitable trenching grounds, and this difficulty is not easily overcome. It is, so far as we know, felt more or less wherever the system is now at work, but the state of things in the Cossipore-Chitpore municipality seems to be most serious. This municipality had been all along emptying its night-soil into the Calcutta night-soil sewers, but the Calcutta Municipality have lately intimated their intention of prohibiting the practice in future, and there is no available land in the municipality itself for trenching purposes. If this is true, says Dr. Gregg, it will place the municipality in a serious predicament, and may result in an epidemic of sickness. Similar difficulty exists in other municipalities, and we may as well recommend that a general enquiry may be made into the matter. The Baranagar Municipality, for instance, has no suitable trenching ground. The one it has is most objectionable in its situation, and is credited with all the unhealthiness in the neighbourhood. At any rate, the Municipal Commissioners have condemned it themselves, and determined to change it for another. They have, however, been very dilatory in carrying out their own determination.

In regard to water-supply, Dr. Gregg's ideas are characterized by the same moderation. He is not ambitious of introducing the costly system of filtered water-supply, except in the crowded municipalities of Cossipore and Maniktolla. The present arrangements for the supply of drinking water from tanks in these municipalities are considered sufficient, if care is only taken to keep their water as pure as possible. While we appreciate Dr. Gregg's moderation in this respect, we cannot help expressing a desire that some less costly method for the supply of filtered water within small local areas, such as some English Engineering firms had lately been advertising, were tried for such small Municipalities. At any rate, an experiment might be made.

The drainage of the municipalities is a more complicated subject. Dr. Gregg, after several inspections of the drainage basin which he often made in dug-outs at no small personal discomfort, has recommended the re-excavation of the Bag-Julla Khal, and the erection of three sluices, one in this Khal, and the two others for Dantia and Khorda Khals. As these Khals receive the drainage of the municipalities of North, and South Dum-Dum, South Barrackpore, Baranagar, and Cossipore-Chitpore, he recommends the cost of these works for their common improvement to be proportionately borne by them. This subject has been for years under consideration, and credit is due to the present Sanitary Commissioner for having at last brought it to a practical issue. We have no wish to throw any obstacles in the way of a speedy decision being arrived at on the matter. But one thing we must not omit to say in this connection, namely, that much difference of opinion prevails amongst the Municipal Commissioners of these towns as to the necessity of these sluice-gates. What they hold, and, as appears, not unreasonably, is that the Khals have silted up from obstructions caused 1st by the Railway embankments, and latterly by the laying of the Calcutta Corporation's main water pipes in the beds of some of these Khals. If these obstructions are removed and the Railway Company provide adequate culverts on proper levels, there would be no need of these costly sluices.

PROFESSOR VAMBERY ON THE UNION OF HINDUS AND MAHOMEDANS.

"Budapest University,
December the 31st, 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF Reis & Rayyet.

I have read your letter dated December the 10th with great interest, having had the pleasure in finding in your views and intentions the experimental solution of a question, which has long time engaged my full attention. In presenting yourself "as an exceptional person, who has always loved the Mohammedans as brethren and who earnestly tried to interpret between Hindus and Mohammedans and effect a union of hearts between two peoples, whose social and political interests in India are identical"—you have certainly put before yourself a very useful, but in the same time, a very arduous task. As far as my limited experience and unpretentious notions go, the solution of this problem in Asia has always seemed to me as an unsurmountable difficulty. You evidently know, better than myself, that in Asia the partition-wall between mankind is not the nationality, but religion. The Mohammedan scripture says—All true-believers are brethren, as well as—The unbelievers are one nation, a saying, which implies a strict unity between the followers of one faith, and does not admit any partition by race or nationality. I am therefore at loss to understand, how your idea—"to form a nation by a harmonious social fusion of the two component parts of the population"—sublime and high-minded as that idea is, would be carried out without shaking the very foundation of the respective communities? Of course, you are on the best way in proposing to effect that idea—"under the British Crown, which has given us such a strong and equitable government, as we could never hope to form ourselves, which has advanced us to a new life and is daily improving us, and which I devoutly pray will keep us until the time comes under God's Providence when we are in a position to help ourselves."

This argumentation speaks decidedly whole volumes in favour of the soundness of your views. The time will and must come when many of your countrymen and coreligionists will share in these healthy views, but I beg leave to say, that this to me is yet very very far, and that it is much easier to make whole Europe one community of a common interest and aim, than to mould the different nationalities and creeds of Hindustan into one nation. What you have to do is, to proceed on the way inaugurated by your British teachers without any premature aspirations to institutions unfit and eventually dangerous to the present stage of culture of the great mass of the peoples of India. What you have achieved hitherto under the guidance of great Britain and assisted by the innate splendid mental capacities of your people, is quite unique in the history of civilisation of mankind. Your hitherto made progress offers the best guarantee for the future development of India. You enjoy liberties, which may be the object of envy, not only of whole Asia and Russia, but also of many parts of Europe and the benignant rays of Liberty will certainly increase in the measure as the sun of enlightenment rises over the horizon of your vast and glorious country.

This is the humble advice, I can give you, as one who is not influenced by political, national or religious interests, but who, bearing the welfare and prosperity of poor Asia at his heart, has always felt happy on seeing downtrodden mankind raised to a better future.

As to your questions about the discrepancy between my statements in reference to the character of Sultan Abdul Hamid and those of a Mohammedan correspondent in the Daily News—I beg leave to say that the writer in the last named paper is not a Turk, but evidently an Ottoman subject living in London and discontented with the rule of the Sultan—and further I beg leave to call in your memory the fact, that the said newspaper is the mouthpiece of a political party in England, shortsighted enough to declare open war against fifty millions of their fellow citizens and ready to find fault with the Ottomans, who they have styled the unspeakable Turk, worthy to be driven bag and baggage out of Europe—whilst my experience of the character of the present ruler of Turkey is taken from a personal intercourse with the Sultan and from a long standing connection with the leading men on the Bosphorus. The difference of means and modes of observation must naturally entail different results.

Thanking you for your suggestive letter, and sending my kindest regards to Nawab Abdool Luteef Khan Bahadur.

I beg to remain yours faithfully,

A. VAMBERY."

THE LATE MR. ROBERT KNIGHT.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR—It is impossible to realise that Mr. Robert Knight has ceased to live. His death has indeed cast a gloom over the length and breadth of the country, and must have been keenly felt by every Indian. In Mr. Robert Knight we have actually lost one of our best friends and fearless advocates. The services rendered by him to our country for which we should be ever grateful to him, are inestimable, and are too well-known to be mentioned here. Always on the side of justice and truth, Mr. Knight has left an example of Christian devotion to the cause of the weak and the oppressed, and his noble example, will, I hope, have some effect upon many an editor. By his death we have been deprived of the services of a statesman of sterling worth and ability. It will be difficult to secure the services of such a man of sound judgment and keen observation, and the gap created by his death will never be filled. The memory of men of Mr. Knight's stamp ought to be preserved. I earnestly hope that some practical and substantial step will be taken to perpetuate the memory of the departed Statesman and Friend of India, who, though by birth an Englishman, was more than a true Indian.

BEHARYLAL PALIT.

POLICE.—FEBRUARY 4, 1890.

(Before F. J. Marsden, Esq.)

THE PIONEER DEFAMATION CASE.

The adjourned case in which Mr. G. W. Allen, Managing Proprietor of the Pioneer, was charged with libel at the instance of Captain A. W. Hearsay, was resumed to-day.

Mr. Avetoom, instructed by Mr. Rose, appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Pugh, instructed by Mr. Upton, for the defence.

Moti Lall Dutt, examined, said :—I am employed in the Dalhousie Institute Club. There is a Library attached to it. Many periodicals and papers are received there. The Pioneer is received. This (identified) is the copy of the Pioneer I received by post for the Club. It came from the Pioneer Office at Allahabad.

Witness was not cross-examined.

Elliott Walter Madge, the next witness called, said :—I am an assistant in the Government Treasury. I have read this article (shown) in the Pioneer. I read it on the evening of the 28th January, 1889. I read it in Calcutta. I did not then know Captain Hearsay. I made his acquaintance a few months after that out of Calcutta.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

His Worship observed that he did not intend to dispose of the case here, but would send it before a jury.

Mr. Pugh said he wished to call Mr. Hearsay.

His Worship asked Mr. Pugh if he wished to go on with his case for the defence when it was going to be committed to the Sessions.

Mr. Pugh said he wished to call Mr. Hearsay for five minutes only, after which it would be for his Worship to decide whether he would commit the case or not.

Andrew William Hearsay, called by Mr. Pugh, said :—I am the complainant in this case. I was the complainant in the case against Mr. Chesney and Mr. Dare in this Court. I believe the summonses were issued against them in June last. I remember being examined in this Court in the month of July in that case. This (shown) is my deposition. To the best of my belief, what is stated there is correct.

To the Court.—I have signed it.

Mr. Pugh here tendered the deposition.

Mr. Avetoom objected, on the ground that it related to a separate charge and against a different gentleman. Whatever the witness might have deposed to in a former proceeding against or in favour of another gentleman could not, counsel submitted, be used in this case. It was not for the purpose of corroborating certain statements, but the deposition was put in so that the whole of it, including the cross-examination, might be used.

His Worship observed that the only effect of the objection would be that Mr. Pugh would have to take the witness through each of the questions over again.

Mr. Avetoom submitted that the other side was intending to put in a lot of matter which had been elicited from the witness in that case in cross-examination. This could only be done either for the purpose of corroboration or contradiction. It was evident that it was not to corroborate anything the witness had said, and if it was for contradiction, it could only be done by the consent of the Court, or in cross-examination, which Mr. Pugh could not take advantage of, as Mr. Hearsay was now his witness. Counsel submitted that in the other case the examination-in-chief of the witness was very brief, but he was cross-examined by Mr. Gasper for two days, and the defence now desired to put in all that cross-examination. There were a great many statements made by the witness in cross-examination which could not be elicited now, as Mr. Hearsay was their witness. He challenged Mr. Pugh to state under what section of the Act he claimed to put in this deposition as evidence. He had anticipated this, and had carefully looked over the Act, and he would submit that there was no section under which this deposition could be put in as evidence.

Mr. Pugh, in reply to his Worship, said he was entitled to put in probably the whole of the deposition.

His Worship observed that it would be practically putting in the examination-in-chief and the cross-examination. Mr. Avetoom's contention was, he thought, a good one, that the cross-examination could not be put in, and he did not see under what section it could be put in.

Mr. Pugh said that if he went on with the examination of the witness, it would be so far as regards the truth of the statements in the alleged libel, and not more.—The Indian Daily News.

The Magistrate: I don't think so, I tell you. As far as you have gone, on the evidence before me I consider there is a prima facie case to go to the jury, and to the jury it will go.

Mr. Pugh: Even supposing I show from Mr. Hearsy's own lips that these statements are true?

The Magistrate: Even so I should say.

Mr. Pugh: Supposing, for the sake of argument, I did not contend the article was justified?

The Magistrate: I decline entirely to decide whether the article is a libel or whether it is for the public benefit or not. It is essentially a case for the High Court and jury.

Mr. Pugh: Supposing I raised two or three points and left the case to you?

The Magistrate: Even so I should not dispose of it.

Mr. Pugh: Supposing, for argument's sake, I went even further and said my client was advised that the article was not for the public benefit, but that he wrote it believing it for the public benefit, and that if the charge is made against him he would have to plead guilty?

The Magistrate: I don't care. Whether he pleads guilty or not I should still send it to the High Court. He will have to answer to the charge in the ordinary form after it has been framed, and say anything he thinks fit.

Mr. Pugh: Supposing my client were to plead guilty, you would still send the case to the High Court?

The Magistrate: Yes: I should.

[After consulting with Mr. Upton, the solicitor,]

Mr. Pugh repeated this question to the Magistrate and received identically the same reply.

Mr. Pugh: After that intimation it is not for me to take up the case here. I was in hopes we should be able to bring it to a close here.

The Magistrate: It is certainly not a case I should dispose of.

Mr. Pugh said that after the intimation from the bench he had no questions to ask Mr. Hearsy.

A discussion as to the best day to which to adjourn the case ensued, and ultimately it was adjourned till the 14th instant, when the defendant will be committed to the Sessions, which commence on the 17th.—The Pioneer.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1890.

No. 411

A DESPATCH FROM ENGLAND.

London, January 16, 1890.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Your representations of English life are so marvellously accurate, that I venture to send you the following over-true picture, which will speak for itself, as—

A FRIGHTFUL DREAM.

[FROM A STATESMAN'S PORTFOLIO.]

The leaf from the Portfolio says—

Arriving home late one night from, what some people, I find, call my parliamentary enjoyments, I took down at random from a shelf in my library a book which turned out to be the Pilgrim's Progress; and I well remember that I read and re-read the first page. Then I suppose that I slept, and, falling into the author's quaint fancy, "dreamed a dream."

"I dreamed that I walked through the wilderness of this world, and that I lighted on a certain place in which was a Den;" and over it was written Downing Street.

I dreamt that I saw a vast number of little men and women (persons ranging in height from four to six inches) trippingly enter my Den, dressed in every conceivable attire, of every imaginable colour. Most of them were soldiers, in all the uniforms, and no-uniforms, of the world, and in many cases they were accompanied by their little wives. The Frank, the Sikh, the Ghoorka, the Chinaman, the Japanese, the Spaniard, the Red Indian, the American, the Patagonian and the British were there: and I know not whom besides. I had barely time to take in the general features of this scene, when one of the little women—a very distinguished personage, whose breast was covered with stars and orders—cried out in an amusing tone, as of one who would make sport—"Let us have a dance." "No," said another of a grimmer countenance—"a prayer-meeting." Then I ventured to speak. "Mercy on us," I said, "you talk as if a dance and a prayer-meeting were the same thing."

This was received with laughter, which literally rang like a peal of silver bells, and one of the little ladies marching up close to my face said—"It is a Jay; peck at it!—peck at it! All! All!" Another took up the words, and sang—"Yes, old Peregrine Jay of Downing Street." And so they began what they called pecking. That is, smacking my face, pulling my beard, and pinching my cheeks; an occupation which seemed to amuse them greatly. After this had gone on for some time, I said—

"My dears, my name is not Jay. Neither is it Peregrine."

"Oh, yes it is," said the little lady who had first mentioned the name—"Don't you deny your name or I shall—yes, indeed I shall—horse-whip you. Why deny your name, old Peregrine Jay, when I was present at your baptism, and heard your sponsors promise for you Thirty Nine things, all of which you will find in your church-service. Have you a church-service, old Peregrine Jay?" And so the mockery went on till at last they broke into strains of melody, charming as regarded the music, though the words were but these—

Whether we dance, or whether we say
Wisdom's words to old Peregrine Jay
Counts for little—He's had his day!
Sound be his sleep—Let him sleep away!

"And so," said I, in a quiet chuckle to myself, "I am to be known to these lilliputian gentry as old Peregrine Jay. I hope my estimable colleagues may not hear of this. If not, why one name is as good as another so long as we're merry." My reflections were interrupted by the arrival of a fresh rabble—little Bishops, Nonconformist Divines, Deans, Canons, Archdeacons, Unitarians, Methodist Class-leaders, Salvationists, Governors of provinces in India, Members of Vice-regal Council, Brahmans, Buddhists, Archimandrites, and I know not what—a motley crowd, surpassing in picturesqueness even their predecessors, who now stood arrayed on one side of my Den, like figures in a pantomime, while the latest comers entered, singing—

Let us be jolly, and live while we may,
Sleep ye—but list ye—old Peregrine Jay;
Wonders will thicken—as thicken they must,
Till Peregrine, lacking wine water and crust,
Shall bury his head in old Downing-Street dust.
Let us be merry, and laugh while we may,
Misery gathers for Peregrine Jay!

I shuddered a little as this dismal rhyme fell on my ears. Then a little fellow from among the first comers stepped forward and sang—

Church and chapel—Hi their battle,
Sharp and close at hand!
Men of Right and men of Might
For Nationhood shall stand.

"What does all this mean?" I said to the little songster.

"It means Sir," he said—"I may tell it to you—
That when statesmen flatter they seldom are true;
A system—fast growing—with High, Low, and Jack—Including old Peregrine, now on his back."

I was about to resent this in stern and severe language, but before I could utter a word the little rascals, of both the widely different rabbles, began dancing over my body; and worst of all on my face, and especially my mouth and eyes, so that I could neither speak nor see. All at once the dancing ceased, and I saw enter another rabble of living dolls. Ha! What! old Granville hobnobbing with Storey! Dilwyn cheek-and-jowl with Selborne! Bradlaugh arm in arm, on the one side with Harcourt, on the other with Jacob Bright! George Campbell, once Lieutenant-Governor, embracing Justice Stephen, once Legal Member of Council, and burying old feuds for evermore.

"Mercy on me," I muttered—"Why here are all the Lords and Commons, from the great Poet, Wilfred of Brayton down to poor Alfred who sang of 'Cannon on right of them, cannon on left of them!' What a row they do make! There is one of them addressing 'gallant little Wales,' and bidding it refuse to pay its just debts as the best means of disestablishing the church. Another telling gallant little Wales that five-sixths of its sons are non-conformist in creed. Another (telling it that the established church is making enormous strides onward, day by day) calls on all non-conformists to join that historic and progressive church. What a pandemonium it is! What humbug it is!" I had arrived at this point of my reflections when the latest arrivals broke into song, which was taken up, in a kindred spirit,

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

by the first and second comers, till my Den resounded with the united melody—Thus—

Hydra-headed—Law-machine,
Out for a day—
Bishops, priests and quakers ;
Infidels and Shakers ;
Men of fibs and men of facts ;
Men of Bills, and men of Acts ;
Men from "India's coral strand"
Mighty in that far-off land :
Hey-hey!—Hey—Ho !

Thus they come and thus they go.

I now began to be seriously alarmed, and was about to cry for mercy, when a new rabble appeared, and to my mind the most unruly-looking of all. As these entered the third arrivals ranged themselves by the side of the first and second.

"Ah!" said I, "there is my old electioneering agent, when I sat for Pigswistle; and there my dear old Editor who did for me true Knight's service by calling black white and white black in my name; and there my matchless canvasser, Martin Magnolia Esquire."—"Let us have a play," shouted my old agent, John Mockington Pockington, the greatest electioneerer extant. Then they sang—

A play for the Hydra-head. Name we the Play—
'Down! Down with the Pride of old Peregrine Jay ;
'The statesman who long hath outlasted his day.'

"Mockington Pockington," I cried, "will you take your feet off my chest? You are suffocating me! Do you hear me, Sir?" Instead of replying in decent prose, the rascal sang, and all the agents and others joined in the song—

Lead us, or leave us, sings Mockington Pockington,
Bracing his chest like the swell of the sea :
Mob is the King now ; and he is the Thing now
Who dares to advance with the time and with Me.
Brave little Wales calls for service in Thumpers,
Tells you why rents she refuses to pay,
Bravely dishonest—Let's pledge her in bumpers !
This is one lesson old Peregrine Jay.

Conscience she calls it—and so must you call it,
If you would lead in this new trenchant day.
List to the popular voice—Then out-bawl it—
This thou well knowest old Peregrine Jay.
Paddy too see with his winks so cajoling ;
Innocent Pat—With his Plan of campaign ;
Eloquent words in his service are falling,
Sousing the land like a torrent of rain.
Badger John Bull!—'Tis the thing that will pay—
Take thou this lesson old Peregrine Jay !

"Mockington Pockington"—I cried—"Dost thou actually to my face boast the supremacy of Lies?" The great, little rascal replied jeeringly—

Some men like puddings, and some men like pies, Politics feed on the roundest of Lies.
See—wolves, bears, tigers, advance to the fray,
Foster and fatten them Peregrine Jay !

And now the liliputian multitude, as with one consent, made a dash upon me, each human figure transformed into that of a bird or beast of prey, or into a serpent with deadly fangs, the human face alone remaining. My old agent Mockington Pockington was a liliputian fox, ferocious almost beyond description. He fastened on my throat; shake him off I could not, though I strained and fought with him as it seemed to me for weeks and months. One foul thing that held fast to me was a horse-leech which cried—"Give! Give!—more! more!" At my heart was a fearful beast, bearing a name which I often had pledged in a bumper as—"The-Clergy-and-Ministers-of-all-Denominations." "Alas, Alas!" I cried—"What have I done to thee thou terrible thing?" The animal replied with a human voice—"List to the horse-leech—'Give—Give!—more—more!'"

Then a terrible voice rang through the Den, as when a man calls for his dogs—"Stockbroker!" "Speculator!" "Ignoramus!" &c., &c., &c., "fasten on this man;" and in an instant panthers, tigers, foxes, jackals, cobras, and rattlesnakes, rushed on to devour me. I closed my eyes, to die. All at once I heard the bark of a dog, and I cried out, in an agony which I still feel—"Good Dog! Good Dog! At them! At them!"

Then Mockington Pockington was again transformed, his body that of a serpent, his eyes like balls of fire. And he too cried out, but in a voice so soft and musical that mine as compared with it seemed like the grating of a saw—"At him! At him! Good Dog! Good Dog!"

As this was said the bird-manikins rose on the wing, and filled the Den with hideous forms and cries. Then I heard, in a voice, stern deep and solemn—

"Trust to the mastiff—Trust to the dog!"

The sound came like a fresh breeze in a sultry land, and a deep voice sang—

Trust to the dog—See his strong teeth beside thee !
Hold to the right—Though the puppets deride thee.
Fear not, old dreamer—Whatever betide thee,
Trust to the dog! Trust to the dog !—
Mastiff of England!—When manikins bicker,
When cravens wax faint—when dangers grow thicker ;
When strong arms are needed, when high hearts beat quicker,
Trust to the dog! Trust to the dog !
Heed not what manikin babblers are singing ;
Heed not the tidings the foul birds are bringing ;
Hark to the voice which with triumph is ringing ;
Trust to the Dog! Trust to the Dog !

I was about to relieve my long pent up feeling with a fervid exclamation of concurrence in this ditty, when something seemed to fall with a sound like thunder in my Den. Rousing myself to see what it was, I found that I had dropped the copy of the Pilgrim's Progress which I had been reading, and that my Den in the wilderness was really my library at home. There lay the book, the key to my dream. I picked up the fateful volume, and holding it before me, said—I fear in a somewhat histrionic way—"O, John Bunyan, most wonderful of dreamers, would that thou wert here to interpret this my dream; to help me to unravel the riddle of the pigmies, to show me how to obtain the protection of the Dog!" My wish was an impossible one; for (as the reader into whose hands this portfolio may fall is almost certain to know) John Bunyan has been a little while dead—dead as a door nail. Guess then, O reader! of my Portfolio. Guess the moral of my dream! For myself I shall do what in me lies to detect the Pigmies in whatever form or disguise they may appear, believing that when the dangers thicken, there is the good Dog ready for the spring in defence of the great British Empire in East and West.

Thus, dear Mr. Editor, this leaf from the Portfolio closes. Between you and your readers and myself, I may say, as a close secret, that I think I can see here (through the thin varnish of Peregrine Jay) more than two "eminent statesmen" who allow to the pigmies more than their due; who (to take your Indian share of the dream) give to Manchester what belongs to India, and to "Party, what was meant for mankind." I think it more than possible that a day not very distant, may try the union of England and India to the strain, and then that you and we shall stand back to back, and shoulder to shoulder, on a basis which will ennoble the historic union, which is capable of greater things, than any known before. Depend upon it the Empire—now silent down to its deepest depths—is the Dog, which will be both heard and felt when the time of trial shall have come.

A FRIEND OF REIS and RAYYET.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Notable Facts.—Intense heat augments the annoyances of skin disease, and encourages the development of febrile disorders; wherefore they should, as they may, be removed by these detergent and purifying preparations. In stomach complaints, liver affections, pains and spasms of the bowels, Holloway's ointment well rubbed over the affected part immediately gives the greatest ease, prevents congestion and inflammation, checks the threatening diarrhoea and averts incipient cholera. The poorer inhabitants of large cities will find these remedies to be their best friend when any pestilence rages, or when from unknown causes, eruptions, boils, abscesses, or ulcerations betoken the presence of taints or impurities within the system, and call for instant and effective curative medicines.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

NEWS from the new Brazilian Republic are not peaceful. Rio is a sort of military garrison, and the whole country may be said to be under martial law.

It is said the late William Gifford Palgrave left behind him an extensive work in poetry. It is autobiographical. It consists of nearly 15,000 lines written in terza rima and is named "A Pageant."

THE Reichstag has rejected, by 121 votes to 89, the proposal for the exemption of the clergy from military service, but has agreed to the mitigation of the terms of service for theological students. It has further decided to repeal the law of 1874, under which clergymen who had been deprived of their cures by the State and continued to officiate, could be expelled the country.

IN Berlin they propose to hold an International Exhibition, in 1897.

THE Postal Convention of 1856 between France and England expires on April 30 next. It has been denounced by England.

GREEK is the court language in Epirus. It has been so from time immemorial. It has such a hold on the inhabitants, that the Mussulmans of the district know no other language, and the Koran has to be interpreted to them in Greek. By an order of the Turkish Government, Greek has been prohibited in the Courts of Justice at Yanina, the capital. The change is equally inconvenient to the advocates and the general population, and no wonder a petition has gone up to the Sultan to revoke the decree.

THE Director of the Mint of the United States estimates the world's production of gold in 1888 at 159,490 kilogrammes, valued at 105,994,150 dols. The German statistician Dr. Adolph Soetbeer, of Göttingen, has also arrived at nearly the same figure, estimating the metal at 160,000 kilogrammes, valued at 106,267,000 dols. They, however, widely differ in their estimates of the less precious metal, silver. While the American puts it at 3,427,265 kilogrammes, of an average sterling silver value of 103,556,260 dols, or a coinage value of 142,437,150 dols, the German has arrived at the figure 3,637,000 kilogrammes, of a silver value of 109,932,000 dols, and a coining value of 155,000,000 dols.

THE coal capacity of the world has been a matter of speculation for some time. Here is one of the recent estimates. It does not take into account the immense coalfields in the North American Continent:—

"The low countries, Switzerland, Denmark, Germany and Bohemia, possess coal mines of a surface area of about 59,000 square miles. Russia alone has 22,000 square miles. The deposits of the island of Formosa amount to something like 10,000 square miles, some of the coal veins ranging up to 96 ft. in thickness. The coalfields of Austria, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece, Turkey, and Persia cover about 39,000 square miles, while those of China are estimated at the enormous figure of 4,000,000 square miles. But these are not all. The Falkland Islands, Patagonia and Peru are very rich in coal, while the Southern part of Chili is one immense deposit. In Brazil, veins varying in thickness from 17 to 25 feet are found in numbers, and in the United States of Columbia there is an abundance of the mineral. Mexico and the Vancouver Islands are also well supplied, there being probably not far from 20,000 square miles, while the deposits thus far discovered in Tasmania, New Caledonia and Natal are estimated to cover 1,00,000 square miles, the larger number of these deposits not yet having been worked."

THE American Consul at Manila thus reports on the tobacco cultivation in the Philippines:—

"The abandonment of the Government monopoly in 1882 gave the trade a great stimulus by the investment of private capital in it and a more equitable system of dealing with the native cultivators. There has therefore been a marked increase in the production. Formerly each unmarried native was required to set out 4,000 plants a year, and each married man 8,000, the crop to be delivered to the officials at a standard price, which was just 50 per cent. below that now paid. The gross revenue received from the monopoly was about £800,000 per annum. At present there is a licence tax of about £20 a year for manufacturing tobacco. The principal company engaged in the trade now is the Compania General, which owns large tobacco estates, has a capital of about three millions sterling, employs 10,000 hands, and produces 80,000,000 cigars, 400,000,000 cigarettes, and 5,000,000 lb. of cut tobacco annually. It is a Spanish company; there are also two large German firms, six Spanish, and a number of Chinese. The best tobaccos come from the provinces of Cagayan and Isabela, in Luzon, the annual produce from these being 60,000 to 100,000 tons. The method of cultivating and curing differs but little from that followed in other tobacco-producing countries. All Manila tobacco is made into cigars and cigarettes, plug, fine cut, or pipe tobacco being unknown there. It is classified in six grades according to the size and quality of the leaves. The total area of land under tobacco is about 60,000 acres. Last year the total export of cigars was 112,074,000, of which 26,715,000 went to Spain and 17,871,000 to Great Britain and the British possessions. In 1887 the total export amounted to 121,350 tons, and in 1888 to 184,548 tons."

THE Elect of God continue to be under a ban in the Empire of all the Russias. As a rule, they are not allowed to possess property. An exception is, however, made in favor of the learned—Jewish Doctors or Masters of Laws or Arts. A holder of a diploma of either of the three learned degrees has been granted the right to reside in all parts of the empire and, in virtue of such right, to acquire property in the district of his residence. But there the right ceases. It has been recently held by the Courts that such right is not transferable or heritable. A law student of the Jewish race transferred by a deed his houses and land, in Kieff, to his wife also of the same persuasion with himself, in her own right. The Notary Public objected to sanction the deed. The matter went to Court. It held that the right to acquire property was the result of an exception to the law granted in favor of the Jewish Doctor or Master of Laws or Arts, individually, and was not communicable to his wife or children. The decision has been upheld by the Court of Cassation of the Senate in St. Petersburg.

ARRANGEMENTS were complete when the last mail left England, for a marriage, at St. Mary's Church, Maryport, of a deaf and dumb couple, by a deaf and dumb clergyman.

COLONEL Pevtsoff, the head of the Thibetan Expedition, has justified his confidence. He has found a convenient North-Western pass and has arrived on the great table-land of Thibet. He finds the country round desolate and uninhabited. The southern portion of the plateau is, however, well watered and wooded. The table-land is 12,000 feet above the level of the sea.

THE Mohunt Bhagavam Dossjee of Hathiram Mutt, Tripati, has, as a matter of course, appealed against the sentence of three years' imprisonment. He has ceased to be the Mohunt, having, by a registered deed, transferred all his rights and privileges as such to his senior disciple Mohabir Dossjee. The convicted Mohunt has been lodged at the Vellore Central Jail, where he was removed, with some dignity in his own carriage escorted by a strong body of Police, from the Chittor Sub-Jail. He refuses to take any cooked food, living on fruit and water.

IN Madras city, one Sarvana Moodley has been sentenced to 3 weeks' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 25 fine, for selling an obscene book called Kokokum with obscene prints. The Magistrate has also ordered the destruction of the books.

THE Nadiad Agricultural and Cattle Exhibition has been announced for the 19th. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay will open the Show. It was started in the year 1883, and is held biennially. It was accordingly due last year, but that being a bad agricultural season, it comes off now. Although tracing its origin to the then Collector Mr. G. F. M. Grant of Kaira, it is entirely a free institution. It is independent of Government aid, and no charge is made for admission. The expenses are met from private donations. The Railway Companies in Gujerat make a contribution by charging the exhibits single fare for double journey.

THE Bengal Tenancy Act—VIII of 1885—came into operation on the 1st November 1885, the sections—61 to 64—relating to deposit of rent and the Chap. XII relating to distraint being postponed to 1st February 1886. The Act by its own operation does not apply to the Town of Calcutta, the Division of Orissa and the Scheduled Districts specified in the third Part of the First Schedule of the Scheduled Districts Act XIV of 1874, but it is open to the Lieutenant-Governor, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, to extend the whole or any portion of the law to the Division of Orissa or any part thereof. In the year of its operation, the Collector of Balasore recommended the extension of the Act to the Orissa Division. But the proposal received no local support and the Government put it by as premature. There is now a fresh proposition for the extension and from a different quarter. The Director of the Department of Agriculture and Land Records has reported that the laws now in force are hindrances to settlement proceedings now being held. He finds that they do not supply an adequate machinery for adjusting rents, inasmuch as they do not require the rayyets to question the Settlement Officer's proceedings till the record is completed, and that the procedure which they established has proved practically unworkable where it has been contested. He has therefore recommended the speedier process of Chapter X of the Tenancy Act. The Local Government is disposed to think that if the particular Chapter is to be extended, it will be convenient to introduce the entire law. Sir Stuart Bayley has, accordingly, invited the opinion of the Board and of the Revenue officers employed in Orissa, as also of those interested. The opinions should be transmitted to the Government before the 15th April, 1890.

A CORRESPONDENT writes that Mr. H. Lee has begun his work in Midnapur with his usual vigour. When he was last in charge of the district, he won golden opinions. Only a week or so after taking charge, he has gone touring in the interior and has inspected the Sub-Divisional, Sub-Registry and Settlement offices. At the Hamilton School, he distributed prizes to the boys, and Mrs. Lee to the girls. He has taken up the question of the drainage of the villages, where, as the late Mr. H. V. Bayley stated in one of his reports on the district, "a moderate rainfall destroys the crop of the year." With his knowledge of the district, we expect Mr. Lee to deal with the question not as one of Rupees, annas, and pies, or to investigate it with the borrowed light of his subordinates. At one of the sub-divisions at least, the old Tamlook, he may find a good field for work.

A NOTIFICATION dated the 11th February, 1890, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 12th February following, authorizes all Collectors in the Lower Provinces of Bengal to discharge the functions of Revenue Officers under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1885, vesting them with the powers of a Settlement Officer under Rule 1, Chapter VI of the Rules framed by Government under that Act.

DURING 1890, the following Mahomedan holidays will be observed in all public offices and Revenue and Magisterial Courts in Bengal, with the exception of the offices of Collector of Customs, Shipping Master, the Registrar of Assurances, Calcutta, the Collector of Stamp Revenue, Calcutta, the Stamping Department of the Office of the Superintendent of Stamps, Calcutta, and the Salt Rowannah and Opium Sale Departments of the Board of Revenue :—

THE Rajchandra College, Barisal, has been affiliated to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the B. A. Standard and in Law. When will the rival college be raised to the same standard?

THE latest day for submission of the statement of the requirements and probable expenditure of District Boards shall henceforth be the 15th of November.

THE Calcutta Municipality has in right earnest taken up the question of a dhobikhana. A piece of land, within its added jurisdiction, measuring about 5 bighas and 14 cottahs, No. 3, Woolfutbagan, Dihi Punnannagram, district 24-Pergunnahs, has just been declared under the Act. This is a very desirable step in sanitation, and will bring joy and comfort to many homes.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

PARLIAMENT was opened on Tuesday. The Speech from the Throne opens with the usual announcement of friendly relations with all Foreign Powers. It justifies the action taken in Nyassaland. The acts committed by the Portuguese are regarded as an insult to the British flag, and a violation of Portugal's word to withdraw the military forces from the territory where settlements were formed by Native tribes under British protection. The condition of Ireland continues to improve and agrarian crimes to diminish. The Queen is gratified at the Melbourne Conference and applauds the desire for federation. Her Majesty hopes that the anti-slavery Conference at Brussels will promote the repression of the slave trade. The Bills to be introduced relate to tithes, workmen's dwellings in London, Irish Land Purchase and an elective system of Local Government in Ireland on the same lines as in England and Scotland. Parliament will be asked for better accommodation in camps and barracks, for the distribution, and the health and comfort of the troops.

THE next day, the Upper House adopted an Address. At the debate, Lord Granville regretted what he termed the hasty and harsh policy adopted with regard to Portugal. The Prime Minister, in reply, said that Portugal had been repeatedly warned during the past two years that Great Britain could not recognize the Portuguese claims to the territory under British protection. The acts of Major Pinto demanded prompt action to impress the Natives with Britain's power to protect them.

On the 13th, in the Lower House, Mr. Parnell was to have moved an amendment to the Address saying that unjust and coercive laws in Ireland are invading the liberties of the people and impeding amicable relations with England, and that the House regrets that the Queen's Speech omits to make mention of any proposals for remedying the discontent in Ireland.

The House has rejected by a majority of 48 votes Sir William Vernon Harcourt's amendment declaring the Times guilty of a breach of privilege in reference to the Parnell Commission, and summoning the editor to the bar of the House.

SIR James Fergusson assured the House that the relations between the British and Portuguese Cabinets continue friendly. We read at the same time that Lord Salisbury in his latest despatch refuses and ridicules Portugal's claim to arbitrate.

Portugal is arming. Decrees are out for completion of the defences of Lisbon, the arming of the Forts with new guns, laying of torpedoes in the Tagus, and the reorganization of the Army. There is a proposition to buy some light war ships and issue bonds to cover the cost. They have also started a National Defence Fund, the King and Queen and the ex-Queen subscribing 20,000*l*.

IN Bulgaria, a plot to overthrow the Government has been discovered. Major Panitza with six other officers are under arrest. In some quarters it is attributed to Russia. Prince Ferdinand has offered to abdicate.

THE Due d'Orleans having just returned to France from his foreign travels, there is an alarm in the capital. He offered himself a candidate for the army. In explanation of his application, he wrote to M. de Freycinet that he was of age, that he was aware of his disability to take any rank, but he was not incapacitated by the law to be enrolled as any ordinary Frenchman. The reply he received was that he found himself arrested. He was next tried by the Tribunal of the Seine and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. In Court, he defended himself. It was crowded by Royalists and Republicans. The Royalists made a demonstration in the Boulevard. They proceeded to and crowned the statue of Henry the Fourth.

THE Prince is touring in the Native States. From Kapurthala the Royal party came to Patiala, where they arrived rather late in the evening of Friday the 7th. A large encampment had been pitched for their reception, as well as for the accommodation of about fifty other guests from neighbouring stations. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, there were illuminations and fireworks which the Royal party witnessed after dinner. The early part of Saturday was spent in receiving visits from, and returning them to, the Chiefs of Patiala, Dholepur, and Jhind, the Prince being also shown the Maharaja of Patiala's large collection of jewels and other curiosities. After lunch, the Prince went out shooting, and spent a couple of hours among the partridge and quail. Returning to the Patiala Railway station, the party then left for Delhi, which was reached on the morning of Sunday. The arrival was private. The Prince drove to Ludlow Castle which was specially fitted up for the occasion. At 11 O'clock, the Prince attended Divine Service. Monday was spent in visiting the Kutub Minar. In the evening, there was a Conversazione at the Durbar Hall where the entertainment provided was a nautch and display of fireworks. The roads and principal buildings were illuminated. On Tuesday, the Prince visited the Fort and the Jamma Masjid. His Royal Highness took an exceptional interest in the sights of Delhi, especially in the Kutab which he saw the day before. Having had quite a busy week before coming to Delhi, the Prince's stay here was observed as a kind of rest. The next day, he went snipe-shooting to one of the Jheels. The visit to Ulwar having been given up on account of the Maharaja's illness, His Royal Highness went direct from Delhi to Jeypore on the evening of Wednesday, where he arrived the next morning. From the railway station the Royal party were driven in carriages to the Sanganeer Gate where an elephant procession was formed. His Royal Highness headed the procession on a huge tusker accompanied by the Maharaja and the Resident. This was a happy idea, as besides being a grand Oriental display, it gave the people a good opportunity of seeing their Royal Prince. The procession passed through the city and made its exit by the Ajmere Gate. The exchange of visits with the Maharaja occupied the forenoon.

THE report of the Parnell Commission has just been made public. The Judges seem unanimous. The text is judicially calm. The gravest charges are declared unfounded and unproved. The document has satisfied all parties. The Times claims that, with the exception of the forgeries, the report fully confirms the charges of "Parnellism and Crime." The Gladstonian and the Irish Parnellite press speak of it as a triumphant acquittal of the Parnellites. The Unionist press eulogises the fairness of the conclusions. The Conservative press is satisfied that the Judges hold the Parnellites morally answerable for the crimes and outrages in Ireland.

THE fifth annual meeting of the National Association for supplying female medical aid to the Women of India, held under the presidency of the Viceroy at the Town Hall on the 7th instant, was unusually interesting. The attendance of ladies and gentlemen was all that could be desired, and the character of the speeches was of a markedly superior character. The Hon'ble Mr. Hutchins, in presenting the report, made a lucid statement of the progress made and the satisfactory position now attained by the Association. He illustrated his remarks by references to a map of India which accompanied the report and on which were marked by red spots the places where the Association's operations had already been extended. Having taken his audience on a tour, as he said, over the whole country, and shown how through the impetus given by its noble founder, India was fairly studded with these beneficent institutions from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin and from Quetta to Mandalay, Mr. Hutchins concluded with acknowledging the great services done to the Association by Lady Lansdowne and the Honorary Secretary, Captain Streatfeild, who had borne the brunt of the daily work and correspondence. While the financial position of the Association was of course one to be regarded with satisfaction, there was still a sum of half a lac of rupees needed to build the Dufferin Zenana Hospital in Calcutta, and he made a vigorous appeal to the public spirit and generosity of Bengal and especially of Calcutta, not to allow themselves to be left behind when much more was being done in other parts of the country.

The other speakers who followed Mr. Hutchins were the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Amir Ali, the Hon'ble Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, the Hon'ble Mr. Nulkar, Mr. A. M. Bose, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and the Viceroy. All the speakers spoke in cordial support of the appeal made by the Hon'ble Mr. Hutchins for funds, and there were not unnaturally wistful glances cast at the surplus of the Prince's Reception Fund. It would be invidious to make any distinction where all spoke so well, but, of the native speakers, the most telling speeches were those of Dr. Ghose and Mr. Bose. Both spoke with great humour and eloquence, and were complimented by the Viceroy in his concluding remarks. Dr. Rash Behari, alluding to the red spots in the map, made a good point by looking forward to a time when it would be, as he said in the words of Shakespeare, "one red." Both the Lieutenant-Governor and the Viceroy spoke in their usual excellent style and commended the appeal for funds with great and earnest sympathy. The Viceroy noticed Dr. Rash Behari's suggestive allusion to the red in the map with great good humour. Lord Lansdowne said:—

"I believe that more than one Viceroy has been credited with a desire to paint the whole map of India red, and I am not sure that a similar accusation has not once or twice been already levelled at my head. I am quite prepared to say that, if by painting the whole map of India red is meant painting it red in the sense indicated in the speeches of the two gentlemen who have addressed you so eloquently this evening, I am ready to commence the process at once, and I join with them in hoping that before very long this little eruption of red spots which now somewhat sparsely ornaments the surface of the country may eventually arrive at what is, I believe, known in medical phraseology as the confluent stage."

Altogether, the meeting was a great success, and after it, the Zenana Hospital, which is to perpetuate Lady Dufferin's name in this city, ought not to languish for want of support.

THE movement for the publication of cheap and wholesome literature in this country has, at any rate, luck on its side. Mr. Johnston, who originated the idea, can have no complaint on the score of want of patronage. Coming out with the best credentials from a late Viceroy, he had an easy task in winning the smiles of the highest in this land. Already, Lord Lansdowne and Sir Stuart Bayley look approvingly on his scheme, and if patronage were all, it is bound to succeed. Mr. Johnston evidently knows not only to win patronage but to ensure its permanence. Towards this, the essential thing was, of course, to bring the Department of Education to look with the same favor as the higher magnates, and Sir Alfred Croft already seems to relish Mr. Johnston's idea very well. The movement in England was started under most illustrious auspices, and a Minister of Indian Education may well feel proud of associating his name with a similar movement in this country. So far everything promises well for Mr. Johnston's project.

In itself, it certainly looks an excellent project and highly plausible. An agency for the production of cheaper and better books, can only be a blessing at all times, and in all places. The scheme has a philanthropic aspect too. It aims at counteracting the taste for obscene books which finds too much encouragement from the present character of a great part of local publications. We quite see all this, but still the prospect of success in an enterprise of this kind does not appear very hopeful. We have already literature enough, of the most unexceptionable character, placed at our doors at sufficiently accommodating prices by a number of English publishing firms. We have indeed almost an embarras de riches in this respect, and for any rival enterprise to succeed it would be necessary to outbid the competition of the mother country. To do this will require the employment of pecuniary intellectual and moral resources, which, so far as we can see, do not appear to be forthcoming. England owes her cheap literature to the sacrifices of publishing heroes like Knight and the Chambers brothers. The first ruined himself in the attempt, and the struggles of the latter were equally heroic, if more successful in the end. We do not know Mr. Johnston sufficiently, but the movement has to face great practical difficulties.

THE way in which British Pundits air their little knowledge of Indian words is astounding for its effrontery. Without the slightest acquaintance with Sanskrit, many of them trace, with the coolest assurance, the etymologies of purely Sanskrit words adopted into the English tongue, and offer them as evidence of scholarship and research. In a recent compilation entitled "The Dictionary of Every-day Difficulties in reading, writing, and speaking the English language; or, hard words made easy," published by Messrs. Ward Lock and Co., and which is introduced to the world with the modest announcement that "the best authorities have been consulted, to secure the accuracy of the definitions and explanations," the word Brahman is explained as "the priests or philogophers among the Hindoos; they take their title from Abraham, whom they called Brahma, and affected to imitate the life of the patriarch by living in deserts." The syntax, so far as the collocation and the sequence of tenses is concerned, may be a little faulty, but then the etymology is above reproach. The Brahmans of India, therefore, must be held to have derived their name from the patriarch of the Old Testament, whom, besides, they affected to imitate by living in the wilderness. There were, therefore, no Brahmans before the days of Abraham. The sacred threads of these people have very probably been derived from a calf's tether which the sturdy patriarch happened to have flung across his shoulders at the time the first Brahman chanced to have a peep at him. It is true Abraham knew not to read and write and modern scholars have failed to find any resemblance between the Hebrew and the Sanskrit tongues. But then it is not difficult to trace the devotion of the Indian Brahmans to intellectual culture and literary pursuits to the accident of Abraham's poring over certain broad leaves of a forest tree lying before him at the time the crafty progenitor of the Indian priests took a secret survey of the Jewish shepherd. The act of Abraham was easily mistaken by the timid on-looker for deep study of some writing. Hurrah for the learned editor employed by Messrs. Ward and Lock! The savants engaged in the study of Indian antiquity had better shut up shop. Here is as interesting and as historical an account of the origin and rise of the Indian Brahmans as any man in the full possession of his senses could desire. Messrs. Trübner and Co. also had better take care. The diary kept in old Indo-Scythiac, the common parent of Hebrew and Sanskrit, by the first progenitor of the Indian Brahmans, written up from day to day in course of his peregrinations from Asia Minor to the land of the five rivers, may any day be given to the world by Messrs. Ward Lock & Co., for its admiration and to the eternal confusion of all Oriental scholars.

THE Accountant-General, Bengal, has estimated the Imperial receipts under the head of Stationery and Printing for the year 1890-91, at Rs. 48,000 and the Provincial receipts at Rs. 1,65,000, against Rs. 47,112 and Rs. 1,74,959, the actuals of 1888-89. The estimate of expenditure under the Imperial head "Stationery purchased for Central Stores" for the current year has been raised from Rs. 9,25,000 to Rs. 12,55,000. The estimate under the same head for the next year has been put down at Rs. 14,96,000. The increase is due to the anticipated demands on account of the Census and for the purchase of country-made cream-wove and white-laid paper in place of the English cream-wove and blue-laid paper. The next year's Budget provides for the pay at Rs. 7 a month of a durwan to look after a godown for the storage of stationery in Strand Road and for that at Rs. 40 to Rs. 60 a month of an additional clerk for the compilation in the Stationery Department of the detailed comparative statement of the value of stationery for the offices and departments of the Government of India. The sanctioned grants are :—

Imperial.
Stationery purchased for Central Stores	...	Rs. 14,96,000.
Provincial.
Stationery Office at the Presidency	...	Rs. 1,11,640.
Stationery purchased in the country	...	" 70,000.
Government presses	...	" 3,03,000.
Printing at private presses	...	" 10,000.
Stationery supplied from Central Stores	...	" 5,35,000.

THE new Municipal law is indeed a hardship on owners of busti lands. To raise a larger revenue, Sir Henry Harrison has, among other ingenious contrivances, with the sanction of an accommodating legislature, thrown on the owners of land the duty of realizing the rates payable by owners of huts. It does not matter whether the rates are realized or realizable or not. The landlord must advance to the Municipality the rates payable by his tenants. The owner of the land must satisfy the demands both against himself and the owners of the huts. The law is not, indeed, wholly inconsiderate. It allows a certain percentage which, however, is not equal to the risks and responsibilities of the new situation. Section 117 of the Act says :—

"The entire consolidated rate imposed upon bustee land and the huts built thereon shall, after deducting therefrom a sum equal to one-eighth of such rates, be paid by the owner of such land. The sum deducted shall be retained by the owner of the land as a set off against the expenses which may be incurred in collecting the portion of the rate recoverable from the occupiers of the land or the owner or occupiers of huts built thereon, under the provisions of the next succeeding section, and as a commutation of all refunds in respect of huts which are vacant or which may be removed or destroyed during the continuance of the period for which the rate is imposed."

The law is not uniformly considerate, though. While it allows a deduction, it deprives the landlord of the general right granted by it of claiming refunds in cases of vacancy.

The next section referred to is :—

"Whenever a rate is imposed on bustee lands, the Commissioners shall cause the land and the huts standing on it to be separately valued, and the owner of the land may recover from the owner of each hut half the consolidated rate paid by him for the land on which the hut stands, and the entire consolidated rate payable on account of the hut."

The proviso to the first named Section that "no additional rates shall be imposed on account of any new huts built or of any huts enlarged during the year for which the valuation remains in force, under the provisions of Sec. 124," is of doubtful advantage to the landlord, for although, under Sec. 124 "Bustee lands with the huts upon them, or lands that are waste or used for agricultural purposes, may be valued annually at the discretion of the Commissioner, and shall be so valued on the application of the owner. When not re-valued, the former valuation shall remain in force from year to year until a re-valuation is made," the municipal law itself allows no relief to the landlord when his demand for revaluation is refused or put off. He is, again, not permitted the speedy procedure secured to the Municipality, for realization of the rates, but must have course to the expensive and dilatory law Courts for collection of the rates as of rents.

To bring all grades of landlords under the operation of these sections, a "Bustee" has been defined to mean "a plot of bustee land, not less than ten cottahs in area, bearing one number in the assessment book, or a collection of such plots adjacent to one another exceeding in the aggregate one bigah in area." (Sec. 3.)

SUCH a law could not but raise a protest. It must be confessed, though, that the agitation made against the new measure before it passed the Legislative Council, was extremely feeble. It was, again, quite hurried through the Council, without a tithe of that care for rights of property which it is exhibiting in the Port Trust Bill now passing through the same Chamber.

THE loudest and longest opposer of the improved law is Baboo Jodoolal Mullick. He still resents its harshness. Although it has been in operation for nearly a year, he still considers that it ought not to be given effect to. At any rate, he thinks that the rates should not be realized in advance, but the landlord should be given enough time to recover them from the tenants to enable him to make the necessary payment to the municipality. He therefore refused to pay certain Bustiland bills, and for this recusancy he has been disgraced.

LAST week, the municipality enforced the law against the Baboo. Anticipating opposition from his firm attitude, the municipality had invoked the aid of the police, and invaded the Baboo's house for purposes of distraint. Jodoolal had not anticipated this swoop, as he could be least prepared for the insult in his own house and before his own people and immediate neighbours, specially when he did not mean to evade or escape the municipal impost. The municipality and the police found a free, if not a cordial, welcome to the house and were given their own choice of the goods. They found the Baboo meek as a lamb, and marched off in glee with two carriages from the stables.

JODOOLAL feels the humiliation, as well he may, though of his own inviting, and is inconsolable. A mild Hindu, his only recourse is to law and lawyers. A cool, calculating Calcutta Baboo, he is preparing for a suit for damages for injured dignity. In the meantime, Messrs. Beeby and Rutter, have, on his behalf, addressed the following communication to the Secretary to the Calcutta Corporation, stating the case for the Baboo, of course, with lawyerly reserve :—

"SIR,—With reference to the seizure and removal of two carriages belonging to our client Baboo Jodoolal Mullick for realization of Bustee Bills, he regrets exceedingly that the Corporation should have adopted a course which appears to him unnecessary and harsh.

The Bustee rates are under the present Municipal Act for the first time recoverable from the owner, and there has been considerable delay on the part of the Commissioners themselves in delivering to him the lists of tenants and the rates due from them. The first instalment of the lists reached him so late as September last and the lists are not even now complete.

Our client does not at present contend that the Corporation might not be legally entitled to adopt the course they have chosen to take, but his grievance is that they should have put the law in force against him for these rates, considering that he has paid all other rates which he was liable for, and as regards these rates had actually applied to the Commissioners for time to pay.

There could not have been the least doubt as to our client's ability to pay, and he thinks that he was entitled to some consideration at the hands of the Commissioners before they put him to the indignity of having his property seized, especially having regard to the fact that the amount due from the tenants, though large, consisted of small sums which had to be collected by him.

And moreover as to the actual seizure, he thinks that surely there was no necessity to attend with a number of officials of the Corporation and a body of Police, and attempt to create disturbance which he at once stopped by having his coach house door opened for the purpose of allowing the removal of his carriages. The number of officials seem to have been unable to take care of the carriages removed, for our client has learned that one of them has been damaged through their carelessness.

Our client complains that the law should have been taken advantage of to insult and annoy a person, and he will seek such redress for the wrongs done him as may be open to him and as he may be advised."

By the time the suit is filed, or matured for hearing, Sir Henry Harrison, the author and enforcer of the law, will have left the municipality, for a higher and a quieter place.

THE connection of Fort William with the drainage system of the Town has been decided upon. The present practice is to void the sullage of the Fort into the river and to cart away the nightsoil through the city to the municipal depot in Park Street. The first is no doubt extremely objectionable. The last may be tolerated as a necessary nuisance. After a deal of correspondence between the municipal Engineer and the Government, Mr. Kimber has suggested that the connection be made at the west end of Dhurmotollah Street to the No. 4 main receiving sewer. Up to the point of connection, the project consists in the adoption of sluices hydro-pneumatic system. We hope the authorities concerned are satisfied that this connection will not introduce a new element of unhealthiness into the barracks.

THE Leprous Memorialists have reached a subscription of Rs. 45,064-4. There are no Petits in Bengal, or by this time it would be swelled by lacs. The Memorialists now look out for other aids. They are, of course, sure of the sympathy and co-operation of the Calcutta Corporation, and propose

1. To ask the Local Government to sanction the merging of the present Leper Asylum in a new Asylum to be built away from the centre of the population under the name of the Albert Victor Asylum.

2. To ask the Local Government to allow the present site and buildings to be eventually sold and the proceeds together with the present endowment of Rs. 15,000 and any other fund or funds belonging to the present Asylum to be applied as above indicated.

Sir Stuart Bayley has begun to forgive them, and, anticipating their proposal, has ordered—as we announced some weeks ago—for an extra provision of Rs. 17,000 on the Leper account in the next year's Budget.

LAST Saturday, as announced, Mr. Percival Spencer rose and descended, but vastly below the height he had proposed. The drop was not 2 miles. It was only 1,680 feet, according to three simultaneous observations with theodolites by officers of the Survey Department, and according to his own 10,500 feet. To-day, he takes up with him a native—P. C. Laha.

SIR Lepel and Lady Griffin arrived at Calcutta on Sunday last, and left for Burma on Thursday morning by the Rangoon Mail Steamer, to inspect the Ruby Mines.

IN the last issue of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, Sir Lepel justifies his previous article on the Native States and replies to Moulvie Madhi Ali and others.

BOTH the Viceroy and the Lieutenant-Governor are expected to be present at the Mahomedan Literary Society's entertainment, at the Town Hall, on Monday night.

WE congratulate Dr. James R. Wallace on his having brought out his medical monthly, The Medical Record, from the beginning of this year. We hope there is room for a cheap journal on medicine, and the editor's professional experience will, we dare say, enable him to adapt it to the popular demand.

MR. Marsden, the Chief Magistrate of Calcutta, takes a year's furlough, and the Hon'ble Syed Amcer Hossein, the Northern Division Magistrate, naturally expects to get the officiating appointment. At any rate, there is a precedent on his side. Mr. Amir Ali had a similar promotion in pay, although he continued to do his old duty in the Northern Division. But there are Messrs. Leith and Handley, Barristers-at-law, and the head, nominal or real, of the Calcutta Magistracy has always been a Civilian or a Barrister.

THE growing taste for floriculture and flowers is an interesting feature of the day. There are now more annual Flower Shows than there used to be. The public appreciation of these, judged from the large numbers of visitors, is also on the increase. The other day's Flower Show at Cossipore, held by Baboo Hem Chunder Mitter, was largely attended, and the number of prizes offered shows that there is not much lack of patronage.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1890.

MAX MULLER ON ORIENTAL STUDIES.

PROFESSOR Max Muller delivered an admirable speech in inaugurating the School of Modern Oriental Studies established under the auspices of the Imperial Institute. It was admirable from more than one point of view. The claims of Oriental learning could not have a more powerful advocate, and they were presented in every possible light. As a rhetorical effort, the address will always occupy a high place. Its chief excellence, however, to our mind, lay in the subdued spirit of enthusiasm in which it was conceived. The institution realises at last the dream of his life, and the venerable scholar's heart naturally overflowed with joy at the consummation. And well might he feel enthusiastic on such an occasion, and treat the audience to a dryas dust and profound exposition of the merits of Oriental classics. There was, however, a studied avoidance of the severity of the cloister. As an argument for the cultivation of Oriental learning by Englishmen, having such varied relations with India, the address has great popular importance. It is, indeed, something unique. Whether as an appeal to the business instincts of the English people or to the higher political sentiments, Max Muller's elaborate plea for Oriental studies must command respectful attention, and hard, indeed, must that heart be in which it failed to strike a sympathetic chord. The first, and, indeed, the major portion of the address dealt with the subject from a practical point of view. The advantages which an intimate acquaintance with the languages and literature of Eastern countries must confer on Englishmen having commercial, military, or diplomatic interests with those countries, were described with great force and knowledge, and illustrated by references to facts and incidents coming within the range of his own experience of affairs. It is not a mere learned dissertation from a votary of learning, its value is considerably enhanced by its practical character. The professor was in the best form, and spoke with spirit and even sprightliness like any man of affairs.

The position of England in the East is unique. She may have, said the professor, rivals in Europe, but here she stands supreme, unrivalled, unapproached. She wields her scaptre over 300 millions of people who speak Oriental languages; she supplies the markets of 1,000 millions of the people of Asia, and yet for cultivating a knowledge of these languages and educating a sufficient number of young men to serve her interests and maintain her power in the East, England has so far done far less than Russia, France or Germany. For the little, done in this respect, up to this time, the credit belongs to the Universities, rather than to the Government. Oxford and Cambridge had shown great liberality in their expenditure for Oriental teaching, and the University College and King's College which had now united under the auspices of the Imperial Institute in founding the present School, were also worthy of honorable mention for the part taken by them in the cause. But the cause is of Imperial dimensions, and casual efforts of this kind could scarcely make an adequate impression. Imperial interests, said he, are at stake, and the country has a right to expect Imperial—that is, concentrated—action. Otherwise, asked he, what is the good of an Empire? We might as well go back to the Heptarchy. The wit of the allusion was appreciated and could not fail to tell. The speaker then referred to the liberal provisions made by Russia, France and Prussia for the cultivation of Oriental scholarship, and commended their example and particularly that of Russia to the English Government. No country has been such a patron of Oriental studies, and none, said the professor, was better served by her polyglot diplomatists.

It is impossible to do justice to the address by any words of our own. Our readers must see it for themselves, and we intend reproducing it in our columns for their benefit.

The peroration of the speech was a noble plea for sympathetic treatment of the people in the government of India. The knowledge of Indian languages and literature on the part of the officers of the Government, was the best means of imbruing their minds with those feelings of respect and sympathy for the people the absence of which manifested themselves in the usual character of the administration. Knowledge must precede love, and the Englishmen coming in contact with the Indian races could not come to look on them with kindly feelings without that knowledge of their character which could only be acquired by a study of their literature. This portion of Max Muller's address will not be appreciated by the Anglo-Indians, and already it has met with ridicule at some hands, but it is just as well a noble political creed should now and then be preached to their unwilling ears.

ANARCHY IN BHOPAL.

BHOPAL is no more that bed of roses which the sublime imagination of the blind supporters of the unfortunate Begum made it, after the retirement of Sir Lepel Griffin and transfer of Colonel Ward from the head of its administration. No longer the milk of human kindness flows from the renowned Tal—no more are the lives of its inhabitants safe. As reported by some of the leading Urdu papers up the country, it is again the hot-bed of fanaticism, and anarchy reigns supreme. The administration of an obedient pleader-minister, with no experience of administration of any kind, selected by the Begum on purely private considerations on the part of her husband, has proved what was expected by the discerning and the disinterested. The deposed husband of the Begum has asserted himself supreme, and the new Dewan is a mere blind. While Siddiq Husain is seriously ill and bedridden, and physicians have been called from Lucknow to treat him, Mirza Fazl Beg, the able Madarul Maham or Dewan of the heir-apparent and her most confidential and loyal servant, has been shot dead by a Wahabi ruffian, named Alimuddin. He fired twice at the Dewan and deliberately killed him while pretending to be engaged in a religious discussion with the Dewan. This incident has, naturally caused great sensation and alarm, and greatly shocked the heir-apparent and her whole family, who are now apprehensive of their own lives. With this news, comes another report, through the Rampore Dubdabai Sekundari, of the resignation of the new Prime minister and the preparations of his protégés to leave Bhopal. It is an open secret that the diabolical assassination of the able and trusted officer of the heir-apparent was instigated by some of her enemies who, in their Wahabi way, removed what they believed might prove a possible thorn on their side. It is a curious coincidence that this unhappy incident should take place when the much abused Sir Lepel Griffin is in this country. Where are those advocates of justice and humanity, the mouth-piece of the dumb millions, the fierce critics of the Indian administration, who moved heaven and earth against the firm and just actions of Sir Lepel Griffin? Let them open their eyes and see what mischief they have done. It is impossible for ordinary editors, innocent of any knowledge of the Wahabis and their tenets, and blindly ignorant of the true internal affairs of Bhopal, to know what mischief has been done by Siddiq Husain Khan throughout India as well as in Bhopal, and how the resources of the Bhopal State have been wickedly employed in promoting and spreading the notorious Wahabi propaganda. He got most objectionable books compiled by learned Wahabi Moulvies and had them distributed among British subjects to the detriment of public peace and good government. I am disposed to think that for these offences, the Government of India treated Siddiq very leniently, and most weakly allowed him to resume the Bhopal Government.

No one could have removed those dangerous elements of atrocity and fanaticism from Bhopal without a strong and a firm hand, and none was more fitted for the task than Sir Lepel Griffin.

In what regard or respect the people of Bhopal hold Siddiq Husain, would appear when, for attendance on him during illness, his confidential friend and countryman Shaikh Asghar Ali, the well-known scent dealer of Lucknow, has been especially summoned. He is so much hated by the people of Bhopal that his own servants could not be trusted. If Siddiq Husain could be kept out from the Government, if not from Bhopal, by this time or long before, her present lamentable situation would have been remedied.

Now, at any rate, the British Government must deal with the matter firmly and with greater humanity for the people of Bhopal. If a minister is required, a strong and experienced person, either Native Mahomedan or European, should be appointed, and Siddiq Husain should be shelved. The Begum herself should be told that if she must yield to the wily insinuations of the husband, all power should be taken out of her hands. If a minister is not approved, then a Council of Regency, with a strong Mahomedan element, should be appointed to administer the State. Any delay in this behalf may end in the assassination of the heir-apparent or of her beloved and popular husband. Anyhow, Wahabism and anarchy must cease in Bhopal.

ANTI-WAHABI.

CIVIL JUSTICE AT HOWRAH.

IT is a pity that in a place like Howrah, which is so near to Calcutta, the civil judiciary should not be strong. The policy of non-interference with Local Self-Government, is, perhaps, being carried too far. Complaints against the Commissioners are, as a rule, refused to be enquired into by the Lieutenant-Governor or those that act in his name. The petitioners are always referred to the Civil Court. Under these circumstances, it is the duty of Government to provide an able and fearless judiciary in cities and towns ruled by Municipal Corporations. In places, again, like Howrah, where Civilian Magistrates always manage to get themselves elected or appointed as Municipal Chairmen, the obligation is all the greater of strengthening the Civil Courts, by appointing the very pick of the service. A perusal, however, of the records of the civil cases instituted against the Howrah Municipality within the last two or three years, will, we are sure, strike the reader with surprise at the helplessness displayed by the presiding officers who heard those cases. Frequent postponements in many cases led to such delay and swelled the costs to such figures that the parties cursed themselves for having resolved to withstand the illegal acts of the Corporation. One case, that of a poor widow, for damages caused a sensation. After the arguments had been closed and at a time when judgment was expected, the Court threw out broad hints to the parties for settling the matter amicably. Our Moonsiffs and Sub-Judges have no idea of what handle they give to accusations, against themselves, of incompetence and want of independence, by throwing out such hints. In this particular case, the widow, smarting under her wrongs, refused to compromise, but then her pleader, without reference to her, settled the case. In another cause that is pending before the first Moonsiff, the plaintiff is a local Zemindar and Municipal Commissioner. He has sued the Chairman and Vice-Chairman for damages and refund of a sum alleged to have been illegally realised from him under color of the municipal law. Whatever the merits of the cause, after service of summons, when the day fixed for the defendants' appearance came, nobody answered the call for the latter. The Moonsiff then sent for one of the gentlemen who had in other cases appeared before him for the Municipality and who is popularly supposed to be the pleader of the Howrah Municipality. This gentleman also happens to be a Municipal Commissioner himself. Questioned by the Moonsiff about the non-appearance of the Chairman or the Vice-Chairman in the matter before him, he answered that he had got no instructions. Even then, instead of allowing the case to go on ex parte after proof of the due service of process, the legal luminary on the Bench asked the pleader to put in an application, as a Municipal Commissioner himself, for a postponement. The plaintiff objected and pointed out that a Municipal Commissioner, as such, in the absence of a written power properly executed by the Chairman, could not appear for the Chairman in instituting and defending suits. If the Moonsiff allowed such an extraordinary application, there would be nothing to prevent each of the thirty individual Commissioners that constituted the Howrah Board from filing and defending suits on behalf of the Corporation. Under such circumstances, again, thirty different and contradictory answers would be capable of being put in with reference to one and the same cause. As a clencher the plaintiff might have offered to defend the suit himself in his capacity as a Municipal Commissioner against himself as plaintiff. The plaintiff, however, was overruled, the application was allowed to be put in, and the adjournment prayed for was granted. It would be interesting to ascertain what the Moonsiff would have done if, instead of a Civilian Chairman, the defendant had been somebody else, say, plain Gollam Mullah or Ram Chandra Ghose. The incident has created a sensation. Comparisons are odious, but people cannot help comparing their present Moonsiff with some of his predecessors such as Baboos Upendra Mullick, Poorna Chandra Shome and Bulloram Mullick.

In another case the conduct of a local pleader was the subject of investigation. Sanction was sought to be obtained for prosecuting this legal gentleman on certain very serious charges. The reputation of the present Moonsiff himself came somehow to be mixed up with the matter. The District Judge of Hooghly was moved by the parties. The investigation had commenced and proceeded to a certain length, when, all on a sudden, the matter was allowed to be dropped. The Moonsiff kept his Court open till the extraordinary hour of 9 P.M., for receiving the petition of compromise. The petition was filed by a pleader specially engaged for the purpose in the absence of the pleader who had acted in the cause from the beginning in both the courts. Happy are the people of Howrah who have judicial officers that are so accommodating and that do not mind holding their Courts till gunfire when such important affairs as the compromise of suits have to be decided. It is a pity that neither the District Judge nor the High Court feels disposed to enquire into and minute in terms of enthusiastic approbation such rare instances of prolonged judicial sittings even in such places as Howrah. The local People's Association had at one time endeavoured to supply the place of a chronicler for drawing public attention to the zeal for justice of the same officer in a few other cases. Unfortunately, however, a few friends promptly interfered for suppressing that effort which promised a shock to the modesty of the person selected for such honor.

GERMAN AND FRENCH COMMERCE IN MEXICO.

"The South American Journal" says that in a recent number of the Deutsches Handels Archiv, a correspondent, writing from Morelia, capital of the State of Michoacan, warns German manufacturers not to enter into direct relations with native commercial houses.

He recommends them the powerful German houses of the capital of Vera Cruz and Colima, as the best means for securing the sale of their articles. The same journal writes:—

This assertion which can only come from the pen of a merchant well versed in the affairs of Mexico, suggests to us to lay before our readers an exact picture of the condition of affairs in that country. Unfortunately we have no doubt that they will be constrained to concur in our views and to confess that the German textile industry, through its trusting in third parties and its ignorance of the commercial conditions of countries beyond the seas, is losing its hold on the Mexican and other markets, just at the time when it imagines that it is strengthening its grasp on the commerce of the world.

About the year 1830, the numerous internal custom houses of Germany and the endeavours of the Hanoverian Government to create rivals to Hamburg in the ports Hamburg and Geestmünde greatly embarrassed the inhabitants of the Hanse towns. It was then the transoceanic craze took possession of the young merchants of Bremen and they turned their attention to the United States (New Orleans, Baltimore, Boston), but more particularly towards the young Republics of Central and South America. They easily obtained employment in English houses, which then controlled the commerce of those countries, and of which there were 90 at Mexico, with branches at San Luis, Potosi, Guadalajara, Zacatecas, Guanajuato, and all the large interior cities. It was not long before these young German clerks developed into able merchants and became dangerous rivals to the English. They ended by absorbing all the business of the country, and in 1879 the 90 English houses had dwindled down to three.

Many German merchants, our pioneers in those lands, after making their fortune, retired to their native land, leaving their transoceanic establishments in the hands of their younger compatriots. In Europe they devoted themselves to doing a commission business and making purchases for their partners in Mexico. Their activity had a most salutary influence on German industry, and when the importation of woollen and silk stuffs into Mexico was prohibited the cotton and linen fabric of Silesia and Bielefeld found excellent opening there. A little later, however, these articles were less sought for and Belfast again took the place as a supplier of dry goods.

The Bremen merchants, who were the first to settle in Mexico, were succeeded by others from Hamburg, Hanover, Oldenburg, and Meklenburg. With the exception of a few Westphalians and Rhinelanders, Central and Eastern Germany have furnished no recruits. The great manufacturers of Saxony, Silesia, and Brandenburg rely altogether on their northern countrymen, and neglect to study the commercial conditions of the countries which supply; they have no representatives there; both orders and shipments pass successively through the hands of their agents at Hamburg or Bremen, of the exporting commission house, of the importing house in Mexico, of the wholesale house, and finally, of the retail merchant, who forms the last link in this long chain. This is too complicated a process for the needs of our time.

The most brilliant period of German commerce in Mexico stretches from 1850 to 1870.

During that period more than 80 German importing houses almost monopolised the trade of the country in manufactured articles. Since that time no new German house has been established in Mexico, and two-thirds of the former ones have, with good or bad grace, been obliged to liquidate. Twenty-two of those houses, which, without including their exports, imported annually from Hamburg 12 shiploads of merchandise, were still flourishing at the fall of Maximilian; at present there remain but three.

On the other hand a large number of French houses, with hundreds of branches, have been established, and they practically monopolise the dry-goods business of the country.

They have been created Gascons, Basques, and Languedocians, who owe their expenditure to strict necessities. Some of them, at starting, earned less in a year than a German clerk spends in a month, and yet they succeeded in laying by one-half of their earnings. The victory they have achieved over their rivals is chiefly due to their temperance and spirit of economy, and also, in a large degree, to their sounder business methods. The German merchants availed themselves of eight months' credit allowed them by importing firms to speculate in agricultural produce and sometimes to cultivate estates or operate mines and mills. The French, on the contrary, always paid cash for their goods, sold them at a small profit, and renewed their assortments frequently. Their efficiency and honesty soon won them esteem and raised them gradually to the position they now occupy.

Last year's statistics show a French population in Mexico of 12,300 of whom 10,000 are employed in selling goods at the counter. The number of Germans, on the other hand, in the whole Republic only reaches 800.

The majority of the French merchants who have grown rich in Mexico return to Paris, which is thus becoming a seat of transatlantic establishments.

The Manchester market is also too important to be neglected.

Several Basque houses have been established there and are wresting business from German houses which were founded there during the days of German control of Mexico's commerce.

In the city of Colima on the Pacific slope, there were, 20 years ago, seven large German houses, which annually received from Hamburg eight or ten ship-loads of merchandise. The goods they either sold directly or distributed among their agencies at Morelia, Guadalajara, Guanajuato, Leon, Agnascalientes and Zacatecas. The native customer was thus supplied with all sorts of goods—cotton cloths, prints, handkerchiefs, articles of clothing, hats and bonnets, liquors, hardware and provisions.

All the above articles came from Germany. At present the two surviving houses are in liquidation. A few houses, it is true, have been recently founded at Colima, but they are a mere shadow of their predecessors, and are chiefly engaged in speculating and in exportation.

The same may be said of the situation of the Germans at Vera Cruz, which is even more pitiable. Of the 12 houses existing there formerly only three remain.

But it is at the capital of the Republic that the decadence of German commerce is most striking. They have now but three or four stores where manufactured articles are sold, and their position is so precarious that they think they have done well when they have sold a few carpets or a dozen pocket handkerchiefs. The cessation of their operation is only a matter of time.

What we have said applies only to dry goods. Hardware still continues the remaining bulwark of Germany's commercial supremacy in Mexico. But, whereas a few years ago we were the sole importers of hardware, we have now to deal with severe competition from the French.

A few special articles, such as hats, braiding, and carpets, are still in the hands of Germans, but they are no longer the sole handlers of those articles, being again encountered with sharp competition by the French.

A FOUNDLING.

What are things coming to? Calcutta is fast becoming initiated into the worst vices of the great cities of Paris and London, though, indeed, it can seldom or ever well boast of a single thing out of the many that make its sisters worthy the names they bear.

This morning on my way to office at about 10 O'clock, I found the street crowded with people and police—at the corner of the Mangoe-lane bordering on the Bentinck-street. Every eye was turned towards an object lying wrapped up in cloth on a platform under a verandah. The police surrounding this object of public curiosity, it was half hid from the public gaze and there was all bustle and commotion—the people struggling to get a view and the police all the while trying to keep them at a distance or disperse them.

The object of this curiosity was a foundling. I can not say whether it was dead or alive, nor was it known to whom it owed its existence. All that I could gather from the gaping crowd was Shabdkha larka.

I hear Government has founded an asylum for such waifs and strays. The number of such foundlings must have been fairly large before it was moved to take such a step.

Sad commentary on the morals of a country! Government may be proud of affording such protection, but the people must hide their very faces in shame before such lasting monuments of their shame and degradation.

And yet what could the wretched mother do—under the severest ban of society?

We speak of our universities, our education, our culture and enlightenment; but what faith can there be in a people with such morals who can not manage even their own household? It is morals that we should look to for support in our path to progress; without them we will remain the nation of slaves we have been and no better.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

in the river, throws him into an ecstas delight: "she had such large languishing eye. But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE WIFE'S APPEAL.

BY MISS SARAH J. CLARK.

I'm thinking, Charles, 'tis just a year—
Or will be very soon—
Since first you told me of your love,
One glorious day in June.

All nature seemed to share our bliss—
The skies hung warm above—
The winds from opening roses bore
The very breath of love.

We sought the still, deep forest shades,
Within whose leafy gloom
Few ardent sunbeams stole, to kiss
The young buds into bloom.

The birds caught up our tones of love
In song not half as sweet,
And earth's green carpet, violet flower'd,
It scarcely felt our feet.

But, apropos of carpets, Charles,
I looked at some to-day,
Which you will purchase, won't you, dear
Before our next soirée?

And then, remember you, how, lost
In love's delicious dream,
We long stood silently beside
A gently gliding stream?

'T was nature's mirror; when your gaze
No longer I could bear,
I modestly cast down my eyes,
Yet but to meet it there.

'And, apropos of mirrors, love,
The dear gift of your mother,
Is quite old-fashioned—and, to-day,
I ordered home another.

Ah, well do I remember, Charles,
When first your arm stole round me;
You little dreamed how long your soul
In golden chains had bound me.

But, apropos of chains; my own,
At Hamilton's last week
I found the sweetest love!—so rich,
So tasteful and unique!

The workmanship is most superb—
The gold most fine and pure—
I quite long, Charles, to see that chain
Suspend your miniature.

I heard sad news while you were out;
My nerves are much affected;
You know the navy officer
I once for you rejected?

Driven to despair by your success,
Made desperate by my scorn,
He went to sea, and has been lost
In passing round Cape Horn.

Ah, apropos of capes, my love,
I saw one this very day,
Of lace as fine as though 't was wove
Of moonlight by a fay.

You 'll purchase the exquisite thing,
'T will suit your taste completely;
Above the heart that loves you, Charles,
'T will rise and fall so sweetly.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

MR. Hume pioneering, Orator Surendranath Banerjee sails next month for the conquest of England.

"THAT fascinating atom of humanity," Miss Warren, better known as Mrs. General Tom Thumb, has developed into Mrs. Tom Thumb Magri. She now counts 47 summers. When she married "The General" Charles Stratton in 1863, she was 32 inches high, and she has not grown higher now. She has taken another dwarf Mr Magri, otherwise the Count, as a second husband. He is 39 years of age.

DUC D'AUMALE devised Chantilly with its contents to the Institut de France in trust for the French nation. M. Eugène Piot, an art collector and writer, who has just died, has left to the Académie des Inscriptions, a branch of the same Institut, his entire personality valued at 1,000,000 frs.

MR. Cornelius Vanderbilt is said to have offered 100,000*l.* sterling for Meissonier's "La Rixe."

THE French battle-painter M. Protais is dead. He had attained the age of sixty-two years. His earliest success was the "Battle of Inkerman" and his greatest the "Battle of Solferino." He had nearly equalled the fame of DeNeuille and M. Detaille.

THE highest point of German territory has been reached. Kilima-Njaro has been ascended. In 1887, Dr. A. B. Meyer attempted the highest peak and failed. Last October, he returned to the attack and conquered. Here is his own account of the feat:—

"On Oct. 2 he and his companion, Purtscheller, and a native of Pangani, reached the saddle-plateau, above Mareale's village, which

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

(14,270 feet) formed the base of operations. The plan of ascent was to mount the great lava rib running in a south-easterly direction, and flanking on the south the south-east glacier valley, and from its highest spur to begin the scramble up the ice-cap. There was much less snow on the mountain than there was in July 1887. At 2.30 A.M. on Oct. 3 the ascent began. At 7 they met the first snow, 16,400 feet. At 7.20 they stood on the ridge of the mountain rib, and thence began the steep ascent of the crest. Halting a little every ten minutes in the ever-rarifying air, they rested at 8.15 half an hour at 17,220 feet. Above them blinked and glimmered the ice-cap of the Kibo.

Shortly before nine they attained 17,650 feet, and at 9.50 the lower limit of the ice-cap, at a height of 18,240 feet. Here the usual precautions as to spectacles, ropes, and axes were taken, and the work of step-cutting began. After crossing several crevasses, they rested at 12.20 under a steep ascent of the ice-wall at 19,000 feet high. The curve of the ice-cap, which is the highest point visible from below, was now under them. The difficulty of breathing made them halt a few seconds every fifty steps. At last, their strength getting rapidly exhausted, they reached at 1.45 the rim of the Kibo crater. At the same time they saw its highest elevation to the left, on the south side of the mountain, consisting of three rocky points rising some yards above the ice-cap. The distance they estimated at about an hour and a half's march. But for this their strength was unequal, except at the risk of having to bivouac without the least protection in the cold of the night. They had done an extremely fatiguing eleven hours' climb, and had to take account of the mist that was floating about the ice walls. They decided to rest content with the result of their first ascent. The great crater of Kibo, with its precipices, the eruption cone rising from its depths, was discovered; the problem of the interior of Kibo solved. The descent began, and the tents were reached at 6.48 P.M.

On Oct. 6 Dr. Meyer and his companions started at noon to bivouac at a greater height. Next morning at 8.45 they were on the topmost rim of the crater, their turning point on the 3rd. The ascent to the highest peak offered no extraordinary difficulty. The ice rim steadily rises in a southerly direction, where it is broken into three points emerging above the ice-cap. Not being quite sure which was the highest, they mounted all three, and the aneroid gave the middle one, 19,690 feet, as 50 feet to 80 feet higher than the other two. On the ice pinnacle Dr. Meyer planted the German flag, and baptised the rock 'Kaiser Wilhelm Spitze.'

From this point especially the great Kibo crater is easily viewed. With a diameter of about 6,500 feet the crater sinks about 650 feet to its base. On the northern and eastern sides the ice-cap descends from the rim in steep galleries, while on the western and southern sides the bare lava rock plunges steeply from the upper ice-rim. From the base of the crater there rises, somewhat northerly from the centre, a slightly arched eruption cone to about 490 feet high. Like the crater-bottom, it consists of dark brown ashes. Its upper half is free from snow and ice. Its lower half is panoplied with a mighty ice-girdle, which proceeds, presumably, as glacier from the broad crater chasm opening westwards. On the crater-bottom lie several larger fields of half-melting ice-crust.

In the Overland Mail by the last mail, under the head of Fashionable Marriages, the first item runs thus:—

"Sala, Stannard.—A marriage of exceptional interest took place at the 'Church of the Parliament,' St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Jan. 25, when Mr. George Augustus Sala was united to Miss Bessie Stannard, daughter of Mr. Robert Stannard, C. E. The bride is a sister-in-law of 'John Strange Winter' (Mrs. Arthur Stannard)."

SIR Morell Mackenzie is not satisfied with the half measure that has been proposed against leprosy. He thinks "what is wanted is a broad scheme providing for the isolation of lepers in all our colonies, particularly in India, and for their 'maintenance in whatever degree of comfort their condition may admit of, till they are more effectually 'segregated' by death." He suggests the payment of the whole amount of £12,000, which is to be raised for a Commission of Enquiry, to any one individual "who may discover either the cause and means of prevention of the disease, or a cure for it as decently certain as quinine in malaria." At any rate, he would like the appointment on the Commission of such men as Armaner Hansen, of Bergen, who is said to have discovered the microbe of leprosy, Professor Klein, and Pasteur.

In an article headed "On the Standing Army of Great Britain" in the February number of Harper's Magazine, General Lord Wolseley thus gives his opinion on the soldier's dress:—

"For the hard marching and many bodily exercises which fall to the soldier's lot on active service our army was more suitably dressed in the reigns of William III. and of Queen Anne than it has been generally this century. We have lately done something to improve our style of soldiers' dress, but no men tied up as ours are in tightly fitting tunics can do a satisfactory day's work during war. We dress our sailors for the work they have to do, but we still cling to a theatrical style of garments for the soldier. There are, however, some difficulties attached to this question of dress in an army raised, as ours is, on a system of voluntary enlistment. We must make the soldiers' clothing acceptable to the men who have to wear it, and, strange to say, they like very tightly fitting coats and trousers to swagger about in with their sweethearts. They like those ridiculous forage-caps stuck on the side of their heads, and which are no protection from either sun or rain. The change hoped for generally is that we should have two costumes—one, for active service and field manoeuvres, of the colour we use in India—it is a light tawny, resembling that of the hare—and fitting very easily everywhere, especially about the throat; the other, scarlet and very smart, and ornamented with braids and buttons as at present, to satisfy the young soldier and his 'Mary Anne.' In all our recent little wars we have used a special dress made for the occasion, and what we now want is to make that special dress the undress uniform of the army. Is there anyone outside a lunatic asylum who would go on a walking tour, or shoot in the backwoods or the prairies, trussed and dressed as the British soldier is? This applies to all ranks, for I confess to a feeling that the dressed-up monkey on a barrel-organ bears a strong resemblance to the British General in his meaningless cocked hat and feathers of the last century, and in his very expensive coat, besmeared both before and behind with gold lace."

The civilian costume is no better and calls for change in the cause of civilization.

THE editor of the Delhi Punch, fined Rs. 1,000 for libelling the Raja of Faridkot, has appealed against the sentence. He considers that the apology published by him in twenty different newspapers ought to have satisfied both the Magistrate and the complainant. We find the Raja's son has filed a fresh information of a similar offence against the same journalist.

To keep them out of the way of temptation for meeting their expensive living, the Madras Board of Revenue with the sanction of the Government, has ruled that in future Europeans and Eurasians are not to be appointed to posts (below the rank of Assistant Inspector) in the Salt Department carrying salaries of less than Rs. 100 per mensem.

THE Government of Fort St. George has notified that that "Government will not receive petition on any matter, unless it shall appear that the petitioner has first applied to the local authority, and also to the Board of Revenue or other controlling authority, where such exists. The petitions addressed to such local and controlling authorities, or copies of them, and the answers or orders of those authorities respectively, if any shall have been passed, must be annexed to the petition addressed to Government." At the same time, not to be hard on the petitioners and to deal justly with them, it enjoins all heads of offices, to supply to the complaining party, on application "a copy of the order, which should contain full details of the grounds of the decision. This is to be furnished to him, on plain paper, and without payment." Petitions will be liable to summary rejection in the following cases:—

- (1) when a petition is illegible or unintelligible;
- (2) when a petition contains language which, in the opinion of Government, is disloyal, disrespectful or improper;
- (3) when a previous petition has been disposed of by the Madras Government, the Governor-General in Council, or the Secretary of State and the petition discloses no new facts or circumstances which afford grounds for a reconsideration of the case;
- (4) when a petition is an application for pecuniary assistance by a person manifestly possessing no claim;
- (5) when a petition is an appeal from a judicial decision, with which the executive has no legal power of interference;
- (6) when a petition is an appeal against a decision which by any law, or rule having the force of law, is declared to be final;
- (7) when a petition is an appeal in a case for which the law provides a different or specific remedy, or in regard to which the time limited by law for appeal has been exceeded;
- (8) when a petition is addressed by an officer still in the public service, and has reference to his prospective claim for pension, except as provided in article 995 of the Civil Service regulations;
- (9) when a petition is an appeal against the non-exercise by Government of a dispensatory discretion vested in it by law or rule."

The rules further point out that the Governor in Council never interferes with the distribution of subordinate appointments, and consequently applications for situations in the gift of heads of departments will also remain unnoticed.

Here is a warning to petitioners in general. For though the rules are expressly made for the Madras Presidency, they are instinctively acted upon by the other administrations in India.

THE number of Private Students for matriculation in the Madras University is multiplying apace. In 1880, they numbered 488 or 13.6 per cent. of the total number registered. In 1888, the percentage exceeded 25. The Registrar suspects foul play. He thinks the Head Masters of High Schools encourage such of their pupils as they think unlikely to pass the examination, to apply as Private Students. Dr. Wilson has accordingly addressed a circular to the H heads of Schools and Colleges reminding them that the practice is opposed to the University regulations, and threatening students with the punishment provided by law for misstatements. Some of the Calcutta Schools were detected in worse practice. Nor are Colleges, speaking generally, more careful to observe the University Bye-laws. We are afraid, things are coming to a pass when the Universities should have special agencies in their service like Inspecting Staffs of the Education and other Departments.

MR. Vishnu Pandurang Joshi, Second Class Magistrate, Kumta, convicted Nagappa Annappa of theft of a canoe and fined him Rs. 50, with the alternative of a month's imprisonment. Nagappa is the brother of the contractor of a public ferry on the Tadvi river. The complainant owned a boat and conveyed passengers across a creek flowing into the river at a point three miles from the ferry. In the absence of this boat, the contractor of the ferry would be free to take passengers also across the creek, thereby earning a greater pittance than his contract of the ferry brought him. The accused brother was charged with wrongfully seizing the boat and depriving the owner of his legitimate gain for the time being, and sentenced as a thief. The simple though officious brother could not conceive that such an act in the interest of the legitimate contractor, who probably believed that the ferry contract secured him the business of boating passengers across the neighbouring creek and took the contract under that idea, would be construed as a theft, and appealed to Mr. J. Davidson, First Class Magistrate with appellate power. That legal authority too found him guilty of theft and confirmed both the conviction and the sentence. He was of opinion that the accused had not acted in good faith, as he could not possibly have believed that he was justified in his act. He thought, however, that Nagappa could not be held guilty of larceny under the English law, but that the definition of theft in the Indian Penal Code covered such an act. The Sessions Judge Mr. McCorkell of Kanara was struck with the interpretation of law put by his subordinate Magistrates. He thought as there was nothing in the case to shew that the accused had any animus furandi in removing the boat, he was entitled to an acquittal. Even if he had intention of temporary dominion over the property, he could be convicted of no higher offence than trespass. He, therefore, reported the case to the Bombay High Court, in order that the conviction and sentence might be set aside. The High Court—Messrs. Justices Birdwood and Jardine—have just upheld the view taken by the lower Magistrates and sent back the report of the Sessions Judge, saying they could not interfere with the finding and sentence. Mr. Justice Birdwood remarks:

"The accused acted illegally in seizing the boat; and if it be assumed for the moment, contrary to the finding of the Second Class Magistrate, that he may have so acted by reason of a mistake of fact, that is, by reason of a mistake as to the extent of his brother's rights, and have believed that the complainant was infringing those rights, still such a mistake could furnish no defence of his illegal act, for if there had been no mistake at all, he would not have been justified in seizing the boat. If the complainant had conveyed passengers on the river itself within three miles on either side of the ferry, he would have been liable to a penalty under section 14 of Bombay Act II of 1868; but neither the contractor nor any person acting in his interests or on his behalf would have had the right under the Act, or under any other law, to seize the boat. In such circumstances a person who took the law into his own hands could clearly take no benefit by the contention that he acted under a mistake of fact. The Second Class Magistrate has not only found that the accused has falsely stated that his brother was allowed by the Government to ply his boat on the creek as well as on the river, and that he knew that he could not detain private boats without the permission of the Collector or the Mamlutdar, but the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has also practically found that the accused could not have believed that he had any right to seize the complainant's boat which had been plying for many years on the creek, where it had the right to ply. This latter finding is important as bearing on the accused's state of mind at the time when he seized the boat. Illustration (1) of section 378 of the Indian Penal Code shows that a charge of theft will lie even where there is no intention to assume the entire dominion over the property taken or to retain it permanently. It is the case of a person taking an article out of the owner's possession without his consent, 'with the intention of keeping it until he obtains money' from the owner for its restoration. He is declared to have taken dishonestly and, therefore, to have committed theft. Under section 23 of the Indian Penal Code a person gains property wrongfully when he retains wrongfully, as well as when he acquires wrongfully; and a person loses wrongfully when he is wrongfully kept out of any property as well as when he is wrongfully deprived of it. And under section 24 whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing dishonestly. The complainant was kept by the accused wrongfully out of his property from the moment that the accused seized his boat till he returned it, if he ever returned it. The complainant, therefore, suffered wrongful loss. The presumption is that the accused intended the natural consequence of his act. He intended to cause wrongful loss, unless he can show that he had no such intention. If, under a mistake of fact and in ignorance of the law, he believed that he had the right to seize the complainant's boat, when it was plying at the place where he seized it, his state of mind at the time of seizing it would have been innocent and not criminal. Though he caused wrongful loss within the meaning of the Penal Code, he would not, as a matter of fact in that case, have intended to cause wrongful loss. There would have been no dishonest intention."

But is sec. 379 of the I. P. Code the only law under which Nagappa could be punished?

MAHARAJA Grija Nath Roy of Dinagepore has been exempted from personal attendance in Civil Courts.

PERSONS intending to make a pilgrimage to Mecca, have been warned that for want of sufficient rainfall, there is scarcity of food and great distress in the surrounding country, and, as a consequence of the forlorn condition of the people, assaults on travellers and merchants on the Jeddah and Mecca roads are of frequent occurrence.

SECTION 32 of the Indian Ports Act, X of 1889, has been extended to the navigable rivers and channels leading to the Port of Calcutta as defined in the notification of the Bengal Government, dated the 24th June 1886.

ON the 31st March next, at the Port Office, there will be a competitive examination for admission of one locally selected candidate into the Bengal Pilot Service.

THE Governor-General in Council has empowered the Sylhet and Cachar Magistrates and Judges to send lunatics from their jurisdictions to the Lunatic Asylum at Dacca.

THE Zemindari Dāk Tax in the district of Sarun, for the year 1890-91, has been fixed at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per annum on the sudder jumma of estates paying a revenue of Rs. 50 and over. It is payable in two instalments on the 28th March and 28th September 1890. With the present development of the Post Office, this tax is a double imposition, and ought to cease.

THE Kidderpore Docks are nearing completion. The Lieutenant-Governor has appointed a Committee to consider and advise on the arrangements to be adopted for the working of goods traffic into and out of Calcutta after the completion. The Committee are required to discuss and settle questions connected with

(a) the shipment and discharge of the cargoes of the vessels frequenting the port of Calcutta;

(b) the transport of goods, whether rail-borne, water-borne, or partly rail-borne and partly water-borne, to and from vessels lying at any place in the port of Calcutta.

The Hon'ble Mr. F. M. Halliday, Chairman of the Port Trust, is the President. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Wilson and Mr. G. H. Simmons represent the Commissioners for making Improvements in the Port of Calcutta; Colonel L. Conway-Gordon, R. E., C. I. E., represents the Government of India; Mr. W. B. Restie, the Bengal Government; Messrs. J. L. Mackay and W. W. Petrie, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce; Mr. D. W. Campbell, C. I. E., and Lieutenant Colonel G. F. O. Boughiey, R. E., the two railways, the East Indian and the Eastern Bengal State. The Native Chamber of Commerce is too recent and not strongly formed for a separate recognition.

MR. A. P. MacDonnell, C. S. I., has obtained one year's furlough from the 16th March next. Mr. C. J. Lyall, C. I. E., relieved of the special duty at the Andamans, officiates as Home Secretary during that period.

Holloway's Pills.—Changes of temperature and weather frequently upset persons who are most careful of their health, and particular in their diet. These corrective, purifying, and gentle aperient Pills are the best remedy for all defective action of the digestive organs. They augment the appetite, strengthen the stomach, correct biliousness, and carry off all that is noxious from the system. Holloway's Pills are composed of rare balsams, unmixed with baser matter, and on that account are peculiarly well adapted for the young, delicate, and aged. As this peerless medicine has gained fame in the past, so will it preserve it in the future by its renovating and invigorating qualities, and the impossibility of its doing harm.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE House of Commons has not yet voted the Address to the Queen. Mr. Parnell's amendment complaining of unjust and coercive laws in Ireland, and regretting omission of mention of any proposal for remedying discontent there, has been rejected by 307 votes against 204. Mr. Balfour maintained that the condition of Ireland had so far improved that Government was enabled to restrict the operation of the Crimes Act, although it would not hesitate to re-proclaim, if necessary, certain districts.

The Parnellite cause has received a shock in the sudden death, from stoppage of the heart's action while acting as a Teller in a division in the House itself, of Mr. Joseph Gillis Biggar, Member for the West Cavan.

Mr. W. H. Smith will ask the House to adopt the Report of the Parnell Commission, to thank the Judges and to admit it in the journals of the House.

The Commission to enquire into the administration of the Army and Navy has submitted its report. It is understood to be of a drastic character.

ALTHOUGH not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, India has already been the subject of some questions in the House. A Bill will be introduced early in the Session which will enable Mr. Bradlaugh and others to lay before the House the grievances of India as represented in the Indian Congress. It is proposed to reform the Indian Councils Act, in fulfilment of the pledge given by Lord Lansdowne, for enlarging the Councils and conferring the power of interpellation. The Government could not agree to the restoration of the right of raising grievances prior to the Budget statement.

AFTER a right royal entertainment in Jeypore, Prince Albert Victor of Wales left it for Ajmere where he arrived on the morning of the 17th. He was received at the railway platform by a number of minor chiefs summoned for the purpose. The Prince stayed there 12 hours which, of course, were fully occupied. The pleasing labors of the day began with a visit to the Chiefs' College, followed by a drive out to the temple on the Taraghur Hill. The same afternoon, all the station was invited by Colonel Walter to meet the Prince at a Garden Party. The Prince interested himself for some time in watching a game of cricket played in the gardens between the Ajmere team and the young Chiefs of the College. At night, the lake, the surrounding hills, and the road from the Residency to the railway station were illuminated. The festivities concluded with a dinner at the Residency. The Prince then took a special train for Oodeypore.

A RECENT high appointment has much scandalised the public. But the public don't know. What cannot rulers do? Nay, for that matter, what ought they not to do? They must assert themselves at any rate. They must outrage the obeying world on pain of losing their hold upon it. The proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof. The proof of power is in the evolution of the laconic phrase Hoc volo—sic jubeo. What is Cæsarism without an occasional operation or practice of the Cæsarian kind? It is the same with sovereignty, be it in propria persona or by delegation.

A king can make a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that.

Such is the Shastrā, chapter and verse, as declared by the inspired High Priest of Nature, Robert Burns. Ergo, a king must make a belted knight, a marquis, duke, and a' that, to prove his kingship. A Vice-king too may well conceive himself bound to follow the same miserable game in proof of his own viciousness—or vicesness, if you will. 'Abuse is the privilege of Power, and, to a certain order of minds, the cream of its attributes.

BUT the British Mogul has gone beyond shara and Shastrā. We have no disposition to be severe. We are ready to make allowances for the temptations of the head of a vast barbaric state—call him Emperor or Proconsul, Khan or Khedive, Bey or Bashaw. But it were much to be wished our Grand Panjandram had confined himself within the most liberal latitude of the spirit of scripture. The text is—

A king can make a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that.

No doubt, that Your Majesty or Excellency or Serene Highness—as the case may be—can. The monarch is the fountain of honours. That is no reason, though, that you should exercise your power, in season and out of season, in that behalf, or forthwith proceed to raise the first man to hand to a baronetcy or a barony, or pitchfork to the head of the Peerage any junior lord that catches your eye. But if you will, you may, as Sterne's poor ass, in deprecation of a hiding, in faltering accents, said to him. Bad and offensive as every impropriety is, the mischief, after all, is not so very great, specially in countries like India, where the aristocracy has no recognised duties and certainly no official function in the state. Very different and serious is the matter when the sphere of arbitrary will is widened or the venue of caprice is changed, when from confounding social ranks the ruler proceeds to debase institutions and offices charged with the safety of the land and the maintenance of order. An unworthy lout created a nobleman or decorated with stars and badges is a laughing-stock—at the worst, a nuisance. But an incompetent general or foolish tax gatherer or stupid judge may be a national disaster. It was rather a serious step taken by the Roman Emperor when he gazetted his mule Consul. The Governor-General has many a time made his and his Lieutenants' mules Maharajas, without in the least affecting either the state or society in general. In Europe, it was the practice of the sovereigns to ennoble their mistresses and pimps and valets. But the prosperity of the state never suffered from the cause. It is a different thing when functionaries are appointed without forethought—when favorites are elevated at random to offices to which they have no claim, and for which they show no capacity. Such is the present complaint.

NOR is such an imperial easy-going method consistent with the text What is it, says the Sage Rayyet of Ayrshire?

A king can make a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that.

So far so good. But go on, let there be no interruption; allow your author the full liberty of his thought and see whereto he leads you. The verse runs thus—

A king can make a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Guid faith he mauna fa' that!

So Monarchy, even at the proudest, is a limited concern. The Great Mogul of London himself, like his prototype and predecessor of Delhi, can make lords and ladies of ordinary human flesh, but cannot make a single true man. He can shower sanads and mansabs of rank on his favorites, but he cannot enlarge the mind—he cannot uplift a single heart. The idea of cleansing the impure is simply out of the question. The honest man, like the poet, is born, not made. Whoever else might be equal to it, the making is clearly beyond the king. Good faith—honour—probity—conscientiousness—are not to be made by patent of royalty, any more than evolved by act of Parliament.

RULERS in all parts of the world have claimed to make statesmen and soldiers. Instances are not wanting in Europe or Asia of menials raised to ministers. Heaven-born generals too are not unknown. Nor is the dictum of the poet against the phenomenon. He allows the king the utmost latitude of creation, with the sole exception of moral worth, saving from courtly manipulation the pick of the universe—

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

The king is to leave honesty or good faith alone. Good faith so far from being a necessary constituent in statesmanship or generalship, is a disqualifier.

What of a Cady, however?

A king can make a belted knight,

A marquis, duke and a' that;

But is a Cad' aboon his might,

The Faith appealed to fa' that?

Our Government has no doubt on the point. And it has made no secret of its view. It has expressed itself unmistakably in the negative. It has treated with scant respect the limitations assigned to the power of princes. It was never particular about the persons on whom it rained honour and titles. Hitherto, however, it fought shy of the department of Law and Judicature. But that scruple has passed away. Our enlightened Monarchy is now free—absolutely unfettered. It is a model Sultanate. Courtiers and ladies' men are now eligible for offices whose duties they have never learnt. Dancing in the wife or wit in the daughter may be rewarded with the appointment of Shekh-ul-Islam. Nor are we to wonder to see a Sudder-os-Sudoos or Cazy-ul-Kuzzat innocent of old Father Hanifa.

SIDDIQ Husain Khan, the very lucky husband of the most unfortunate Begum (Shah Jahan) of Bhopal, died on Thursday last, after a lingering illness of some months. Even during his illness he was able to remove out of the Bhopal territory, 30 or 40 lacs worth of moveable property, as well as to make a devise as regards the valuable Jagheers, which he had managed to secure—for the benefit of his two sons and one daughter by a former wife.

We hope the Government will now come forward and put the state in a proper order; and first of all they should institute a searching enquiry into the case of the unfortunate Dewan Thakur Pershad, an old man of about 70 years of age, who, we hear, has been lately sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment with hard labor and fetters. This gentleman's forefathers had held the post of Dewan or chief Revenue Officer in that state for many generations, and he too, having succeeded to the hereditary post, made himself the most honored official in the state. He had been Dewan for 30 or 40 years, held large hereditary Jagheers, and enjoyed a handsome salary. Siddiq Husain suspected him of being unfriendly to him and friendly to the Begum's daughter, and managed to get him out of the way to satisfy his revenge.

THE Mahomedan Conversazione has already become a popular and interesting institution. As an annual gathering of the élite of all classes of society, who are offered in its exhibitions of art products and scientific experiments a variety of useful and rational diversion, it realises a happy idea. Last year was its Silver Jubilee, and the 26th Conversazione was held last Monday at the Town Hall and passed off, as usual, successfully. The Viceroy and the Lieutenant-Governor were there, and particularly interested themselves in the scientific experiments. Various other exhibitions affording both instruction and amusement kept the large number of guests engaged till about midnight. This year's scientific experiments were of more than usual variety. Professor Bose's experiments were highly appreciated.

THE Sessions trials at the High Court which have just closed have occupied a large share of public attention. A few of them have caused great sensation, being talked about in all classes of society, and criticised from the varying standpoints of the popular critics. Whatever, however, the diversity of popular opinion and sentiment in regard to some of these cases, there is practical unanimity in the feeling of approval with which the result of the great libel case of Captain Hearsay against Mr. Allen of the Pioneer has been received. The trial took place before the Chief Justice, and Mr. Allen having pleaded guilty and expressed his regret to the Court, Sir Comer Petheram paid due regard to this, in considering his sentence, and directed Mr. Allen to pay a fine of Rs. 3,000. We congratulate him on the wisdom of his course. He has narrowly escaped a more serious disgrace. The Chief Justice commented on the libel in very strong terms. It had evidently cost a great deal of pains to the writer in raking up old stories in Captain Hearsay's life to make the attack as damaging as possible. The libel could not pretend to any justification on the ground of serving the interest of the public. If, having regard to Mr. Allen's line of defence, the Chief Justice did not think a sentence of imprisonment was called for, the offence was, nevertheless, of such a gratuitous character that it was necessary that the sentence should clearly mark the Court's sense of its enormity. The sentence has sufficiently satisfied the ends of justice, and cannot fail to exercise a wholesome influence in checking the libellous tendencies in the press and in society.

Another judgment of the same Sessions has failed to afford the same satisfaction to the public. We refer to the case of Duncan King who was charged with causing the death of a native gate keeper by piercing him with a swordstick. The circumstances of this unhappy case, known as the Municipal Street tragedy, are now the talk of the town, and we need not go into them. It was tried by Mr. Justice Norris who presided over the Sessions from the second day, there being practically two Sessions Courts sitting on the first day. The sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment passed upon the accused is criticised by the public in general as too lenient. We must confess, however, we cannot approve of all the foolish things which are being said as to the result of this trial. Mr. Norris himself said that he was going to pass a lenient sentence. King's employers, Messrs. Moore and Company, acted with shrewdness and prudence in placing a sum of Rs. 500 in the hands of the Government solicitor for being made over to the widow of the deceased as some compensation for her loss. This step on the part of the defence as well as its plea of guilty to the minor charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, must weigh with any Court of Justice. There are also points in the evidence which lay public critics are apt to disregard in their impatience of what they too hastily call an instance of over-lenience. On all these grounds, we are unable to sympathise with the popular out cry.

Duncan King is quite a young man just come to this country and he received a good character from his masters. It is even strongly suspected the real culprit has somehow escaped.

But a different question arises from the incidents of this case. It is apparent from facts brought out in this trial, that young European Assistants brought out by Calcutta firms are left very much to themselves after office hours, and receive no care from their employers as to their life and conduct out of the office. This used not to be the case before. These employers would in those days give an understanding to the parents of these young men at home to be responsible as guardians for their good conduct before they could have their services. This was a good practice, which appears to be followed no longer, and the effects are certainly of a serious kind. The details of this case disclose a state of things which must be highly discreditable to any city. There is an amount of rowdyism abroad in the Streets of Calcutta at night, of which one had scarcely any idea. After this case, one now hears of the reign of disorder which has long been going on in Municipal Street and its neighbourhood and which has made them too hot for honest folks to live in. It is all very well for Duncan King's masters handsomely to fee the counsel for his defence and pay Rs. 500 to the survivors of the man who loses his life at King's hands, but would it not have been far better if they had been somewhat more careful in exercising a control over their people's private conduct.

IN the Dum-Dum murder case, tried by Mr. Justice Norris, Private Thomas O'Hara was convicted of having deliberately and without any provocation caused the death of Sheik Soleim by shooting him with his rifle, and sentenced to death. The other prisoner, Private Bellew, was acquitted. The verdict in which the jury and Judge concurred will be regarded as the only natural one which could be come to upon the evidence. The case discloses as discreditable a laxness in regard to the control of soldiers in barracks as can well be conceived, and the circumstances which made such a case possible will no doubt receive the attention of the authorities. There is a pleasing side to this painful trial. The gentlemen of the jury, moved by the presiding Judge's pathetic allusion to the distressing and helpless state of destitution to which the deceased's widow has been reduced, have made generous contribution towards her maintenance.

SOME time ago quite a scene took place in the Court of Mr. Beveridge, Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs. The Judge and the jury were at variance over a case of alleged murder, the most extraordinary part of which was that a poor-child wife of ten years stood accused of the crime in respect of her husband. There were inherent improbabilities in the story set up by the police, but the Judge was satisfied of her guilt, while the jury were equally satisfied the other way, till the Judge was out of temper, and addressed language to the jurors by no means agreeable to their self-respect. The case was referred to the High Court, and here, the Judge's theory fell through completely, and the view taken by the jury was upheld and the child-wife discharged. This is an event of no little importance in these days, when the jury system has come into so much discredit. We are ourselves not blind to the abuses and failures of justice, which not unoften attend jury trials here, but they are defects arising more from the careless selections of men than from any causes inherent in the system. In the present case, which by no means is singular, we have some evidence of its utility.

The case has another aspect. In the High Court it came out in course of the argument that the first entry of information regarding this case in the Police Sub-Inspector's consecutively numbered diary had been suppressed from the lower court. This information, recorded in the Sub-Inspector's own hand, did not incriminate the wife as did a subsequent information entered in the same book. The discovery of the first entry put an altogether new aspect upon the case, and its wilful suppression so far can only lead to one conclusion, viz., that it was altogether a got up charge concocted by the police in league with some dishonest people of the village. The matter, at any rate, should be cleared up by inquiry.

WE have received the following telegram, dated Bankipore 17th February, in the Durbhanga temple case:—

"A crowded meeting, consisting of representatives from Durbhanga, Mozufferpore, Chupra, Motihari, Chumparun, Shahabad, Gya, Bhaugulpore, Monghyr, and Patna, was held yesterday afternoon in the Jubilee Club compound under a shamiana, the Maharajah Bahadoor of Durbhanga presiding. In opening the proceedings, the Maharajah said that he did not wish to take up much of their time by a long speech. All were agreed that a certain amount of excitement existed on account of certain transactions which had lately passed in Durbhanga. He did not think that it was his business to enter into the details of these transactions. Indeed, it would be highly improper for him to do so, as he had been away in Calcutta, and had heard contrary stories from both parties. On one point, however, they were all agreed, namely, that the Government was most anxious to respect the religious feelings of the people, and the officers of Government considered it their paramount duty to see that the religious feelings of any class or community were not injured. These reasons had prompted him to wish that the ill-feeling in Hindoo Durbhanga was allayed. They ought to be thankful to Government for what it had done. Of course, whenever they thought that their religious susceptibilities were in any way touched upon, it was their duty to call public meetings and to ask Government to investigate into the matter and to redress their grievances. This had already been done, and they knew that Government was publicly making an enquiry, and they ought to be sure that it would try its best to see that the religious susceptibilities of the people were not tampered with with impunity. This being so, His Highness considered that public agitation was not proper at present, as the matter was sub judice, and too many public meetings, especially about a religious subject like that which they had met to discuss, might tend to give the people an exaggerated notion of the matter, and to make men biassed in their opinions. It was their duty, His Highness considered, to see that opinions remained unbiased. His Highness took this opportunity to mention that only the other day he had occasion to meet the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, and the Chief Secretary felt much for the ill-feeling and unrest which had been caused in Durbhanga. His Highness proceeded to observe that he had been in a manner authorised by the Chief Secretary to say that he would be glad to see the temple rebuilt, and a good feeling restored amongst the Hindoo community of Behar.

In terminating the proceedings, the Maharajah suggested the establishment of a Central Religious Association."

We quite approve of the spirit shown by the Maharaja in this matter. There is no good in importing rancour into the controversy. The Government, we are glad to find, is watching the matter with great attention. In the meantime, Mr. Boxwell, the Commissioner, is taking great pains to get at the real facts. The best attitude is to await his report and the Resolution of the Government with the fullest confidence that justice will be done, and the offenders, whoever they may be, will receive their due.

IN the Bengal Council, the Port Trusts Bill is still being fought over. The debate which has already taken place on the Bill is interesting for several excellent speeches which were delivered. It is also characterised by a perfect spirit of conciliation on the part of the Council generally, and a real desire to meet the views of the mercantile community. Nevertheless, they do not appear to be satisfied, and their representative in the Council, Mr. Moore, is offering the same stout opposition as before. At yesterday's meeting, the Council was adjourned for considering a suggestion thrown out by Dr. Rashbehary Ghosh by way of a compromise of the amendments moved to Section 96.

MR. Percival Spencer is going to be an institution in Calcutta. His balloon may be seen any day majestically sailing through the air, and each time with some new circumstances of interest. On last Saturday evening, he took up with him three passengers, one of whom was a lady, besides his Mahomedan servant. The party enjoyed a magnificent view of the country and sea stretching below, and came down at Bamunghata, where the wonder of the simple villagers at a lady having formed one of the adventurous party knew no bounds. Some of them are said to have touched her dress, probably to make sure if she was a reality.

THE misfortune of a minority is developing apace in Morbhanj. The state has been exploited not materially only but also morally. So far as the material goes, there will be an ample credit side in the account. But there will be no such compensation in regard to the moral. It is there one dead loss. It is all a destruction without reconstruction—a bouleversement—a chaos. The people are losing their institutions. They have already lost their king. For they will never get their Maharaja back. For all that, they may be saddled with the incubus of a fast Baboo, though of the rather rare Tally-ho kind, who would peep into the sanctum sanctorum of the temple with his boots on, and give a champagne party to his European friends in the holy court. That he was the Raja all the same, the son and heir of the late Maharaja, was all the more galling. We devoutly wish the good people of Morbhanj may be spared such a calamity—such a virtual deprivation of royalty—of their national Chief. But the prospect for them is gloomy. Their misfortune commenced when the education and bringing up of the young prince fell into British hands. The State schoolmaster has not been idle. The poor lad must by this be half seas over with the strong draughts of the nectar of Civilization. It must be getting difficult for his family to recognise him. But guardian and ward are not quite satisfied at the rate of progress towards departure. So there is a grand scheme for suppressing the backwoods Oorya instantly and evolving the Sahab—or at any rate the Baboo-Sahab. Its execution will cause almost an ethnic transformation. We refer to the rumour of the young Chief's marrying out of his caste, in a Bengali Vaidya family which, by its ambitious union with a ruling house, has socially compromised itself.

We hope the young prince will not rush headlong, nor be rushed, into a n inalienable connection of this kind. The matter is one deserving of the most anxious deliberation. We certainly expect the Government to prevent such a step so long as the boy is in its charge. It is difficult to make Europeans understand the mystery of Hindu marriage, but we warn the officials who might be concerned against allowing such a match.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1890.

THE PIONEER TRIAL.

LAW and Justice have at last been vindicated in the Pioneer defamation case. And it has not been a day too soon. The judicial farce and mockery had gone too long, and a feeling had been near taking possession of the public mind that there was no redress to be had against high and mighty offenders. There could be no greater scandal than the wild goose chase on which Captain Hearsey has all these weary months been made to run in quest of justice. In no civilized country would such a thing be possible. The doors of justice were practically closed on him. And this notwithstanding there was substantial unanimity on all hands as to the reality of his grievance. The circumstances under which the libel was committed were admitted to be extremely discreditable and unmanly. The defence itself, though formally pleading guilty, had scarcely the assurance to put a good face upon the matter. In the first of the series of proceedings which Captain Hearsey has been forced to take in the hope of winning a hearing, Mr. Chesney, editor of the Pioneer, assumed full responsibility for the appearance of the libel. But all of no avail. The courts were possessed with their own regards which never missed obtruding when need was. Magistrates would not admit the complaint except under compulsion of higher authority, and when, after all, it has a hearing at the Magistracy and goes, in the usual course, to the same highest tribunal for final disposal, that tribunal kicks it down. It volunteers its humanitarian services to the scapegrace of a prisoner at the bar, and makes a reason for smashing up the case, to the equal surprise of the prosecution and the defence, to say nothing of the bewilderment of the general public. Even the highest court in the land would not let the case go before a jury, intercepting it in the midway in an ingenious manner.

That such evident degeneracy of our law courts passed without causing an adequate explosion of public indignation is, indeed, a melancholy fact. One can only take it as an indication of social degradation and political weakness in the community. That a poor suitor for justice should go on knocking and it should not be opened unto him, and the public at large should all the while be looking on with comparative indifference, shows the little real public spirit there is amongst us. Nor was this the worst feature in the attitude of the public. Captain Hearsey had no lack of native friends before he entered upon his arduous task. Many were the offers of support he received—encouragement and sympathy met him at every turn. How soon, however, the scene changed after the ordeal he underwent at Mr. Gasper's hands at the Calcutta Police Court! The attitude of his old adherents was at once cold and even distant. Not a few openly disavowed him. He was in a word thrown overboard. The promises of support dwindled by degrees. The enthusiasm of Congress-wallahs, whose connection had ostracised the Captain from his own kith and kin, with a solitary exception here and there, vanished into thin air. For all their assuring promises, they did vastly little in reality. Captain Hearsey was in the utmost extremity. Away from home and family and children, with friends falling off, the very courts,—his last refuge of hope—almost shut upon him, pressed for funds, his little all of property exhausted, and now his character, for the vindication of which he had undertaken all this trouble, reduced, at any rate in vulgar estimation, to tatters, any other man would have completely succumbed to such an accumulation of misfortunes. But his is the unyielding spirit of a hero. He deserved to succeed, and he has succeeded. Single-handed, he has fought against all comers, and won. So far as by sheer persistence the Captain has vanquished the High Court itself, compelling it as it were to the performance of its duty, he has done a most important public service. He has vindicated the raison d'être of our elaborate judicature and scientific codes. Sir Comer Petheram's clear and independent action in the case, enforced by judicious remarks, is a distinct assurance of safety to the citizen from the tyranny of the powerful. For all this, Captain Hearsey has earned the country's gratitude.

The High Court has at last interfered; and hope revives that Justice is not dead. The Pioneer is for the moment humbled, and Captain Hearsey has won the dear-bought satisfaction of having his enemy mulcted in purse. The case is as yet far from closed. There is a civil suit for damages pending in the Civil Side of the same Court. The merits of the question, as to the truth or falsehood of the statements made in the defamatory article, were not touched in the criminal trial. It was a case of criminal libel, and the libel being proved, the question did not arise whether those allegations were false or not. It is altogether a painful business, and it were yet not too late to bring it to an amicable close.

In the earlier stage of the quarrel, we suggested a compromise. We said that the Pioneer could derive no benefit from the issue of the litigation. There was no triumph in the prospect, whilst, under the best circumstances, it could only escape from the clutches of the law. Our suggestion was not followed—with consequences which our brother of Allahabad must for ever regret. Is it yet too late to make up?

We cannot join those of our contemporaries who are praising the Pioneer for pleading guilty and thus enabling the court to relieve the public of the eternal litigation. Mr. Allen simply made a virtue of necessity—Captain Hearsey having at last terrified the enemy with his dogged determination to pursue war à toute ou trance. So far from exhibition of any superfluous chivalry, he fell short of the legal requirement. He would have done better to apologise to Captain Hearsey. Probably the fine to which he has been sentenced, would have been considerably reduced, had the defendant apologised to the complainant, instead of merely expressing verbal regret to the court, for contempt for the impersonal majesty of the Law. No gentleman need shrink from confessing when conscious of an error. It were not only righteous but likewise honorable to make the amende honorable. But it is now past recall. The future is in his hands, however, and he may yet show magnanimity. It has been a sadly protracted affair, and it were well it ended here with peace to all—to courts as well as the parties and the public.

THE COUNTESS OF DUFFERIN'S FUND MEETING.

Speech of the Hon'ble Dr. Rashbehary Ghosh.

I rise with much pleasure to support the resolution which has just been seconded by Mr. Justice Amir Ali. The report for the last year which has been so carefully analyzed by the Hon'ble mover is, with the solitary exception alluded to by the previous speakers, a record of steady progress in the past and is full of promise for the future. I say full of promise for the future, because the best prophet of the future, as has been well said, is the past, and, therefore, although we are sometimes warned that we must not prophesy unless we know, I may safely predict that at no very distant time the thin red spots to which allusion has been made will disappear and the map of India become one vast red. Branch Associations will spring in every province and in every town, till the land is covered with a perfect network of hospitals and schools of medicine for ladies. But I need hardly point out that this prospect cannot be realized without a large expenditure of money, and it is no use disguising the fact that the committee are badly troubled with that eternal want of pence which vexes public men as well as philanthropists. If there is any body here present who thinks that enough is already being done in the cause of suffering humanity, I would refer him to a paragraph I came across the other day in an English paper which struck me very much. The charity record gives the total contributions in England for the past year at 2½ millions sterling in round numbers. According to the paper from which I have just quoted, the sum total of the legacies of 50/ and over in 1889 was in round figures a million sterling, while the sums resulting from innumerable small bequests of 50/ and under and from the fairly regular income produced from Annual Subscriptions, Fancy Fairs, Festivals, Saturday and Sunday Fairs, Civic Gifts, amounted to about a million and a half. Now, with these figures before me, figures of arithmetic it is true, but far more eloquent than any mere figures of rhetoric, I should feel no misgiving in appealing to our European friends for support, although we must by no means forget the diminishing rupee growing fine by degrees and not beautifully less. But I must principally appeal to my own countrymen for whose benefit the Association exists. And here too I have not the slightest misgiving. For I know I am appealing to a nation distinguished for charity. I am appealing to a nation who for centuries have done without poor rates or work-houses. I am appealing on behalf of suffering womanhood to a nation who have been taught from the earliest ages that when women are honored, the gods themselves are pleased. We know that the pagoda tree is now a mere tradition, if indeed it was ever a native of the soil. But let not unfriendly critics say that the charity and munificence of the East are also the dreams of romance; that we have inherited the blood but not the virtues of our ancestors; and that, without learning the lessons which the West should teach us, we have forgotten some of the best traditions of our race. Speaking for myself, I must say that I do not apprehend any such unfriendly criticism. What we want is not the spirit of charity, but its diversion into new channels, and our Western culture should instruct us in more refined and beneficial modes of showing our sympathy with all who are afflicted or distressed in body, mind, or estate. Gentlemen, I cannot sit down without paying our humble tribute of respectful gratitude to the noble lady with whose name this Association will always be inseparably connected and whose mantle we are glad to see has fallen on worthy shoulders. The Countess of Dufferin, if I may say so without presumption, has many titles to distinction. Her laurels have been gathered in various fields. But I venture to doubt whether any of her achievements is likely to give her a purer, a holier pleasure than the foundation of the society with which her name is connected in this country. Ladies and gentlemen, I trust I shall not be accused of using the language of exaggeration when I say that, by founding this institution, the Countess of Dufferin has won the willing homage of a nation—a homage not given to the mere accident of her position but broad based on the people's will. Thanks to her unremitting exertions and the ready sympathy of the august lady who rules over us, the lady doctor is now abroad conquering and to conquer pain and disease in all its various shapes and verifying in a literal sense the words of the poet when, in addressing the sex, he exclaims, after saying some rather naughty things which I must not repeat,

When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou.

Address of the Hon'ble Rao Saheb K. L. Nulkar.

Your Excellencies, Your Honor, and Ladies and Gentlemen,—You will, I have no doubt, agree with me that after hearing the report just summarised for us, giving a full and lucid account of the operations of the past year, I ought not to take up your time by enlarging upon the merits of the movement in connection with which we have met here this afternoon.

This institution leaped into existence, as it were, with popularity and success stamped on it.

It redounds to the sagacity and womanly discernment of the noble lady to whom it was given,—while in search of effective usefulness to her fellow women in this to her strange land,—to lay her magic finger on a spot which most required such a touch; and the ground being ready, the demand for relief intense, success, under the energetic prosecution of the object, was, as it has proved to be, a foregone conclusion.

The entire scheme, with its source, seems to have commended itself to the genius and traditions of the Indian people. Deplorable as is the position which woman holds among us at the present day, the presence, perhaps even active presence, of queens, princesses, and noble consorts by the side of the rulers and administrators of the country, giving countenance and support to their noble lords in the discharge of their public duties, is not entirely unknown to such traditionary history, fragmentary though it be, as we possess.

The character of the relief offered, in a form most acceptable to the long suffering recipients, had only to be made known to be willingly adopted even in such usually backward parts as feudatory India. Indeed, the success and popularity of the institution in native states is simply unexampled, showing, as it does in my humble opinion, that when wisely advised and kindly influenced, our princes and chiefs may set examples sometimes worthy to be followed elsewhere.

The success attained by this movement seems to be so widespread in every part of India, that our women may soon wonder how they could live and get on before without professional help from their own sex; even as we all now wonder how we got on in our earlier days without our own doctors, public hospitals, dispensaries, railways, post offices, and other civilised appliances for the relief of human wants and sufferings.

The sketch map presented with the report, shows at a glance the comprehensive character of the work in progress in all parts of India. It also shows that the paths of the noble lady founder and her worthy successor during their periodical peregrinations between Calcutta and Simla, is even more thickly strewn with the blessings of the first fruits of the movement, seven out of the seventeen important centres of action, and nearly half of the total number of stations where the Fund operations are in working order, being located along those paths.

But, besides these direct blessings, the movement is fraught with other and far reaching results in an indirect way which may not yield the palm to its direct benefits, great and everlasting as these undoubtedly are. Female education and emancipation are questions which, in modern times, have occupied the best minds in all civilised parts of the world, and will continue to exercise them with fresh problems in its connection, even in the most advanced countries in Europe. We here in India are yet struggling at the threshold of these questions, in spite of all the Western knowledge and civilising influences brought to bear upon us for more than half a century. Here, people have not yet ceased to ask the initial question cui bono? as to any female education at all. However, if the Indian people are, generally speaking, among the most religiously conservative in many social matters, and look askance upon everything new, especially when it comes from foreigners, perhaps we need not feel entirely despondent of, hope. Happily there is a counterpart, a brighter side to their national character, which is found sometimes to assert itself in a very unlooked for manner. Show them in a concrete, tangible form the practical benefits to be readily derived from an innovation, and you will find no people in the world more ready to acquiesce in it in silence, and even to take kindly to it. The present movement ought to supply one convincing reply to the question cui bono? by the practical proof it will give of the vital usefulness of woman to society at large in its every day domestic life, when properly educated and trained in a profession peculiarly suited to her sex. A study of the details of success attained by this movement may make us hopeful that the preliminary education of young women which must be necessarily progressing in all parts of India to qualify them for medical tuition, may result in a growing popularity of female education generally; provided always that it is conducted on the lines of usefulness as applicable to our present transition state, and not on any other simply because they are in vogue in other countries.

This latter observation opens out important questions of detail on which opinions must widely differ, and this is not the occasion to discuss them.

I will however beg leave to emphasise one important point which has to be constantly borne in mind in connection with all female educational institutions, a point which happily did not escape the watchful eye of the noble lady founder of this institution. I refer to the all important question of the discipline and moral training of the young women while under tuition. I have for some years past, as member of a board of management, actually felt the paramount necessity of attending to this point in connection with one or two female educational institutions of some importance in my part of India; and I am glad to find ready for quotation on this occasion the terse and appropriate language of warning uttered by the Countess of Dufferin in speaking of the training schools established under the auspices of this association. She writes in her "Record of 'Three Years' Work," that "if there is a place where modesty, reserve, gentle manners, and unimpeachable conduct, should be taught as a science, and should permeate the very air, it is in such a school as this, where the pupils are taken from a life of comparative seclusion and ignorance to one of partial publicity and of professional study. Our duty therefore towards them undoubtedly is to provide them with every possible safeguard, to surround them with good and well educated women, and to let them see how gentleness, tenderness, dignity, and self-respect can go hand in hand, with professional ability and uncompromising discipline."

These words deserve to be written in letters of gold on the doors of every female training school in India.

We must further remember that in this country, the necessity for these safeguards applies equally to boarders and to day pupils. I can say from personal experience that it has been found in other female training schools absolutely necessary to limit admissions of day scholars to girls who are known to be under proper guardianship at home. The danger sought to be avoided is by no means imaginary, insufficient attention to this point having sometimes jeopardised the useful existence of an important institution, or marred the success of individuals through misconception of foreign manners and customs.

As I have just said, the success of this movement seems to be eminently calculated to give a new impetus to female education in India generally, by opening out at least one respectable and useful career specially suited to women, and thus act like a lever in removing some of the most formidable obstacles which practically obstruct the way of all social reform among us. It is a fact which deserves to be borne in mind by all social reformers, and, for that matter, by their critics, that among these obstacles, the foremost on which the reformer stumbles in his first attempt, is the ignorance, the utter absence of education and systematic training of our women, who, as a necessary consequence, are among the most successful opponents of many of these reforms which, with their enlightened help, might be found easy of accomplishment. If we would secure the smooth working of well considered schemes of social reform in different directions, then the education of our women must take precedence of all other means to the end, even as social and educational advancements are among the indispensable pre-existing conditions of all real political advancement.

We may therefore hail the rapid success with which the exertions of the National Association for supplying female medical aid to the women of India have been blessed, with an expression of our heartfelt gratitude for the disinterested labours of the noble lady founder, her worthy successor in the presidential chair, and their collaborators and liberal supporters, official and non-official, not only for organising systematic relief of human suffering in quarters where it was most needed, but also for the effect, which their conspicuous success is calculated to have on other necessary reforms.

THE PIONEER DEFAMATION CASE.

THE MANAGING PROPRIETOR FINED RS. 3,000.

At the Criminal Sessions of the Calcutta High Court on Monday, (February 17, 1890) Mr. Geo. W. Allen was put on his trial for having defamed Captain Harsey in an article published in the Pioneer in January 1889. The public are quite familiar with the case: the proceedings in the police court having been from time to time fully reported in the newspapers; and it is therefore unnecessary to recapitulate the facts. From an early hour, the High Court was quite crowded, evidencing the interest taken in the result of the trial by a large section of the general public.

The proceedings commenced at 12 o'clock, the Hon. the Chief Justice, Sir Comer Petheram, presiding. The prosecution was conducted by the Public Prosecutor, Mr. Phillips, with whom was Mr. Avetoom; and Mr. Allen was defended by Mr. Pugh.

On the case being called on, Mr. Allen was excused from going into the dock and permitted to stand by the side of his solicitor, Mr. Upton.

The Clerk of the Crown (Mr. Apar) then proceeded to read the charge, which was to the effect that he (the said Geo. Wm. Allen) did on or about the 26th January 1889 defame one Andrew William Harsey by publishing in the Pioneer newspaper in Calcutta, an article to the following effect, [there was recited the now famous passage with which the public are well acquainted, beginning "One Andrew William Harsey," etc.]

To this charge, Mr. Allen pleaded guilty.

The Hon. the Chief Justice (turning to Mr. Phillips) enquired if he intended to proceed with the other charges.

Mr. Phillips.—I do not think it will be necessary. All the other charges merely profess to set out the natural meaning of the words.

Mr. Pugh then proceeded to address the court in mitigation of punishment. He said: My Lord—There are two observations I have to address to your lordship with regard to this case. The accused, Mr. Allen, has placed himself entirely in the hands of his counsel from the beginning with reference to the course which he has pursued. The responsibility is therefore upon his counsel, and I trust your lordship will see nothing to condemn in the course that they have adopted. Mr. Allen is advised that the publication of this article was not demanded in the interests of the public. He is consequently anxious to do anything to show his obedience to the law, and he expresses regret for having contravened the law in that respect. Now, my lord, I have to draw your lordship's attention to circumstances which I hope your lordship will take into consideration in considering what punishment is to be meted out for this breach of the law. Now, it has been said that the Pioneer is a paper of the highest standing and the highest respectability. There is no suggestion made, and can be made, that it has ever before the publication of this article been brought into a court of law with reference to a libel either by way of criminal proceedings or in the way of civil proceedings. Your lordship will feel and well knows that it is very difficult for a journalist on all occasions to construe exactly the correct line between his duty to the public and his duty with reference to a particular individual. That line, my lord, is very often an imperceptible line, and a man may, with the best intentions, overstep the limits of that line, as Mr. Allen has done in this case; but he has done so, acting throughout in the belief that he was justified in bringing these matters before the public. This article was published in the Pioneer of January last, and no steps were taken in any form until June, and that is a circumstance which I ask your lordship to consider. No steps were taken for six months in any manner or form by the complainant. At the time when he did take steps the accused was away in England; and before he took steps no inquiry of any sort or kind was made at the Pioneer office as to who the writer of the article was. That, my lord, appears in one of the depositions of Mr. Chesney. The step that the complainant then took was to summon Mr. Chesney as the editor of the paper, and I think the printer as well. It is proved, my lord, upon the depositions that as soon as Mr. Allen heard of these proceedings he at once sent a telegram in these words, I ask your lordship's attention to that because it does appear to me to be of great importance whether Mr. Allen has acted, as your lordship will think, as a man of honour and right feeling should act when he finds the editor of the paper of which he is managing proprietor, is charged with reference to an alleged libel which he has himself written. Now what was it that he telegraphed. He telegraphed, my lord, as follows:—"Avow me solely responsible Harsey scrap. Urge consequent delay November." The meaning of that is that, as soon as he heard of these proceedings, he telegraphed to the staff of the Pioneer to avow him solely responsible for the article in question, and to ask that the proceedings should be delayed until his return in November. I put it to your lordship whether there was anything more he could well do. Of course, he was not responsible for the line that Mr. Chesney's adviser took under those circumstances. Then, my lord, the next point that I want to draw your lordship's attention to, is that the paper is published in the ordinary sense of the word at Allahabad, and the complainant, it appears, lives away from Allahabad, at Mussorie; but he chooses Calcutta in which to bring this action. I put it to your lordship whether that is a matter worthy of consideration, looking to the great expense and harassment caused to the accused in being brought to Calcutta from time to time, when the defendant might quite as well have proceeded to Madras or to any other place where the Pioneer circulates and is published. My lord, when a man seeks to vindicate his character, you would naturally expect that he would seek to do so in the place where he is best known.

Mr. Crown Prosecutor Phillips (interrupting): I must ask your lordship whether it is competent for my learned friend to refer to that matter in his present address.

The Hon. the Chief Justice thought it did not have any bearing one way or the other.

Mr. Pugh: Well, my lord, I do not want to press it any further than to shew what amount of harassment has been caused to the defence by the prosecution.

The Hon. the Chief Justice: Mr. Allen has pleaded guilty to the publication of this libel in Calcutta.

Mr. Pugh: Yes, my lord. It is not a point I wish to press any further than your lordship thinks is warranted. I will leave it as it stands with the observation that he has chosen this tribunal at this distance.

Mr. Crown Prosecutor Phillips (sotto voce): Both of them do not live at the same place.

Mr. Pugh: Well now, my lord, in regard to the nature of the libel itself. That, I think, is a point of very great importance. I am not going in any way to refer to the terms of this particular libel, and all that I wish to point out to your lordship—

The Hon. the Chief Justice: If I understood aright what you said at the beginning of your address, Mr. Allen wished to express his regret for having published the libel?

Mr. Pugh: My lord, Mr. Allen regrets that he has done anything which is not consistent with his duty. He regrets that he should have been led to publish this article when the public interests did not demand that he should publish it. That, my lord, I say on behalf of Mr. Allen, and I shall venture to put it to your lordship even more strongly again. But as regards the punishment which has to be awarded it will be of very great importance to consider what has been laid down so far by the Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and other eminent Judges that one has to ascertain what is the nature of the libel and what the class to which it belongs. Now your lordship is aware that, under Lord Campbell's Act, you have two classes of libel and different punishments awarded to each class, that is, you have one class of libels which are false libels and you have another class which may be libels, but which at the same time may not be false. Now, my lord, how does it appear upon the depositions here? I am not going to proceed beyond them. What appears upon the depositions is this: that an assault was committed by the complainant upon Mr. Chesney in reference to the former article in the Pioneer. And I wish to say in regard to that Mr. Chesney says that Mr. Allen, the accused, had nothing whatever to do with that previous article. The only observation I wish to make with reference to that is with regard to the class under which this libel falls. Now, with regard to the class, your lordship has seen what there is in the depositions; and I do not want to go further than Mr. Chesney's deposition with regard to that. Now it is a different matter altogether as to what a person may have suffered in his private capacity, or what the offence may be with reference to the public. And here what your lordship would consider is—what is the gravity of this offence with reference to the public. With regard to that, I shall point out to your lordship—and I venture to ask your lordship to allow me to read from the Times report the law which Lord Chief Justice Coleridge laid down—

The Hon. the Chief Justice shook his head in token of disapproval.

Mr. Pugh: If your lordship thinks I ought not to refer to it, I shall not press it. An additional strength is given to these considerations when you find that no step is taken with reference to this matter up till June. With these observations, my lord, I leave the matter entirely in your lordship's hands, again expressing on behalf of my client very great and unreserved regret that he should have been betrayed into any course which was inconsistent with the law.

After a short pause,

The Hon. the Chief Justice said: George William Allen,—You have pleaded guilty to having defamed the complainant in this case by the publication of this article in Calcutta within the meaning of the Penal Code; and your counsel tells me that you regret having done so, and that you desire to express your regret for it. It seems to me that you are very well advised to have adopted the course that you have adopted in this case. The law of this country defines defamation as anything which is published with a view to injure the character or the reputation of another person, and among the cases in which persons may write and publish matter of others are cases in which the matter is true, and it is in the interests of the public that such matters should be published. Now, this is the law which the Legislature has laid down, and there cannot be a doubt as to the wisdom of the law; the intention of it being that a man shall not for any purposes of his own—whether for the purpose of injuring a person, or whether for the purpose of obtaining any advantage to himself rake up old stories in the life of another person and give them to the public, whether they are true or false, unless it is for the interests of the public that those stories should be published. Now, in this case, and as far as I am concerned, it makes very little difference whether the statements were true or false. It does appear that it was really nothing more than a petty squabble between persons whose character had no elements of publicity in them, because to deal with the complainant here as in any sense a public man is out of the question. If he is a public man, every man who ever held a commission in the Army and Navy, or for any other reason whatever has got his name into the newspapers is a public man. It is not necessary to do more than to state that to show how absurd the proposition is. That being the case, the public had no interest, could have no interest whatever, in knowing what the history of Captain Hearsy's life was, whether these stories be true or false. Consequently, in pleading guilty to this charge, you have, as I said before, exercised a wise discretion. If, instead of doing that, you had persisted in defence before a jury on any of the grounds which were open to you, and the jury came to the conclusion, after hearing the matter, that you were guilty of defamation, the question of punishment would have been a very serious matter indeed. Having regard to the course which you have taken, I do not think it is necessary that I should mark my sense of the gravity of this libel by passing a sentence of imprisonment. Notwithstanding that, as I said just now, it seems to me that the offence is an extremely grave one. Reading this article in this paper, it is apparent that a considerable amount of trouble has been taken to find out materials for making an attack upon this person's private life in a way the circumstances of the case did not warrant in any sense; and consequently it is necessary that that offence should be visited in such a way as to mark the sense of the Court of its enormity. The sentence of the Court in this case is that you pay a fine of Rs. 3,000.

The fine was paid soon after.—The Statesman.

KRISTO DAS PAL'S MOTHER'S SRAD CEREMONY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I was invited to attend the above ceremony which took place on last Sunday, the 5th of Falgoun. I was most aggrieved to find that on such a socio-religious ceremony, no distinction was made between the Brahmans and other classes as regards seats. They were all made to sit together on a common carpet in the quadrangle of Babu Kristodas Pal's house. When I came to the spot, I saw Babu Radhika Prosunno Mukerjee, Chandranath Bose, Dr. Raja Sourindra Mohun Tagore and a large number of respectable people whom I know not. Then came Raja Durga Churn Law, and I was astonished to see that he did not make a pranam to the Brahmans assembled. When Raja Sourindra Mohun left the place, he freely shook hands with some of his friends, but even he did not observe the common Hindu etiquette of making a pranam to the assembled Brahmans. Is this not carrying too far the iconoclasm for which the Calcutta Baboos have gained a notoriety among the Mofussil people? As a Mofussil man, I can assure you that I had never seen such a scene before in a Mofussil town or village.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which delights our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE TWO TEMPLES.

Cheerful and loud rang the minster peal,
And sweet was the organ's strain,
As baron and knight stepped forth to kneel,
On the floor of the sacred fane ;
The priestly robes were heavy with gold,
And the blaze of the altar light
Revealed in many a silken fold
Gems like the stars of night.

Huge and grand was the sacred pile,
Like a forest the pillars stood,
Wealth and power had formed the style
From the porch to the holy rood ;
Quaint were the carvings over head,
Bright was the storied pane,
Rich were the blazonings of the dead
Who slept 'neath the sacred fane.

The minster gray was a noble pile,
Wealth shone on the altar-stone.
And many who knelt in the vaulted aisle
As warriors brave were known ;
The organ pealed forth its harmony,
And the incense was scattered wide,
And He who taught us humility
Was worshipped with pomp and pride.

Solemn and low was the ocean's hymn,
And the chant of the forest drear,
As the traveller knelt in the evening dim
To breathe his humble prayer ;
The vaulted roof that o'er him spread
Was the arching azure sky—
And the lamps that light on the altar shed
Were the twinkling stars on high ;

The scented flowers their incense gave,
The sea-bird's cry was the bell,
The choristers were the wood and wave,
And the surf as it rose and fell ;
The daisied turf was the jewelled shrine
Where he knelt from care apart,
The falling dew was the sacred wine,
And the priest was his trustful heart.

Years have passed, and a mouldering wall
Stands where the minster stood,
Rough brambles grow and reptiles crawl
Round the base of the holy rood ;

Fallen are pillar and fretted arch,
And the toad leaves its noisome slime
On the pavement, crushed by the heavy march
Of the fell destroyer, Time.

Gone is the wealth from the altar stone,
Rotten the vestments gay,
Dimmed for ever the lamps that shone
Near the shrines by night and day ;
Nought is heard but the shrieking owl
Or the distant hunter's horn,
Laid in the dust is casque and cowl,
And their faith is a thing of scorn.

But the daisied turf still forms a shrine,
And the skies their blue arch spread,
The lamps of night unfaded shine,
And the flowers their incense shed ;
The woods and waves raise their hymns again
As they raised in days of yore,—
Man's temples fall, but Nature's fane
For ever stands secure.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THEY have started a "Women's Trades' Association" to raise possible, the status of the underpaid and overworked female workers of all classes in East London. Here, the progressive fair are bent on fairs and picnics.

MISS Beatrice Stanley Max Müller, daughter of Professor Max Müller, has been married to Mr. T. C. Fergusson, a son of Sir James Ranken Fergusson, Bart.

MR. Labouchere has directed his attention to the purification of the Mayor's Court. In a recent issue of Truth, it was stated that that "Court only existed for the benefit of a gang of blackmailing officials and attorneys." At request, the editor, in a letter, explained his meaning in a lengthy statement, summarising the purport thus :—

"(1) that the practice of the Mayor's Court is expressly designed to enlarge the jurisdiction of the court and to increase its business ; (2) that, in pursuit of this end, a system of extortion is practised upon defendants which has no parallel in any other court, is in some respects illegal, and is in every respect subversive of justice ; (3) that the officers of the court are responsible for the creation and the working of the system ; and (4) that the profits of the system are reaped by those officers and by the lawyers practising before them."

The Court of Common Council held a debate on the letter, in the course of which the City Solicitor, replying to questions, said—

"that costs were taxed by the Registrar or Deputy Registrar as in the county courts. In the majority of cases heavy costs were run up by the defendants themselves who, having no ground of defence, desired to stave off the day of judgment as long as possible. The Corporation had endeavoured on several occasions to get Order XIV of the Superior Courts applied to the Mayor's Court, but without success. At present, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the defendants themselves were to blame for the heaviness of the costs incurred."

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

On the motion of Mr. S. Spyer, who was of opinion that there was not a single paragraph or assertion in the lengthy statement of the editor which could not be confuted or contradicted, the matter was, after some discussion, referred to the Law and City Courts Committee for investigation and report.

BEWARE of tight collars! Dr. Forster, Director of the Ophthalmic University of Breslau, has found, in no fewer than three hundred cases, that the eyesight was affected by the pressure upon the muscles of the neck, and consequent disturbance of the circulation caused by wearing collars that were too small. Tight-dressing is the rage of the day. It is at once inconvenient and unhealthy. The newest fashion ought to divert the current into healthy channels.

DURING the recent dynamite explosion at Antwerp, sixty-seven Austrian Obligations of 1,000 florins each were reduced to charred mass in an iron safe. A professor of chemistry examined them and deciphered their numbers and letters. The owner has now been paid the 67,000 florins, the value of the charred Obligations.

At Bruenn, a thief cut a circular hole into a jeweller's shop window through the eyehole in the shutter, and with a rod and hook fished out a quantity of valuable goods.

THE School Board for London have decided for free education. They have come to a Resolution that admission to all public elementary schools in receipt of grants from the State should be free, and that the schools should be under representative management. The statistical committee has orders to prepare a petition to Parliament. Here, in Bengal, the Government is preparing for an education cess, without intending to make the schools free.

THE Duc d'Aoste, the brother of the King of Italy, died at Turin on the 18th January last. Born in 1845, he occupied the throne of Spain under the title of Amedu I, from December 1870 to February 1873. Everywhere in his new kingdom he encountered nothing but opposition, and fearing to fall a victim to murder, he abdicated the crown. Ever since he lived in complete seclusion. His death has greatly affected King Humbert, who was much attached to him. From being brother-in-law, the Duke became the son-in-law of Prince Napoleon by espousing princess Lætitia.

THERE is a regular traffic in foundlings in Russia. Parents sell their children to traders who forward them to the towns in baskets containing from six to ten babies each. No wonder, therefore, that seventy-seven per cent. of the children admitted to hospitals die in infancy, another eleven per cent. scarcely reaching 21 years of age.

THE Indian Mirror has grown sick of the Calcutta Municipal law, the Municipal Chairman, outgoing and incoming, the Lieutenant-Governor, and Bengal Civilians generally, and appeals to the Ordinary Madras Member of the Governor-General's Council and the Viceroy himself for setting it right. Our contemporary admits that it does not know Mr. Lee nor how he will turn out as the Chairman of the Metropolitan Municipality. It suspects that Sir Henry Harrison had recommended him for the post, and, what is perhaps more, finds that Mr. Lee will be entitled to draw Rs. 2,500 instead of Rs. 900 his present pay. The last is enough to unsettle our good brother, and the public is treated daily to indignant outbursts.

FOR the moment, at any rate, Mr. Hutchins is the idol of the Indian Mirror. But who will congratulate Mr. Hutchins on his temporary occupation of a pedestal from which he may be hurled down any day.

THE Thakore Saheb of Gondal revisits England once more. This time he takes with him his Rani and two children.

IT has been officially announced that there is no present intention of reducing the salt duty in the coming financial year.

THE Duke and Duchess of Connaught are preparing to leave India. Their Royal Highnesses have moved out from Poona to Bombay.

SIR Stewart Bayley, accompanied by Sir John Ware Edgar and Mr. Nolan, leaves for Chota Nagpur immediately. The feuds there are of a kind to tax all the resources of consummate peace-makers.

THE Maharaja of Vizianagram's time is up in the Viceroy's Council.

ANOTHER disappointment to the Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hossein. Mr. Handley will officiate as Chief Magistrate of the town when Mr. Marsden goes on leave this summer. The Hon'ble Syud has been kept out of the officiating appointment on this plea and that. But he need not despair.

THE clerical establishment will be allowed to draw their usual Simla allowances. This decision will be generally approved. If there is a real desire for economy, there is enough room for it in other directions.

ON Thursday, the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association held its annual meeting. It was a tame affair. The attendance was not large, and the President was not present. Mr. L. P. D. Broughton, the Administrator-General, took the chair. The office bearers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:—Mr. L. P. D. Broughton, President; Messrs. H. B. H. Turner and A. G. Watson, Vice-Presidents; Mr. H. W. Hallet, Honorary Treasurer; Mr. W. C. Madge, Secretary. Members—The Hon'ble Sir A. Wilson, the Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Moore, Messrs. R. Allen, S. E. J. Clarke, W. A. Clarke, T. B. Curtis, Cairns Deas, S. Dignam, M. P. Gasper, G. Irving, H. R. McInnes, J. F. Macnair, H. T. Ottewill, W. H. Ryland, J. O'B. Saunders and W. J. Simmons.

The Chairman announced that the Association has been registered as a Company, but no trustees have yet been appointed for the custody of the funds. The expenses of the past six months were moderate and the subscription has been reduced by one-half. He regretted the death of "Britannicus" Mr. Judge. The Chairman alluded to the Factory Bill and the Draft Leper Act circulated by the Government for opinion. He laid particular stress on the fearful state of Civil Courts in the Mofussil with regard to accommodation and record rooms. The revenue from suitors' fees exceeded the expenditure by 32 lacs, and the Financial Department itself admits the surplus at 14½. He also believed the Judges were too much hampered with office work for proper discharge of their judicial duties.

MAHARAWAL Udaisinghjee Bahadr of Davalia Partabgarh is dead. He had ruled the state for 26 years. In the absence of direct heirs, his nearest relative Maharaja Sahib Rughunath Singhjee Bahadr of Arnod has succeeded him.

THE London Publishers Macmillan & Co. have obtained from the Calcutta High Court a rule against Suresh Chunder Deb to shew cause why his book part X of "Select Short Poems" should not be pronounced an infringement of copyright of Palgrave's "Golden Treasury of Lyrics."

THE Executive of the Calcutta Corporation have submitted the Budget for the year 1890-91, for consideration of the Commissioners.

The General Fund Receipts with the estimated balance Rs. 3,80,000 of the current year are put down at Rs. 29,90,800 and the expenditure at Rs. 29,71,008. The water-rate with the balance Rs. 90,000 comes to Rs. 11,18,200 income, while the expenditure is Rs. 10,53,081. The sewage-rate with balance Rs. 25,000 aggregates Rs. 3,47,000 income against Rs. 3,18,926 expenditure. The receipts from the Lighting-rate are calculated at Rs. 3,20,000 and the expenditure at Rs. 3,42,695. Cart Registration Fund is put down on both sides at Rs. 72,000. Hackney Carriage Registration Fund ditto at Rs. 16,500. Jute Ware Fund at Rs. 26,400 and Jute Ware house Inspection Fund at Rs. 5,280.

The Chairman recommends increase of the General-rate, which falls equally on the landlord and the tenant, from 9½ to 10½ per cent.

The Budget has been referred to the General Committee for scrutiny.

BABOO Jodoolal Mullick has served on the Calcutta Municipality notice of a suit for damages, valuing his injured dignity at Rs. 20,000. Last week, the Corporation sold his two carriages for realization of the rates due. The Baboo had threatened the Chairman with injunction of the High Court in case he proceeded with the sale. The Municipality, nothing daunted, went on in its usual way and the carriages were knocked down to the highest bidders at half the sum due from the Baboo.

THE great meeting at Bankipore presided over by the Maharaja of Durbhunga unanimously passed the following resolutions:—

1. That this meeting is very grateful to the Government of Bengal for its efforts to allay the excitement prevalent among the Hindoo population in Behar, and for the action it has taken in the matter of the complaint of Isri Singh and other people at Durbhungah.

2. That, while the inquiry into this complaint is going on, the matter or matters involved ought to be considered sub judice; and this meeting is of opinion that the people of Behar should await with confidence the final resolution of Government on the subject, without in the meantime taking any further action in the matter.

THE Maharaja of Travancore, out on pilgrimage and business, arrived at the British capital last Saturday morning and left it last night. He took up his residence at Sealdah in the houses hitherto occupied by the Maharaja of Vizianagram and since purchased by him. There was the usual exchange of courtesies between His Highness and the Viceroy.

Haji Adam Haji Abdool Latiff, of the firm of Haji Abdool Latiff Baladina, in Bombay, is in custody on a charge of forgery in respect of thirteen lacs. He is accused by the Bombay branch of the Bengal Bank of having forged the names of Ebrahim Haji Jakeria and others to certain bills of exchange.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE House of Commons has voted the Address to the Queen.

THE Conference on the Labour Question called by the German Emperor meets at Berlin on the 15th March. England, France and Belgium have already accepted the German invitation. Mr. Bradlaugh is opposed to the limitation of hours, as, according to him, it would drive British trade from foreign markets.

THERE was when the mail left England considerable dissatisfaction in the ranks of the Home Civil Service. The Treasury had called upon its clerks to work seven hours, or one hour additional, for an extra of half hour's pay. They protested and sent up a memorial, respectfully but firmly expressing their inability to comply with the order.

THE Committee, presided over by Lord Harris, on the Militia of the United Kingdom, has reported material advance in the service since 1884. It has, however, found a weak point in the officering of the force.

EARLY in the week, Mr. Gladstone and Lord Tennyson were reported to be suffering from severe cold. Both of them are now better.

INFLUENZA is still distressing England. It is spreading with alarming speed in Norfolk and Devon. Many of the schools are closed.

It has attacked India too. First in the continent, Bombay has raised the alarm. In a letter to the Times of India, Dr. Blaney says that during the week his practice has increased enormously and that during this short period, he has treated probably 200 cases, all with symptoms closely resembling those of the influenza epidemic. A subsequent telegram of the 26th ult. says that the day before, 275 pupils of the Fort High School were absent through sickness, while 300 hands of the Hindustan Mill and large numbers in other mills were on the sick list absent, the general symptoms being fever, cough and catarrh. We would wish much to keep the new visitor out of our doors—but how to do it?

GOVERNMENT is not opposed to a proposal for free education in England, but is not prepared to introduce any measure on that behalf in the present year.

GOVERNMENT has anticipated Mr. Bradlaugh. On the 21st February, Lord Cross read in the Upper House a bill for the expansion of the Indian Councils. It secures to the Supreme Council the right to discuss the Budget even when it is not to be followed by any fresh legislation. It raises the maximum of additional or non-official members in all the Legislative Councils, and grants the power of interpellation. The bill has the general approval of both the Past Viceroys Lord Northbrook and Ripon.

MR. Goschen is willing to consider any real grievance touching the assaying of silver plate from the East. He does not consider it necessary to issue fresh orders to the Customs authorities in connection therewith. A relief from that duty cannot be indefinitely put off.

REPLYING to Mr. Bradlaugh, Sir John Gorst declined to lay the Gilgit memorandum on the table of the House of Commons. It is the same memorandum, a not very accurate version of which in the Amrita Bazar Patrika tempted Lord Lansdowne into a passionate interpretation of the Official Secrets law.

SIR Morell Mackenzie sued St. James's Gazette for libel for its remarks regarding the Doctor's treatment of the late Emperor Frederick. There was a similar charge too against the Times. The first has been cast in £1,500 damages, the Times consenting to pay £150.

FIVE new Turkish men-of-war built in the Turkish Naval Dockyard have been launched at Constantinople.

A NEW York telegram of the 24th February reported floods at Prescott by the bursting of the dam. The details now given shew that a wall of water, forty feet high, swept along a distance of 100 miles, demolishing the town of Wickenburg. The loss of human life is given at fully a hundred and fifty people, mostly miners and herdsmen. The disaster had been predicted, and a messenger was sent from Prescott down the valley the day before, to warn people of the danger, but he got drunk on the way and the message was undelivered.

THE Prince is still touring in the Native States. He arrived at Jodhpore on the 22nd February, the whole city turning out to catch a sight of their future Emperor. There were illuminations in the night, and a shooting party the next day. On the 24th, the Maharaja gave a banquet at which the Prince, in replying to the toast given by the Maharaja to his health, spoke many kind things of the State, the hospitality of the Maharaja, and the valour of the Marwars in war. Evidently, His Royal Highness enjoyed his Jodhpore trip immensely, for he said that nowhere during his tour had he been more heartily welcomed or more splendidly entertained, and nowhere had he enjoyed himself more thoroughly than during his visit here. The Prince also complimented Sir Pertab Sing for the good impression he had made while on his visit to England as the Maharaja's representative at the Jubilee festival. The following day was spent in pigsticking. A notable incident in the Prince's stay in Jodhpore was his spearing a fine boar, which charged him and got speared for its pains. The spear head got bent quite crooked, and it has been kept as a souvenir. The Royal party left for Philibhit on 26th en route to Nepal. Major Durand, C.B., the Nepal Resident, received His Royal Highness at Philibhit and accompanied the party to Mundraghat on the British side of the river Sardah, where the Prince was received by his Excellency Maharaja Bir Shumshere Jang Rana Bahadoor, Prime Minister of Nepal.

MR. Allan O. Hume, if he has not yet given us our Parliament at College Green, has obtained a privilege for Her Majesty's subjects in India long granted but not allowed. On his representation, the Director-General of the Post Office of India writes that "Petitions to Her Majesty and to Parliament are exempt from postage by sections 40 and 41 of 3 and 4 Vict. Cap. 96, but there has been some doubt whether this is applicable to India, and hitherto no such exemption has been claimed or allowed. The subject has now been under consideration, and as I am satisfied that the provisions of the Statute are applicable to India, I have issued the necessary instructions in the matter."

The late Mr. Anstey claimed, in his defence of Ameer Khan against the persecution of Government, that all beneficial Statutes of Parliament applied to India. He was then laughed out. The feeling is different now. We are told in the Governor-General's Council itself that Acts of Parliament are applicable to India although not acted upon. It is, however, somewhat anomalous that laws are made in India regarding matters already legislated upon by Imperial Parliament, without repealing the statutes. It strikes us that the time has arrived to enquire by a special Commission which of the Parliamentary Statutes apply to India and to what extent. The Statutes relating to India issued under authority of the Government of India do not give full information, and are, therefore, incomplete and misleading.

It requires an effort to imagine that there exists a S. P. C. A. in a city in which the noblest of our dumb brethren and best helper of man, the horse, is daily and hourly treated with crying injustice, and compelled under the lash to draw a preposterous load for the benefit of an organised company. But good is various in degree as in shape, and it were unfair not to acknowledge that we do find from time to time distinct traces of the presence of that modern instrument of humanity or exponent of philozoism. Just now, we have to confess the influence of its balmy corrective. Our S. P. C. A. instructed Mr. Garth, barrister, to prosecute at the Police bench two butchers, and has got them convicted. We wish we could say "punished," but the punishment is only nominal. The case was tried by Babu Srinath Chunder and Nawab Mir Mahammad Ali, Honorary Magistrates. They at first could not agree that the act was a cruelty. They took time and heard further evidence, and have at last disposed of the case in a model of a judgment for conciseness. It begins :—

"We think the charge against these two defendants has been proved. We find that the defendants committed the offence with which they have been charged. It is unnecessary for us now to discuss the meaning of the word 'wantonly,' used in the Act. We take it to mean unnecessarily, and we cannot hold that because the entire skin which the defendants expected to get would have brought more money into their pockets, they were justified in flaying a goat alive."

Just so. The judgment thus ends :—

"We convict the two accused, and fine each of them Rs. 30, and in default of payment, we sentence each to simple imprisonment for a month."

We wish the conclusion might be different as regards the chastisement. A Rs. 30 fine is nothing. In fact, a fine seems a mockery in such a case. This faint-heartedness is, indeed, the characteristic weakness of "justices' justice" in this country. We can scarcely conceive of a worse case in which the highest punishment under the law might be awarded. We cannot conceive enormity more enormous than that a man should deliberately torture to death a poor creature incapable of offence, without the slightest excuse beyond a desire to make money. However, we are relieved to find that our Baboo and Nawab Sahibs have come to so satisfactory a conclusion. The S. P. C. A. and Mr. Garth are entitled to the thanks of the community.

THE Royal Commission on the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb and Idiots and Imbeciles, make a strong and unanimous plea for making the State responsible, in its own interests, for education and training of the unfortunates. They propose to make them useful members of society and capable of earning their own livelihood. The terms of reference did not exclude India from the scope of the investigation. The Commissioners, however, found that it involved a long and special enquiry in this country, and so submitted their report without specially dealing with India. They have since, through Lord Egerton of Tatton, addressed the Secretary of State for India expressing a hope that "your Lordship would see fit to take the whole subject into your early consideration, so as to enable the general principles laid down in this Report, with such local modifications as may be necessary, to be carried out in India, as well as in other parts of the British Empire."

Lord Cross, by his despatch Public No. 87, dated London, 5th August 1889, enquires of His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council "whether, and to what extent, these principles can be made applicable to India." The Government of India has circulated the Report and the letter for opinion of Local Governments, and thus enunciates its present views on the question :—

"From—C. J. Lyall, Esq., C.I.E., Offg. Secretary to the Govt. of India. To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, General Department. Home Department, Education.

Simla, October 1889.

Sir,—I am directed to forward copy of a despatch from the Secretary of State, No. 87, dated the 15th August 1889, and of its enclosures, being a letter dated the 16th July from Lord Egerton of Tatton, with the Report of the Royal Commission on the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb, and Idiots and Imbeciles, and to request an expression of the views of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor on the question how far the conclusions of the Royal Commission are applicable to these classes in India.

2. It appears to the Governor-General in Council, as at present advised, that the principles advocated by the Royal Commission proceed upon the assumption that the unfortunate classes with which they deal, if provision is not made for their training and support by the State, would be dependent upon public or private charity; and also upon the assumption, which is true for the United Kingdom but not for India, that the State has accepted the obligation of providing for the compulsory education of all classes of the community. As regards the first of these assumptions, His Excellency in Council believes that the family system in India has caused it to be generally recognized as an obligation by all able-bodied persons to provide for the support of those members of their families who, from congenital or other defects, are unable to earn their own livelihood; and as regards the second, the State has not yet succeeded in securing instruction in the rudiments of learning for those classes who suffer under no natural disqualification, and it would seem premature to spend money upon endeavouring to train persons who at the best could only very imperfectly respond to the efforts made on their behalf, and whose education would be exceptionally expensive.

It would appear, therefore, that for the present any assistance that may be granted by the State towards the improvement of the condition of these unfortunate classes should be confined to aiding private charitable efforts where such efforts have been made. I am to enquire whether any institutions which might receive such assistance exist in Bengal, and if so, to request that some account may be given of their working and the success which has hitherto attended their operations.

In this connection I am to refer to this Department's letter No. 30, dated the 26th January 1887, forwarding a letter from Mr. Francis Maginn, in which he asked for assistance towards the establishment of a school in Calcutta for deaf mutes, and to enquire whether any action was taken in the matter by the Government of Bengal."

THE Revenue Recovery Bill was materially altered in the Select Committee. The amendments made were explained by the Hon'ble Mr. Crosthwaite, the Member in charge, at the meeting of the Imperial Council of 14th ultimo, after which the Bill was passed. Its object is to supply defects in the present law in regard to the realization of arrears of the revenue or local rates. In the case of arrears which have accrued in one District or Province, it provides a speedy procedure for their realization by the transfer of certificates from one District or Province to another. Another important Bill, amending the Official Trustee Act, Indian Succession Act, Administrator-General Act and Probate and Administration Act, was also passed on the same day. Its object is to split up the present huge jurisdiction of the Administrator-General of Bengal into four smaller divisions having Calcutta, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon for their respective centres. Some of its provisions will come into operation on the occurrence of vacancies in the offices of Administrator-General and Official Trustee: others will have immediate effect. The immediate changes will be to include Upper Burma in the jurisdiction of the Administrator-General of Bengal, and British Baluchistan in that of the Administrator-General of Bombay. It also empowers the High Courts to raise the rates of commission now payable to Official Trustees.

THE sixth anniversary of the Sobha Bazar Benevolent Society passed off with some clat the other day. Babu Protap Chunder Mozumdar's was the speech of the day. As pleasant reunions of respectable members of society, these anniversaries serve a good purpose. Why not have them preceded or followed by dinners, which would be an additional feature of interest? In the case of the Sobha Bazar Society, at any rate, there need be no reason for not adopting this improvement. It will have an instantaneous effect upon the attendance, we can guarantee. Nor is precedent wanting for such a departure, if one were wanted. For years, the Ootterpara Hitakari attracted a large gathering from far and near and both sides of the river by the good cheer it provided for the guests after the ceremony. Since the death of Babu Raj Kissen Mookerjee, the claims of the inner man were neglected, and who now hears of the Hitakari?

Holloway's Pills.—Factory Operatives and Workers in Manufactories.—The remarkable remedies which have been discovered and perfected by Thomas Holloway, and which have for more than forty years been successfully used in every quarter of the globe, are especially useful in all the manifold ailments which afflict those who by reason of their occupation are confined for years, or all their lives, in crowded buildings and workshops. Holloway's Pills and Ointment are associated remedies, the former restoring the vital powers when diminished, and always acting as an efficient blood purifier, whilst the latter relieves local maladies, checks inflammation, and acts as a cleansing and healing agent in cases of bad legs, bad breasts, ulcers and unhealthy sores of all kinds.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1890.

LORD CROSS'S REFORM BILL.

The Secretary of State's Bill in the House of Lords for the reform of Indian Legislative Councils, will be associated with Lord Dufferin's Viceroyalty. It fulfils the promise he made in his Jubilee Address. It is a substantial measure of progress, and it will be to his political insight and liberal sympathies that India's gratitude for it will be due. Lord Dufferin had not been long in his office before the defects of our legislative chambers attracted his Lordship's attention. He saw the progress of the people and sympathised with their aspirations. The work of Government had also become arduous and complicated and he saw the necessity of more and more availing of the help of the people in that work. He made enquiries and became satisfied that the time had come for more adequately introducing the native element in our legislatures and giving them a more representative constitution. Ever since, he had been in correspondence with the Home authorities, and the present Bill is the outcome of his arduous and earnest labors. The Bill does not, it is true, adopt Lord Dufferin's scheme of reform in entirety. Indeed, in one important particular, it is very much different. We refer, of course, to its discarding the elective principle. Probably if Lord Dufferin were still Viceroy, that principle would have had a better chance of being accepted. At any rate, his Lordship would have had a hard fight with the Home Government before surrendering an important feature of his scheme. But the Home Government cannot be blamed for their action, which no doubt is based upon the present Viceroy's opinion on the subject. Lord Lansdowne is the responsible ruler now, and it is both becoming and expedient that deference should be shown to his views in a matter of this kind. If Lord Cross's Bill, therefore, does not accept the principle of election, the usual etiquette and procedure of official business are responsible for the difference. For ourselves, we think it would have been as well if Lord Lansdowne had seen his way to give election a fair trial, at any rate—a modicum election. Our own experience of elective Municipalities and Local Boards has, we must confess, considerably modified our views on the subject. Nevertheless, the principle of nomination has generally been such a conspicuous failure, that we would fain stick to election as the lesser of two evils. If election tends to vulgarise an essentially conservative people like the people of this country, and has practically led to the return of unqualified representatives in municipal boards, the evil may be remedied by restricting the franchise. In the case of legislative chambers, the right of election might be only conferred on well recognised representative bodies like Chambers of Commerce, the British Indian Association, and other similar bodies. Not that effect cannot be given to such a safeguarded system of election even while nomination remained the statutory method. But in view of the persistent abuses of nomination in the past, it were much to be desired that election were formally recognised in the law. Nomination properly made, would give rise to no complaints. Lord Reay's exercise of this power has always been attended with the happiest results. Indeed, nomination has not a little to be said for it. It is essentially election by a single intelligence, and if carefully conducted, it may secure more quickly and conveniently the return of the fittest. Our objections to nomination are therefore aimed at its practical abuses. So far nomination has almost invariably been synonymous with Abuse. Men have been appointed to the Provincial legislatures as well as the Imperial Council who had no business to be there. In fact, one cannot but wonder how a Government so well served, as a rule, by its civil officers could possibly make such ridiculous mistakes. The appointments could not wholly be due to favoritism, though that might have had some part to play. The fact is British officials are easily deluded by appearances. We can at a moment's notice string together a whole catalogue of names of men either absolutely worthless or with a mere veneer of polish thrown over what will not bear examination, who by dint of self-assurance and intrigue and advertising methods of coming to the front, have won not merely the good graces, but the esteem of the bureaucracy. Nomination has thus naturally come to be distrusted. It has been a signal failure, and it is time our rulers knew it. We are therefore disposed to give a trial to election under some carefully devised limitations. For the rest, election is the great popular demand. The Congress has cried itself hoarse over it. Its recognition will give great satisfaction to the Congress party, while if it was found not to realise the expectations of its ardent advocates, it might be abandoned on experience of its failure without causing discontent.

The question, whether there shall be election or not, is as yet far from final settlement. Lord Cross, however, by introducing the Bill in the House of Lords, has given a practical assurance that this as well as other questions relating to the subject will receive the best possible consideration before they are decided one way or the other. The House contains some of the greatest authorities on Indian questions. Ex-Viceroy's are there who will bring the whole weight of their experience and knowledge of this country to bear upon the discussion of the measure. A debate under such distinguished auspices cannot fail to do justice to the views respectively held on the subject of election by the present Viceroy and his predecessor. Lord Cross is also to be congratulated on other grounds upon his introduction of the measure in the House of Lords. The country may likewise be congratulated upon this incident. It seems to be an omen of good augury. By thus forestalling Mr. Bradlaugh's proposed Bill on the same question, his Lordship has shown great wisdom. Not only justice is thus secured to the late Viceroy who initiated the proposal, but the chances of its acceptance by Parliament are also made more secure. Mr. Bradlaugh with all his sympathies, is yet no authority on Indian matters. It is true he already finds himself on Indian questions at the head of a Liberal squadron in the House of Commons whom the Congress has won over to its support. This Indian party, however, is just forming and would not have availed to ensure the passing of the Bill in the House of Commons. The details of his proposal, particularly in regard to the constitution of electorate bodies, were as yet far from definite. The leaders of the Congress themselves are scarcely unanimous on this point. A measure, as yet far from mature and bristling with difficulties of detail, would have small chance of a favorable reception from a Chamber generally ill-informed and unsympathetic in Indian matters. Whatever Mr. Bradlaugh's general position in the House, on an Indian question his influence must, in the beginning, be necessarily small. In the best circumstances, there must have been great delay with his Bill. On the contrary, we have in Lord Cross's Bill more moderate concessions, it is true, but they are the mature and well-considered proposals of the responsible Government. Coming before the House of Lords with the imprimatur of the Secretary of State and two successive Viceroy, and supported as it has every likelihood of being, by ex-Viceroy and other great Indian authorities among the Lords, when it comes in due course to the Lower Chamber, it will naturally command more respectful attention. Barring the complete elimination of the elective principle, the other features of the Bill ought to make it acceptable to all fair-minded people. The Congress will probably not be satisfied, though they will jubilate all the same for what they will regard as a triumph of their agitation. But the genesis of Lord Cross's proposed enactment is already matter of history. The Congress may try, but will fail to dislodge Lord Dufferin from his position of loco parentis with respect to this measure.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN ON THE NATIVE PRESS.

SIR Auckland Colvin, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, in his last administration report, expresses the following opinion on the Native Press:—

"The Native Press in these Provinces is, to a considerable extent, free from the charge of excess which characterizes the Press of many other parts of India. A more temperate tone and habit of thought exists here; but there is a tendency—probably a growing tendency—to imitate the violent style and unreasoning methods of the Native Press elsewhere. The adoption of the tone which characterizes much of the Native Press is the more to be regretted as it robs it of value as a guide and assistance to the Government, its attacks being without qualification or discernment. All that emanates from Government being found by this section to be equally bad, it is too often useless to turn to its pages for intelligent or discriminating criticism on its measures, or for any useful statement of the wishes and views of the people. There exist, happily, in these Provinces, certain native papers which in no way expose themselves to these strictures. Nevertheless, the Native Press is in too great measure in the hands of needy men, who use it to blackmail their respectable fellow-citizens; and, apart from its uselessness, for the reasons above stated, as a guide to general native opinion, the license which at present characterizes it is in the highest degree odious to the large and important class who are thus laid under contribution. The Lieutenant-Governor does not at present see any serious ground for supposing that the intemperate language of the Native Press, and its indiscriminating attacks on officials in India, have in any degree corrupted the general tone of thought among the people, or led them to adopt its point of view. It is in no sense of the word a representative press, need and greed being its main features. It is difficult, however, to believe that the uninterrupted and increasing circulation of newspapers, habitually imputing to the Government of India the basest designs, and to its officers the most unscrupulous conduct, can fail in course of time to create among very ignorant people, such as are the masses here, a strong feeling of hostility to Government which is confidently, and so far as they can see, without contradiction, stated to be animated by such motives and served by such subordinates. All that can be said at present on the subject is that the ignorant classes seem so far to have formed and retained juster conceptions on the subject than those who have assumed the mission of instructing them."

We commend these weighty remarks to our countrymen, and in especial to native political writers. They will repay perusal. As an instance of that discriminating criticism which Sir Auckland desiderates in the native press, it is a study. Carefully read, it ought to teach native politicians how public questions have to be approached. They will not find a trace of violence or of bitterness in Sir Auckland's attitude towards the Indian press. And this, be it remembered, in a man who has been the bête noire of that press. No man, excepting perhaps Lord Dufferin, has had such wholesale denunciations at its hands. No man could be vilier in its eyes. And all for his plain-speaking of the Congress. Mr. Hume would bully him into support of his movement, but he was not to be taken in so easily. He openly repudiated the claim which Mr. Hume would fain put forward by an ingenious construction of some of his utterances that he had expressed himself in sympathy with the Congress, and cried quits. And henceforward he was to have no peace, if the Congressists and their journals could prevent it. The most serious charges were laid against him. He was accused of instigating Sir Syed Ahmed to establish a counter-movement. He was fomenting the jealousies of the Mahomedans against the Hindus and setting classes and sects by the ears. Such was the foul abuse poured on him by an infuriated press. And now when he sits in judgment on his traducers, does he pay them in their own coin? Does he indulge in their violence of tone or imitate their one-sided, unreasoning, indiscriminating style of criticism?

Nor does Sir Auckland propose any hasty measure for the repression of its license. He merely states facts as he finds them, and points out their possible bearings on present and future public opinion. He offers no suggestion. It is true that after the deliberate manner in which the Gagging-Act has been removed from the statute-book, any reactionary proposal of the kind would be out of date. But still holding the views he does, of the mischievous tendencies of the press, and remembering all that he has suffered at its hands, it argues no small degree of statesmanlike moderation and forbearance to exercise such self-restraint. In this Sir Auckland shows himself to great advantage in comparison with a late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Sir Ashley Eden was the idol of the Bengal press. Whoever else might be in fault, Sir Ashley was immaculate in its eyes. And by a curious irony of events, it fell to Sir A. Eden's lot to be the prime mover of the Vernacular Press Act.

Our knowledge of the Upper Provinces Press is not sufficient to enable us to pass an opinion on Sir Auckland Colvin's estimate of its character. But he writes under such an apparent sense of responsibility, and his opportunities of knowing are so exceptional, that we have no reason to question its general accuracy. If "need and greed" be its main features, and blackmailing be its chief game, the press of Sir Auckland's territory must be even worse than the Press elsewhere with its empty and almost innocuous violence of language.

THE PRINCIPLE OF SELECTION FOR THE HIGHEST OFFICES IN INDIA.

LORD HARRIS AS GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY.

INDIA is the slave of convenience of Britain and Britons—their maid of all work—and camel of all burden—the scapegoat as well as cat's paw of the establishment—the sink of all refuse—the subject of all experiments. Of course, anybody is good enough to rule in this country—to direct its government, or preside in its courts, or command its forces—in time of peace at any rate. It is thus that the Empire was called in to meet the gravest military danger to which it was ever exposed with a succession of incapables at the head of its army. Thus its so-called responsible rulers do not scruple to promote to the highest bench, in the teeth of the court's aversion, notorious incompetence. The very highest offices themselves—those of the rulers on the spot—are not treated with more consideration. Caprice or convenience rather than discretion is visible in the manner of flogging them up, God Almighty, who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, moderating the full consequences of human folly and, not unoften, extracting good out of evil. Take our own times. Dalhousie came out to recover his lost family estates, and it was simply an accident that he was a man of rare ability. Lord Canning was a heavy young man of education who had been tried in the ministry but had developed no capacity. It was proposterous to call such a man to the most difficult charge in the universe. But, then, there was no help for it, at least the absurdity by repetition had ceased to strike, while gratitude called for a sacrifice; and what so well to hand for the purpose as poor India? Lord Canning's father had encouraged the pudding genius of young Palmerston and was the first to introduce him to Cabinet office. It was in remembrance of that good office of old, that Palmerston the veteran Premier gave the scion of George Canning the opportunity for acquiring wealth and the chance of ~~being~~ ^{being} known in the East. Talk of absurdity! Why, Indian affairs are a standing anomaly. The circumstances under which the lamented Lord Mayo came out to this country are well known and admitted between all parties. As Chief Secretary for Ireland, he threatened the life of his ministry. But he was too good a friend to be sent adrift in disgrace, so long as the House of Commons has left an Asiatic Dependency to redress the balance and shelter incompetence. Accordingly, the bungler in Ireland was sent over to exercise his tried hand on this Colossus of Empires. How he acted in office—whether he failed or succeeded, whether he proved a blessing or a curse, is beside the question. That was a lottery. The principle of selection is what we are now concerned to show. That principle is the negation of all principle.

Sometimes, the absurdity goes to farcical lengths. What can be more laughable than the promotion of a Patronage Secretary to a distant satrapy? There is no possible connection between the two offices—no analogy between their requirements. Nor can the experience of one be of any help in the other. But such is the recklessness of Power against the weak that, within the last few years, India has had to submit to this tomfoolery, and one of the most English of Englishmen, whose mind was wholly occupied with the details and mysteries of British electioneering and party government, who had never exhibited the slightest trace of extra-British sympathy, was made Lord over myriads of dark Asiatics who all seemed to him the same. Poor Madras! she has been like the unfortunate dog in the proverb. Already handicapped with a bad name—she was simply offered a sacrifice to make matters pleasant for ministers. The Benighted was bewhipped.

And next, Bombay is to have her turn. She is just now well served, being most fortunate in her Governor, an accomplished gentleman of wide sympathies. But his administration is drawing to a close. A successor has already been selected. And what are his qualifications? He is an utterly inexperienced young gentleman, but undeniably broad in the chest, muscular, strong, and hardy. Whether he knows Adam Smith or not, he can knock half a dozen Prabhus into a jelly. A magnificent cricketer, gymnast, acrobat, he may be a Champion of the Belt. But then the endowments and training of a prize-fighter have nothing in common with the requisites for governing nations.

We wonder whether there is any symbolism understood in these peculiar appointments. Is the idea gaining in England that India is becoming difficult to govern, and requires to be kept down by the strong arm of the civil power? Do they fancy that the Mulls are all bloody Moplahs, that an efficient whip is the ruler for them? Do they imagine the Ducks to be veritable Dragons that a young Hercules is needed to keep them in check and prevent them sowing their ominous dentals in the land?

This business reminds us of a famous inter-academic passage-at-arms in England. We refer to the epigrams which the sister Universities of Oxford and Cambridge bandied between them in the beginning of the last century. George I. having made a present of books to Cambridge at the same time that a regiment was sent to Oxford, Dr. Trapp wrote—

The king observing, with judicious eyes,
The state of both his universities,
To one he sent a regiment; for why?
That learned body wanted loyalty:—
To th' other he sent books, as well discerning
How much that loyal body wanted learning.

That was a hit indeed, and all the worse for the younger academy for its air of fairplay. The discrimination shown by the writer seemed to leave her no leg to stand upon. But genius is not daunted by difficulty, and one of her dutiful sons fully answered the Oxonian squib. If Dr. Trapp's epigram is good, the following by Sir William Browne is glorious:—

The king to Oxford sent his troop of horse,
For Tories own no argument but force.
With equal care to Cambridge books he sent,
For Whigs allow no force but argument.

Is it on some such principle that the Home Government have found a successor for Lord Reay? It is certainly in the lightest of light literature rather than the literature of politics, that the rationale of the appointment is to be discovered. In the plenitude of official knowledge, Bombay may be a barren beach of the Arabian Sea somehow abounding in wild ducks, for which a modern Nimrod with a gun is just the Sultan. As the actual ducks are neither here nor there, the result is that a respectable gentleman, who may be happy and possibly useful at home, is being transported on a wild-goose-chasing game. The prospect for the Western Presidency is not very inviting. To the sober sons of Asia, Christians at the best seem a rum lot, not to say queer customers, with their boundless animal spirits and apparently abnormal restlessness. Muscular Christianity is too much of a good thing. But Allah is great.

VAGARIES OF THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.

THE Calcutta University Examinations began this week with a new departure. In past years, the Entrance, F. A., and B. A. examinations used to be held simultaneously, and that arrangement involved the minimum of interference with the ordinary work of schools and colleges which are then in session. The same thing was to be the case this year also, as announced at first, but subsequently, for reasons which have not transpired, it was arranged otherwise. Accordingly, the Entrance Examination has led the way, and the other two will follow after the interval of a fortnight. This will mean the stoppage of work, in at any rate, the institutions where these examinations are held, for nearly three weeks, if not more. Nothing could be more agreeable than this long holiday to the teaching staff in these places, but parents of the students will certainly have other feelings. Already, there are more of these holidays than used to be the case before, and the present change in holding the Examinations separately, coupled with the extraordinary delay which is now-a-days made in publishing their results, will have practically the effect of depriving candidates who appear at them from the benefit of regular school or college education for over half the year. The evil of this interruption to studies is particularly seen in the case of candidates who are "plucked." Take the case of F. A. candidates. They are selected in December as eligible for admission to the examination, and directly the selections are made, they cease from attending lectures, not a few doing so even before. The Examination as in the present year comes off in March, and the result is published about the time the long summer vacation begins. The colleges reopen about the end of June, and resume regular work from July. As regards the candidates who fail, here is clear loss of six months time.

This year's Entrance Examination has not passed without the usual crop of complaints. Only in regard to the selection of questions, the complaints are not so many and so loud as in some past years. Evidently, the examiners were more careful this time to adapt the questions to the capacities of the examinees. We wish there were the same carefulness in regard to more minor points. It would appear from some of the printed question papers set this year, that it is no body's business in this University "to correct the proofs," or there would not have been such ridiculous mistakes as have crept into some of the question-papers. We understand that Mr. Tawney had to issue bulletins on the first three of the days of the Entrance Examination pointing out the typographical errors in those papers. Is he not going to take sharp notice of the negligence of those whose duty it was to see that there were no such things? These bulletins were of course sent only to the neighbouring seats of examination in Calcutta within reach of the Senate House. But what of the centres of examination in the far off mofussil? Passing over minor typographical errors, we will mention only some important ones which occurred in the Sanskrit paper on Tuesday and in the Translation papers on Monday. In the Sanskrit paper, the last question was "Translate the following into English," while curiously enough the passage directed to be translated into English was English already. To be called upon to translate English into English was to do no less a feat than

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow.

And yet, by some freak of chance, this very feat or work of supererogation, this "wasteful and ridiculous excess" as the Poet calls it, was to be done by the candidates who had taken up Sanskrit. It is reported that one of them solved the difficulty by paraphrasing the passage, of course into his own worse English. To say that the correction of the mistake would have easily suggested itself to the candidates as well as the superintending officers at these places, will not do. The English passage was, indeed, really meant to be rendered into Sanskrit, but under the hard and fast rules which govern these examinations, no one is at liberty to suggest any such substitution or correction.

More serious even than this, were the printing mistakes in the Translation papers. The passages in Bengali, Hindi, and Urdu given for translation into English, contained several misprints, and over some of them candidates were likely to stumble. But if we charitably assume that they caused no real difficulty to the candidates whose vernaculars they were, and pass over these slips as no serious matter, what shall we say of the quaint diction of the passages which, at the best, is now grown out of date. These passages were to be translated into English, and formed one of two papers in the examination meant to test knowledge in English. They were therefore selected by the Head Examiner in English, Mr. Rowe, and were probably his own composition. On any other hypothesis one cannot explain how such indifferent, old fashioned, slipshod Bengali, or Hindi or Urdu could ever be written, far less selected for the purposes of a University Examination. But this is not all. We hear that some of the examiners who are to decide the fate of candidates in this translation business are Europeans, with no better knowledge of the vernaculars than the Head Examiner, and that they will be helped in their task by cut and dry translations of the passages which have been made for them, the exercises of the candidates being appraised by this rigid standard. This looks like measuring knowledge by the yard measure. How justice could be possible under such extraordinary circumstances passes our understanding. We hope our information on this point may not be quite accurate. If, however, it be so, the least we can do is to suggest that these translation papers should be made over to the native gentlemen among the examiners in English, and their European colleagues have nothing to do with them.

There is still another matter. It used to be said that questions were often framed more to show off the ingenuity and learning of the examiners than to test the merits of examinees. Some questions in this year's English Composition Paper—we are glad they are a few,—are quite open to this charge. Here are the more objectionable of them :—

- “3. State clearly the sense of the following idiomatic expressions :—
(c.) Their name is 'Legion.' (d.) It goes against the grain.
5. Form sentences showing the difference in meaning between :— outlook and look out; overreach and reach over; upshot and shot up; withstand and stand with.”

A man who has so little knowledge of the acquirements of Entrance candidates as to set such stiff, out of the way questions, is clearly unworthy of the office of examiner. To expect mere boys, mostly natives, to know the meanings of such idiomatic expressions, and prepositional phrases is to be doomed to disappointment. To the examiner who is an Englishman, they seem common enough. But they are the reverse to even ordinarily educated natives, to say nothing of boys. Even B. A. students will not stand the test of some of these questions. And if his past experience of Indian students has not taught him this, his experience must have taught him very little. Further, these are by no means fair questions. Candidates are not told to get up a whole dictionary of phrases as a part of their English course, and in the absence of any such express intimation, to pick and choose from the vast store-house of English phraseology any but the simplest and most common ones, particularly for Entrance candidates, is surely to take them by a surprise. The examiners in English should thank their Chief for having provided endless merriment for them to relieve the tediousness of their task. Over the answers to these questions they will have much hearty laughing. These answers will be of as many different kinds as there are candidates who make bold to grapple with them.

Our Ranchi correspondent's letter on this subject may appear in our next. The daily papers are full of complaints.

PROFESSOR MAX MULLER ON ORIENTAL STUDIES.

Professor Max Muller delivered the following address at the inauguration, in London under the Presidency of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, of the School for Modern Oriental Studies :—

For more than 30 years, I may honestly say, I have been looking forward to what at last I see realized to-night. If you could look back to the old number of The Times, you would find there, just 32 years ago, my last urgent appeal for the establishment of a School of Oriental Languages in London. It bears the date of the 10th of January, and was published on the 13th of January, 1857. And I may say now what was not generally known at the time—that he who took the warmest interest in this plan, who saw not only its great literary, but its supreme national importance, and who never gave up his hope that sooner or later that plan would be realized, was, Sir, your Royal father. (Cheers.) You know, Sir, how nothing that concerned the greatness and honour of England was foreign to his noble heart, and how the duties, however distasteful and unpopular at times, which that greatness imposes on all of us found in him always the most faithful and determined champion. The Prince Consort could not bear to see other countries outstripping England in a work which was peculiarly her own. (Cheers.) England may have her rivals and competitors in the West; in the East she stands supreme, unrivalled, unapproached. England rules over nearly 300 millions of people who speak Oriental languages; she probably supplies the markets of 1,000 millions of the people of the East, and yet, for cultivating a practical or scholarlike knowledge of these languages, for educating a sufficient number of young men qualified to serve her interests and to maintain her power in the East, England has hitherto been doing less than either Russia, France, or Germany. When I say England, I mean the Government. (Hear, hear.) For during the many years which have elapsed since the Crimean war, and since the Indian Mutiny, the different Universities and colleges of the country have indeed bestirred themselves and made the greatest efforts to supply Oriental teaching according to their means, nay, even beyond their means. The expense incurred by some of them in providing a staff of competent professors and teachers of the ancient and, more particularly, of the modern languages of the East has been very serious. It is quite right that the ancient and classical languages of the East should be represented in every University by the very best scholars, far more even than they are at present. But it cannot be expected that Oxford, Cambridge, Glasgow, Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Dublin, King's College, and University College should each provide a staff of teachers for Hindi, Hindustani, Bengali, Marathi, Guzarathi. Tamil, Telugu, Canarese, Burmese, to say nothing of such vernaculars as Tashon, Baungshe, Chinbok, Chinmé, and others for which, as I see from The Times of January 1, the Indian Government has just offered very tempting rewards. Nothing can be more creditable than what has been achieved by the two colleges who have now united their forces under the auspices of the Imperial Institute. Were I free to speak of my own University, I could easily show that the generosity of Oxford in supplying the necessary funds for Oriental teaching need fear no comparison. The same applies, I know, to Cambridge. But when Imperial interests are at stake, the country has a right to expect Imperial—that is, concentrated—action. Otherwise, what is the good of having an Empire? We might as well go back to the Heptarchy. (Laughter and cheers.) The Russian Empire has long been the most liberal patron of Oriental studies. In the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg there has always been a chair for almost every branch of Oriental learning, and the principal spoken languages of the East continue to be taught there by professors, both European and Oriental. In France the Government has long ago founded a school pour les langues orientales vivantes, where Hindustani, Persian, Arabic, Turkish, Chinese, and Tibetan are taught by eminent scholars, while the French Institute has always counted among its members the chief representatives of every department of Oriental research. At Vienna there is an Oriental Seminary, and the Imperial Press has acquired one of the richest collections of Oriental types. When other Universities and academies to which I had applied for assistance hesitated about publishing a translation of the “Sacred Books of the East,” the Austrian Government in the most liberal spirit came forward, ready to bear the expense of an undertaking that was intended to remove the religious prejudices which separate the East from the West. At Berlin a Seminary of Oriental Languages has lately been inaugurated which, under the direction of my learned friend Professor Sachau, bids fair to surpass all the others. As this is the youngest of these institutions, allow me to tell you what excellent work is being done there at present. According to an official report just received, the Oriental Seminary at Berlin has now the following staff of professors and teachers :—One professor of Chinese; two teachers of Chinese, both natives—one for teaching North Chinese, the other South Chinese; one professor of Japanese, assisted by a native teacher; one professor of Arabic, assisted by two native teachers—one for Arabic as spoken in Egypt, the other for Arabic as spoken in Syria; one native teacher of Hindustani and Persian; one native teacher of Turkish; one teacher of Suaheli, an important language spoken on the East Coast of Africa, assisted by a native. Besides these special lectures, those given by the most eminent professors of Sanskrit, Arabic, Persian, and Chinese in the Universities of Berlin are open to the students of the Oriental Seminary. The number of students amounts at present to 115. Of these, 56 are said to belong to the faculty of law, which must be taken to include all who aspire to any employment in the consular and colonial services. Fifteen belong to the faculties of philosophy, medicine, and physical science; four to the faculty of theology, who are probably intended for missionary work. Twenty-three are mentioned as engaged in mercantile pursuits, three are technical students, five officers in the Army, and nine are returned as studying modern Greek and Spanish, languages not generally counted as Oriental, though, no doubt of great usefulness in the East and in America. Suppose that out of this number 50 only are turned out every year, well grounded in one of the Eastern languages—think what a heaven that will be in different parts of the East. Think also of what a power they will constitute. I do not say hostile to England, but at all events in competition and rivalry with her, whenever her diplomatic and her commercial interests are at stake! (Cheers.) Of course, diplomatists of the old school will tell you that interpreters are quite sufficient for transacting any official business in the East, and that having to wait for an answer, while the dragoman is translating, allows time useful for reflection. Our young diplomatists know better. They know that a friendly iste-à-iste is impossible in the presence of a third person, however neutral and machine-like. Dragomans are often irritating, sometime misleading, sometimes actually dishonest. (Laughter and cheers.) If a new commercial treaty has to be negotiated in Japan, if a concession has to be secured in China, if rights of suzerainty have to be acquired in Africa, who is likely to be successful? The envoy who arrives in full state with a posse of secretaries and dragomans, or the diplomatic agent who can converse freely with natives of all ranks, who can make allowance for the prejudices, the temper, the susceptibilities of Eastern potentates, and who in the end may become their best friend and adviser? (Cheers.) No country has appreciated the importance of Oriental studies more highly than Russia, and no country has been better served by her polyglot diplomatists. Let me give you one instance only. More than 50 years ago there was at the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg a professor of Pushtu, then the only one in Europe. People, ignorant of the East, asked what that language might be. We know now but too well that it is the language of the Afghans. In 1840 Professor Dorn published at St. Petersburg his "Grammaire Afghane." We are speaking of ancient history, for at that time Dost Mahomed was still the ruler of Afghanistan, Burnes and Macnaghten had not yet been murdered, and the awful tragedy of the Khyber Pass had not yet been enacted. Yet Russia was all that time quietly encouraging the study of Pushtu, of which there is even now, I believe, no teacher in England. Call this what you like, enlightened patronage of Oriental scholarship, or keen political foresight—in either case Russia deserves full credit, and she has had her reward. (Cheers.) But it is not only for the purpose of state-craft and diplomacy that England should follow the example of Russia, and secure constant supply of well-qualified Oriental scholars. The chief object of diplomacy is to prevent war. But if diplomacy fails and war breaks out, what is an army to do, how is it to live in Eastern countries without officers who can freely communicate with the people, whether friendly or hostile? The German army has always been very proud because it would possess in its ranks one officer who could write a report of the battle of Wörth in Sanskrit. This might possibly prove an embarras de richesse, and I am not going to recommend Sanskrit as a panacea for all evils. (Laughter.) But at the present moment, whether in the Soudan or in Burmah, the English commissariat is sadly in want of officers who can freely converse with the natives, who can write letters in Arabic or Burmese, and are able to explain to the people whether they want an ox or a cow, a sheep or a goat. The Commissariat always claims, perhaps rightly, that no victory has ever been gained on an empty stomach. Much can, no doubt, be requisitioned by sign language, to say nothing of the language of blows and revolvers. But a good understanding between an army and the people of the country is impossible without officers understanding and speaking the language. Many surprises, painful surprises, might have been spared to the English army, if what is called the "Intelligence Department" had been better cared for in times past. I remember, during the Crimean war, a letter from Shamyl arriving in England, and no one being able to read it. It could not well be sent to St. Petersburg for translation. (Laughter.) About the same time the Russian Governor of the Caucasus was said to have received the first information of a carefully planned conspiracy in Georgia from Georgian scholars at St. Petersburg. I see that at present German officers are studying Chinese, Turkish, and Suaheli in the Oriental Seminary at Berlin. Why should we not produce the same article in the School of Oriental Languages which is inaugurated to-night under such brilliant auspices? And when, after war, peace has been restored once more, when commercial intercourse on a large scale has to be established, so as to knit the bonds of peace by the strongest chains, is not a knowledge of the languages more essential to the English than to any other merchants? You would hardly believe the number of letters I receive from time to time from manufacturers, requesting me to translate advertisements, inquiring whether advertisements inserted in Oriental newspapers really mean what they are intended to mean, or asking for translation of notices in Oriental journals. (Laughter.) I am not responsible for the reputation of Mezzofantais, which I seem to enjoy in certain quarters. I have protested against it again and again. Still people will write to me and address me as "the Professor of the Oriental language at Oxford," evidently imagining that one unknown language—some Oriental Volapük—is spoken all over the East. (Laughter.) No one who knows what is to know a language would ever imagine that it is possible for any human being to know more than two or, at the utmost, three languages thoroughly. He may be acquainted with many more, he may even handle some of them dexterously enough in conversation, but to know a language is a work of a life. To learn a new language means to become a new man. I hope, therefore, that in future I shall be relieved of the title of professor of the Oriental language, and that the Imperial Institute, and more particularly the new School of Oriental Languages, will supply to every merchant in England, Scotland, and Ireland such information as I in my ignorance was often unable to give. Every pound laid out on the proper endowment of this school will bear interest a hundred and a thousand fold, by opening new and splendid channels to British commercial enterprise. England cannot live an isolated life. She must be able to breathe, to grow, to expand, if she is to live at all. Her productive power is far too much for herself, too much even for Europe. She must have a wider field for her unceasing activity, and that field is the East, with its many races, its many markets, its many languages. To allow herself to be forestalled or to be ousted by more eloquent and persuasive competitors from those vast fields of commerce would be simple suicide. Our school, in claiming national support, appeals first of all to the instinct of self-preservation. It says to every manufacturing town in England, help us, and, in doing so, help thyself. Whenever the safety and honour of England are at stake we know what enormous sums Parliament is willing to vote for Army and Navy, for fortresses and harbours—sums larger than any other Parliament would venture to name. We want very little for our School of Oriental Languages, but we want at least as much as other countries devote to the same object. We want it for the very existence of England; for the vital condition of her existence is her commerce, and the best markets for that commerce lie in the East. Let the world call England a nation of shopkeepers (laughter)—omni accipio—but let England show that she means to keep her shops against the world. (Cheers.) The nobler feeling of patriotism may lie dormant for a time, but if once roused it awakes with irresistible force and fury, and knows how to defend—

"This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,

"Against the envy of less happier lands."

(Cheers.) Perhaps I have now said enough, and ought to detain you no longer. But, if you could spare me some moments more, there is one subject, very near to my heart, on which I should be glad if you allowed me to say a few words. Need I say that it is India? For ruling India in harmony with the wishes and the highest interests of its inhabitants, and at the same time with a due regard for the heavy responsibility incurred by England in becoming the guardian of that enormous Empire, we want young men who are able to do more than merely chatter Hindustani or Tamil. If we look once more to the lectures provided in the Oriental Seminary at Berlin, we shall find that they are not confined to teaching Oriental languages, or how to write a commercial letter, how to draw up an official document, and how to draft a political treaty. In every department the professors have to lecture on the history, the geography, the manners, customs, laws, and religions of the principal nations of the East. This is the kind of knowledge which is absolutely necessary for those who are destined to rule over a population nearly ten times as large as the population of England, a population not only speaking different languages, but thinking different thoughts, believing in different religions, nourished by different historical traditions, and divided by different aspirations for the future. It is sometimes supposed to be not altogether easy to govern England, Scotland, and Ireland, because on certain points their interests seem divergent. It is said that English statesmen do not understand Ireland, Irish statesmen do not understand England, and Scotch statesmen do not understand either. (Great laughter.) And yet these three countries speak a common language, have a common religion, and, in spite of occasional jars and bickerings, would resist with a common indignation any insult offered to their common honour, and invasion of their commonwealth. Think, then, what a task is imposed on that handful of young Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen who are sent out every year to govern India, and how much depends on their being well equipped for that task. The history of England's taking possession of India is more marvellous than any story of the "Arabian Nights," and what is the most marvellous in it is the apparent absence of any plan or plot from beginning to end. No English statesman was ever so hare-brained as to conceive the plan of sending out an expedition for the conquest of India. But though there was no plan or plot, nowhere in the whole history of the world is there a higher purpose more visible than in the advance of England towards the East. It was the innate vigour of the Saxon race, its strong political instincts, its thirst for work, its love of enterprise, its craving for progress that drove its sons across the sea and made them the founders of new empires in India and colonies. There was no plan or plot; but read the history of the English Empire in India, and you will find that the readiness, the presence of mind, the self-reliance, the endurance, the heroic bravery in moments of supreme anguish of Englishmen and Englishwomen, and, taking it all in all, the political wisdom and moderation of the best of India's rulers and statesmen, would supply materials for a perfect epic, more wonderful than the "Iliad" and "Odyssey." And as in the "Iliad" and the "Odyssey" the old poet shows us behind the human heroes the Greek gods fighting their battle, though unseen by mortal eye, the true historian also must try to discover, behind the conflicts of races and rulers in India, the working out of higher purposes, though at the time beyond the grasp of the human mind. (Cheers.) The great historical drama, of which we are witnessing the last act in India, began thousands of years ago, when the Aryan family separated, one branch moving towards the north-west, the other towards the south-east. Let us not waste our time on questions which admit of no scientific solution as to the exact spot of the original Aryan home. Nothing new and true has yet been advanced against it having been "somewhere in Asia." For us, however, it is enough to know that our ancestors and the ancestors of the Hindoos had once a common home, that they lived in the same pastures, spoke the same language, and worshipped the same gods. Their blood may have been mixed, and by mixture may, we hope, have been improved. But stronger than the affinity of mere blood is affinity of language and thought which makes Englishmen and Hindoos brothers indeed. The ring that was broken thousands of years ago is now being welded together once more. The world is becoming Indo-European. The young men whom England sends to India should greet the Aryan inhabitants, not as conquerors meet the conquered, but as brothers meet brothers, as friends meet friends. It is generally said that India has been conquered by England. But the true conquest of India, it seems to me, is still to come. The true conquerors of India, of the heart of India, will be those very men whom our new School of Oriental Languages means to fit for their arduous work. (Cheers.) No doubt they have to acquire the spoken vernaculars, but in order to understand the people, in order to take a deep human interest in their own work, in order to sympathize with, nay, to love, the people with whom they are brought into daily contact they must do more. There ought to be a real plan and plot in this now conquest. There ought to be a will, for we know that where there is a will there is a way. Our new conquerors will have to study the ancient literature of India, which is still the leaven of Indian thought. They must gain an insight into the ancient religion, which is still the best key to the religious convictions and superstitions of the present day. They must enter into the spirit of the ancient law of the country before attempting to reconcile native customs with the principles of modern legislations. They must learn to appreciate the beauty of Indian literature before measuring it with the standard of our own poetry, or condemning it unheard. If our young statesmen go out to India half acclimatized already to the intellectual atmosphere in which they are to spend the best part of their lives, they will not look upon the country as an exile and on its inhabitants as mere strangers. They are not strangers; they are brothers. They are made of the same stuff as we ourselves. I have never been in India, but I have known Indians, both men and women, and I do not exaggerate when I tell you that some of them need fear no comparison with the best men and women whom it has been my good fortune to know in England, France, or Germany. Whether for unselfishness, or devotion to high ideals, truthfulness, purity, and real, living religion, I know no hero greater than Keshub Chunder Sen, no heroine greater than Ramabai, and I am proud to have been allowed to count both among my best friends. (Cheers.) You may say that these are exceptions. No doubt they are, and they would be exceptions in Europe as much as in India. Mount Everest is an exception; Mount Blanc is an exception; but still we reckon the height of mountain ranges by their highest peaks, and we have a right to measure the sublimity of a whole nation by its best men and women. (Cheers.) Look for these men and women, and you will find them, if not in the great towns, yet in the countless villages of India. The great towns in India, more than in Europe, contain the very dregs of Indian society, and it is from them that our opinion of the character of the Hindoos has been too often formed. And yet what does Elphinstone say, who knew India if anybody ever knew it:—"No set of people among the Hindoos," he says, "are so depraved as the dregs of our own great towns. The villagers are everywhere amiable, affectionate to their families, kind to their neighbours, and, towards all but the Government, honest and sincere." What does Bishop Heber say?—

"The Hindoos are brave, courteous, intelligent, most eager for knowledge and improvement, sober, industrious, dutiful to parents, affectionate to their children, uniformly gentle and patient, and more easily affected by kindness and attention to their wants and feelings than any people I ever met with." Sir Thomas Munro bears even stronger testimony. He writes:—

"If a good system of agriculture, unrivalled manufacturing skill, a capacity to produce whatever can contribute to either convenience or luxury, schools established in every village for teaching, reading, writing, and arithmetic, the general practice of hospitality and charity amongst each other, and, above all, a treatment of the female sex full of confidence, respect, and delicacy, are among the signs which denote a civilized people, then the Hindoos are not inferior to the nations of Europe, and if civilization is to become an article of trade between England and India, I am convinced that England will gain by the import cargo."

These are the unprejudiced opinions of men who knew the Hindoos, their language, literature, and religion thoroughly, who had spent their lives in the Civil Service, and had risen in it to the highest rank. Who after that will dare to say that the Hindoos are a nation of liars and hypocrites, and that no English gentleman could ever be on terms of intimacy and friendship with such niggers? (Cheers.) I have hitherto spoken chiefly of Hindoos, of those who are still under the sway of their ancient native literature and religion, and who speak languages derived from, or strongly impregnated with, Sanskrit. But what I have said applies with equal truth to the Mahomedan inhabitants of India. No one can understand them, can sympathize with them, can influence them, who does not know their religion, who cannot read the Koran and the classical works of Arabic literature. We have no idea how often their feelings are hurt by the free and easy, by the ignorant way in which we speak of what is sacred to them. No Hindoo likes to hear his religion called idolatry, no Parsee can bear to be called a fire-worshipper. In the same way a Mahomedan objects to hearing his religion called Mahomedanism, or Mahomed spoken of as an arch-imposter. Mahomed was no more an imposter than any of the founders of the great religions of the world. (Cheers.) And nothing marks the progress of an enlightened study of religion, of the science of religion, better than the right picture which an eloquent and large-hearted Bishop of the Church of England has lately given of Mahomed in his Bampton lectures. Still, with all their veneration for Mahomed, those who follow him do not quite like to hear their religion called Mahomedanism, though it seems to us a most in-offensive name. It was not made by Mahomed, they say; it was revealed to him, and its true name is Islām (surrender). I doubt whether a better name has ever been invented for any religion, than surrender, Islām (Cheers.) It is a knowledge, a thorough knowledge, not only of the languages of India, but of its classical literature, its religion, its laws and customs, its superstitions and prejudices, its whole social life, that will form the best preparation for those who after passing through this school of Oriental languages, are to become both the servants and the rulers of India. When I look at the list of those who have already been enrolled on the staff of professors and teachers, I see names that offer the best security for the success of this institution. And when I see the name of its Royal patron, I know that whenever this institution requires help and support it will be granted readily and generously. To carry on the work which our fathers had to leave unfinished is the best tribute we can pay to their memory. We could not wish for better auguries than when we see, as we see to-night, the cherished idea of a noble father called back to life by a loyal and devoted son. (Loud cheers.)

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

VERSES

WRIT BY SIR CHRISTOPHER WHEN A PRISONER AMONG THE TURKS AT MOLDAVIA AND EXPECT-ING DEATH AT THEIR HANDS.

I.

ERE down the blue Carpathian hills
The Sun shall fall again,
Farewell this life and all its ills,
Farewell to Cell and Chaine !

II.

These Prison shades are dark and cold,
But darker far than they
The shadow of a Sorrow old
Is on mine Hearte alway.

III.

For since the day when Warkworth wood
Closed o'er my Steed, and I—
An alien from my Name and Blood—
A Weed cast out to die ;

IV.

When, lurking back, in sunset light
I saw her Turret gleam,
And from its window, far and white,
Her sign of farewell stream ;

V.

Like one who from some desert shore
Does home's green Isles descrie,
And, vainlie longing, gazes o'er,
The waste of Wave and Skie.

VI.

So from the desert my Fate
Gaze I across the past ;
And still upon life's dial-plate
The Shade is backward cast !

VII.

I've wandered wide from shore to shore,
I've knelt at manie a Shrine,
And cowed me to the rocky floor
Where Bethlehem's tapers shine ;

VIII.

And by the Holy Sepulchre
I've pledged my knightlie sword,
To Christ his blessed Church, and her
The Mother of our Lord !

IX.

Oh, vaine the Vow, and vaine the strife !
How vaine do all things seem !
My soul is in the Past, and Life
To-day is but a Dreame.

X.

In vaine the penance strange and long,
And hard for Flesh to bear,
The Prayer, the Fasting, and the Thong,
And Sackcloth Shirte of Haire ;

XI.

The Eyes of Memorie will not sleep,
Its Ears are open still,
And Vigils with the Past they keep Against or with my Will.

XII.

And still the Loves and Hopes of old
Doe evermore uprise ;
I see the flow of Locks of Gold,
The Shine of loving Eyes.

XIII.

Ah me ! upon another's Breast
Those golden Locks recline ;
I see upon another rest
The Glance that once was mine !

XIV.

"Oh faithless Priest ! oh, perjured Knighte !"
I hear the Master crie,
"Shut out the Vision from thy sight,
Let Earth and Nature die.

XV.

"The Church of God is now my Spouse,
And thou the Bridegroom art ;
Then let the burden of my Vows
Keep down thy human Hearte !"

XVI.

In vaine !—This Hearte its grieve must know
Till life itself hath ceased,
And falls beneath the self-same blow
The Lover and the Priest !

XVII.

Oh, pitying Mother ! Souls of Light,
And Saints and Martyrs old,
Praye for a weak and sinful Knight,
A suffering Man uphold.

XVIII.

Then let the Paynim work his will,
Let Death unbind my Chaine,
Ere down yon blue Carpathian hill
The sunset falls again !

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

A RUSSIAN physician, Dr. Bapchinski announces a cure for diphtheria by inoculation of erysipelas.

SAPOLINI, of Milan, claims to have cured 62 cases of deafness of old age. The prescription is simple. It is to mop the membrana tympani with a weak oleaginous solution of phosphorus. Under this application, it is said, the opacity of the membrane is diminished, the circulation increased, and hearing improved.

FOR ill-treating a Persian officer, two Russian military officers—Captain Lohmann and Lieutenant Lewaneffsky—have been courtmartialled to degradation and deportation to Siberia.

A SCHEME has been drawn up for a Siberian railway. The cost is estimated at 250,000,000 roubles and the period of construction is calculated to be ten years. The line will be 4,375 miles long.

THERE is a project for a new military post for the north of the Russian empire. The site will probably be in the Peninsula of the Fishermen. There are roadsteads there which are never frozen; ships could consequently sail thence at any season for either the Arctic Ocean or the Atlantic.

THE newspaper correspondents at the Court of St. Petersburg will henceforth be distinguished by a badge with the name of their respective newspapers attached to their coats. This is intended to keep out doubtful characters who give themselves the airs of Russian and foreign correspondents.

THE Upper House of the Austrian Reichrath has passed a Bill for the regulation of Jewish religious societies. It is being discussed in the Lower. The object of the Bill is to insure the complete independence of the Jewish religious bodies as far as their internal affairs are concerned, and to safeguard the interests of the State in their dealings with other countries. In recommending its adoption by the Lower House, the Minister of Public Worship and Instruction said that the present tendency to make an outcry against the Jews was in no way countenanced by the Government, on the contrary, it strongly disapproved it, and regarded the whole question solely from the standpoint of the law.

HERE is another side of the shield. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says:—

"Germans, Lutherans and generally all friends of religious liberty in Russia are indignant beyond words at the repressive measures which, according to a most trustworthy account, are about to be put in force against the Lutheran Church in the Baltic Provinces. Not content with the suspension of independent pastors and the banishment without trial or hearing of outspoken defenders of the faith and traditions of their fathers, the Government has now resolved to do with the Lutheran Church what it has already done so successfully with the Roman Catholic, the Georgian, the Armenian, the Jewish, and the Mahomedan—transform it into an engine of governmental administration. First of all, the right of presentation to livings—which from time immemorial was, and still is, possessed and exercised by barons and nobles whose forefathers defended and died for the Church—will be now taken over by the Government, and the appointment of rectors, superintendents, incumbents, and generally of every Lutheran clergyman, will rest with the Minister of the Interior. Secondly, the management of all Church property, now confided to the pastors, who have always most creditably acquitted themselves of the charge, will in future be handed over to a committee dependent upon the civil governor of the province. Thirdly, the Theological Faculty of Dorpat will be transported bodily to St. Petersburg, and there metamorphosed into an ecclesiastical academy—a process the nature of which was so thoroughly understood by the late Pope, Pius IX., that when the Roman Catholic Faculty of the University of Vilna was subjected to it, he excommunicated all the ecclesiastical dignitaries who had hand or part in carrying out the scheme. The indignation of the Russian Germans is intense. It is seriously apprehended that it will lead to armed resistance."

PRUSSIAN drums and military instruments are to be introduced into the Turkish army. Germany has made proposals for reorganization of the Turkish army after the German model.

THE University students are causing anxiety in Naples. These hot-headed young fellows, the hope of Italy in the future, are a constant source of trouble to the local Magistrates. Early last month, the University was closed and occupied by carabineers and infantry. The students—the fifth power of the realm—are indignant at this violence against "the sanctity of the Temple of Science," and, four hundred of the most "advanced" have applied for withdrawal of their names from the books of the Naples University, for enlistment in other Universities of the kingdom.

FOR bad treatment of their mother and themselves, two brothers Richard and Davies aged respectively 18 and 16, murdered their father while driving home from Crewe.

THE "London and China Telegraph" recently published the following particulars of a rich silver mine newly brought to light in Japan:—

"South of the city of Fruhera, in Shribeshi territory, at a point where the river divides into two branches, the Inakura and Ishinosawa, and familiarly known by the name of Futatsumata (two branches), is situated the Fruhera mine. It was first discovered on July 10, 1885, by three wood choppers. Ten days afterwards they applied for permission to work the mine. A charter was granted in February of the following year, and on March 2 operations were commenced. Scarcity of capital, however, compelled them to abandon the enterprise when only a depth of 13ft. by 15ft. wide, had been reached. But immediately their charter had expired, an officer of the Hokkaido Mining Company sought and obtained the permission of the discoverers to work the mine, and then renewed charter. Work was recommenced on May 24, 1888, under the superintendence of Mr. Kono, an engineer, and the mine has already proved to be of a most fertile character. Thirteen veins have been struck, and it is expected that more will be found. It is also stated that precious metal lies in the bed of the river. Five pits are now being worked by the Company. One of these the Shachihoki (Grampus) was found to be very rich in silver when only a depth of 30ft. had been reached. When analysed, the best yields were found to contain 1½ per cent. of silver, middle ¼ per cent. and common ½ per cent. silver and ¼ per cent. gold. We cannot expect that the output will continue so abundant, but if experienced engineers were employed it would not be difficult to maintain an average of 5 per cent."

BOMBAY has commenced the segregation of the leper—the present cure for leprosy. Under stretch of authority granted by the Bombay Act VI of 1887 for the better sanitation of the city, itinerant lepers will be arrested and lodged in the Albless Leper Home and Petit Leper Hospital.

THE printer and the publisher of the Bhownaggar Exposure Gazette are being proceeded against in the magistracy—not for the exposures but for failure to register the publication as a periodical.

HAJI Adam Haji Abdool Latiff, accused of forgery of certain bills of exchange amounting to thirteen lakhs, on the Bombay branch of the Bank of Bengal, has been committed to the sessions. He is charged with forging three bills, with using them knowing them to be forged, with using a forged power of attorney and with cheating and causing delivery of property. He declined to make any statement to the Magistrate, resigning himself entirely to his counsel.

JHUNDA, the terror of the Meerut district, is dead. He was killed in an encounter with the Police who had been on watch to secure him. Jhunda and his party were surrounded by the Police under the command of Mr. Hoskyns, the Superintendent. The dacoits refused to surrender and offered fight. They fought bravely. Their ammunition failing, the leader was killed and four followers taken prisoners.

MR. Arthur Crawford has applied to the Secretary of State for India for payment of the law expenses incurred by the ex-civilian in the Crawford Commission. He bases his claim on the fact that the Commission have found the serious charges not proved.

SIR Arthur Collins, Chief Justice of the Madras High Court, ordered a pair of his woollen trousers, valued at Rs. 28, to be burnt. They were left in the butler's room whence they were missing. The Police traced them to one Rangan, who was charged, at the Egmore Magistracy, by the Chief Justice's head coachman William Lewis, with theft of the articles. It transpired in the course of the investigation, that the butler had promised the pair to the accused. The Magistrate, Mr. C. G. Kuppasawmi Iyer, had no hesitation in dismissing the charge. Had the coachman an eye on the unmentionables?

AN outrage on Raja Commander-in-Chief Ram Singh is reported from Cashmere. A man came up to him straight with a petition in hand and, in presence of a guard of soldiers, struck the Raja a blow on the face. The culprit has since been proved to be an idiot. Another lunatic lately attempted the life of Sir Asman Jah, Prime Minister of Hyderabad.

THE Civil and Military Gazette has found a reason for the speedy completion of the frontier defences. "We are assured," it says, "that the fear of a Russian invasion has deterred not a few wealthy natives from investing their savings in Government securities. Some of them think it prudent to divide the investment of their surplus wealth between the Bank and their own secret coffers under the ground." Treasure hordes are a much more antiquated institution than Russophobia.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says:—

"The Police have brought a charge against five members of the Arya Samaj at Lahore for printing, publishing, and circulating a book in Urdu on religious matters alleged to be couched in obscene language. The accused in this case are: Durga Pershad, second master of the Anglo-Vedic College, who translated the work; Jowala Sahai, the author of the book; Lala Jewan Das, who read the proofs; Nathu Ram who printed the book at the Koh-i-Nur Press, and who is now Editor of the Kashmir Gazette, published at Jammu; and Saling Ram, the book-seller. The book contains criticisms on the Vedic commentary by Mahidhar and is against the orthodox religion. The arguments are based on a discussion which took place some time during last year between the members of the New Dispensation and the orthodox Sadhus. The verses in respect of which the charge has been preferred against the accused are extracts from Mahidhar's commentary on the Yajur Veda which was published in Berlin and London by European Sanskrit scholars under the patronage of the Hon'ble East India Company in 1852. The book is also said to have been once introduced into the scheme of University studies in India, and is recognised as a religious work by orthodox Hindus, who also paraded with the Mahidhar's commentary in a religious procession held at Lahore and Amritsar during last year. The first hearing of the case was fixed for the 23rd instant before Fakir Jamal-ud-din, when Mr. Spencer appeared for the accused. The Kotwal produced three witnesses for the prosecution who stated that they could not understand the book, which was written in very "high" language. The Magistrate asked for further witnesses when it was proposed to call four Pundits named Guru Pershad, Bhawani [Bhanu] Dat, Bhagwan Das, and Gopi Nath, who are Presidents, Vice-Presidents, and Secretary of the Orthodox Sabha, to give evidence as to whether the book was obscene or not. The accused argued that the book contained religious criticisms, and therefore the charge under Section 292 I. P. C. could not be applied to them."

We find certain omissions in the list of the accused. Why have not the inkman, the flyboy, the compositor, the proprietor of the printing press, the landlord, the vendors who supplied the paper and the ink both for writing and printing the book, and sundry others who contributed to the production and sale of the book, been sent up by the Police?

It is satisfactory to read that a Bengali—Rohini Kanta Nag—has sailed for Rome to study painting and sculpture. We have native painters of sorts who have learnt the art in India, but no sculptor.

THE second son, Nirmal Chunder, of the late Keshub Chunder Sen has been given an appointment in the Opium Department. The Baboo had been in England for several years, seeing the world at the expense of his princely brother-in-law of Cooch Behar, but had not qualified himself for any of the independent professions.

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce have elected Mr. J. L. Mackay, of Messrs. Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co., their President in place of the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Wilson gone out by efflux of time.

TWO of the Judges of the Bengal High Court go on leave—Mr. Justice Trevelyan from the 20th March, Mr. Justice Beverley from the 11th April, next. Both of them rejoin Court after the Long Vacation.

LAST month, visitors to the Indian Museum numbered in all 31,453, namely, Europeans 667 male and 222 female, and Natives 23,462 male and 7,402 female. The Museum was open 20 days, the daily attendance averaging 1,572.

MR. N. S. Alexander, we believe, retires from the Service. He left Burdwan on Wednesday. The Maharaja's father and others saw him off at the railway. Mr. C. E. Buckland temporarily acts as Commissioner of the Burdwan Division. Mr. C. C. Stevens who, after a tour of about 2 months in the Division, returned to headquarters last Sunday, makes over charge of the Bhagalpore Commission on the 15th. He takes up the Patna Division from Mr. Boxwell. Mr. C. C. Quinn receives charge from him and officiates as Commissioner of the Bhagalpore Division during the absence on deputation of Mr. Beames. Mr. E. V. Westmacott goes on three months' leave from the 11th instant, Mr. A. Forbes acting as Excise Commissioner. Mr. C. W. Bolton, from the Board of Revenue, relieves Mr. Forbes in the 24-Pergunnahs Collectorate and Magistracy. Mr. A. Wace, Collector and Magistrate of Bhagalpore goes on furlough. Pending the arrival of his successor Mr. Waller, he made over charge on Monday to his Deputy Baboo Bepin Behary Mookerjee, and left the station. Whether he leaves for good or not, Mr. Wace has disposed of his household furniture to the best advantage to his good and obliging friend Raja Hurbulub Narain Sing at cost price. There is no occasion to start. It is simply a bargain for the Raja. In so far as the articles were put to Celestial use, they are the better for wear and tear.

THE Commissioner of Police and the Deputy Commissioner, Calcutta, have been given the authority to grant licenses for the possession and transport of dangerous petroleum in quantities not exceeding 40 gallons, and for the possession and transport of other petroleum within the tract of country excluded under the provisions of section 1 of Act II (B. C.) of 1866 from the general police district of Bengal.

FROM the 1st April next, foreign steam-ships having engines of under fifty nominal horse-power are prohibited from carrying passengers from any port within the territories administered by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to any other port in British India. British steam-ships having engines of a like horse-power are not to proceed from any port within the said territories to any other port in British India, or to any port or place on the continent of India, or in the island of Ceylon, unless they have, as their engineers, persons possessing engine-drivers' certificates granted under the Indian Steam-ships Act VII of 1884, or first or second class engineers' certificates granted under that Act, or the English Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 to 1883, or to which the provisions of any such Acts have been made applicable under the Merchant Shipping (Colonial) Act, 1869.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

SO far from the right divine of kings being scared away in this age of enlightenment and progress of the masses, it takes a bolder attitude. At a public banquet, at Berlin, Emperor William is reported to have affirmed that that Right made the welfare of the lower classes his chief care, and that he would heartily welcome all who aided him in his work and would crush all who opposed him. Is the threat intended for those who oppose the Labour Conference?

THE Czar is under special guard for his life. A female Nihilist has threatened him with the fate of Peter the Third and Paul, son of Catherine the Second, and his father Alexander. The threat has been served on all the ministers. Extra guards have been told off for the safety of the Czar.

SIGNOR Crispi has announced to the Italian Chamber that the position of Italy in Africa was unassailable, and that Italy's and England's interests in that quarter were identical.

M. TISZA has resigned the Premiership of Hungary which he held for 12 years. Count Szapary has been appointed in his place.

THE Queensland Royal Mail Steamer Quettah, from Brisbane to London, struck on an unknown rock in Torres' Straits and sank in three minutes. There were on board 282 souls, including 60 Javanese. Of these 136 have been saved. H. M. S. Albatross is still searching the islands. The Quettah was a three-decked iron screw steamer of 3,302 tons gross, built at Dumbarton by Messrs. W. Denny Bros. in 1881.

A GENERAL amnesty has been proclaimed in Spain in celebration of the recovery of the infant King.

THE Egalité advised German socialists to shoot Emperor William. The French Government has ordered the prosecution of that newspaper.

THE success of the Forth Bridge, opened on the 4th instant by the Prince of Wales, has brought down a shower of honors. Mr. Thompson, the Chairman of the Company, and Mr. Fowler, the Engineer, have been made Baronets. Mr. Baker, another engineer, a Commander of St. Michael and St. George, the contractor, Mr. Arnold, being Knighted.

IN speaking to his motion regarding the Cleveland-street scandal, Mr. Labouchere charged Lord Salisbury with privately warning a friend of Lord H. A. Somerset to enable him to avoid, by escape, service of a warrant for his arrest, and asked for a Committee of enquiry. Sir Richard Webster repudiated the charge and explained that though Lord Salisbury had informed Sir Dighton Probyn that a warrant against Lord H. A. Somerset was imminent, Sir Dighton never saw Lord H. A. Somerset afterwards.

Mr. Labouchere gave the Prince of Wales credit and honored and respected him for attempting to secure the fullest publicity to the circumstances attending Lord H. A. Somerset's disappearance. He handed over to Sir Richard Webster the name—since disclosed in the papers to be that of Sir Francis Knollys—of his informant, but Sir Richard declined to look at the paper. Mr. Labouchere was not prepared to accept the explanation tendered on behalf of the Premier and was so far carried away by his anxiety for proper administration of justice that he exclaimed, "I don't believe Lord Salisbury." It was now the Speaker's turn to order Mr. Labouchere to withdraw the unParliamentary language. Mr. Labouchere was beyond himself. He regretted his conscience forbade him crediting Lord Salisbury's statement. The Speaker then proceeded to enforce his order. He named Labouchere and then suspended him for a week. To further discredit Labouchere, Government insisted on a division on his motion, which was rejected by 206 against 66 votes. Mr. Gladstone took up Mr. Labouchere's cause and moved that if a member prefers a charge against one of the Ministry which is denied on behalf of the latter, the said member is not to be restrained from refusing to accept the denial and persisting in the charge because the Minister is a member of the House of Lords. In the Upper House, the Premier repudiated his repudiating Attorney-General. Lord Salisbury stated that he was unable to remember the precise words he had used in his interview with Sir Dighton Probyn but was sure he said nothing regarding the imminence of the issue of the warrant. Here is a pretty kettle of fish. If too many cooks spoil the broth, too many witnesses confuse and confound the truth.

THE Indian Councils Bill has been read a second time. The Past Viceroys Lords Northbrook and Ripon and the Past Secretary of State for India Lord Kimberley cordially accepted the Bill, but regretted the absence of some form of the elective principle. Lord Northbrook expressed himself for some kind of election in the Provincial Councils, but could not agree to a scheme for a Parliamentary session of the Governor-General's Council. He hoped, however, that Government would afford facilities for enabling loyal and educated Natives to enter the Provincial Councils and that the several Presidencies will be represented in the Supreme Council by at least one Member from each Presidency. Lord Granville pressed for the reforms advised by Lord Dufferin. The Government, he said, incurred a great responsibility by ignoring the late Governor-General's recommendations for election. Lord Cross explained that the Bill afforded enough opportunities for able Natives to assist in the government of their country. It was preposterous for outside bodies to be allowed to select the members. It was open to the Viceroy and the Provincial Governors to choose their advisers in consultation with Universities, Chambers of Commerce and other political bodies. Lord Salisbury did not see why so much was made of election in this connection. He thought it was dangerous to open the small channel which has a tendency to widen, and when once opened could not be closed. The Bill is safe in the Upper Chamber. The real fight will take place in the Commons.

ONE of the Indian Oracles in England has fallen. Sir^c Louis Mallet, long connected with the Home Government of India, is reported to be dead. He was a keraniraj—the Prince of Clerks. After an obscure noviciate in some one or more departments, he emerged to name at the Board of Trade, where he acted as Private Secretary to the President. In this capacity it devolved on him to draw up a tariff under Mr. Cobden's Commercial Treaty with France. His success in this work won for him no little distinction. He was rewarded with a knighthood and the honourable sinecure of a seat on the India Council. He afterwards became the unparliamentary head of the India Office as Permanent Under-Secretary. In 1881, he, in conjunction with the present Governor of Bombay, ably represented the Government of India at the International Monetary Conference held at Paris. After an honourable service of many years, he retired in 1883.

Sir Louis Mallet belonged to the small but potent clerkocracy of which, in former times, Laurie and Peter Auber and, latterly, James Cosmo Melville and the Mills were the most distinguished members. More humble than the others, he recognised the gravity of dogmatizing on the complexities of a distant land. The elder Mill indeed claimed his never being in India for an advantage as an authority on the subject. Mallet, while in the Indian Secretariat in London, thought fit to journey to India to see how it was like.

He was an able man strong in currency and statistics. He often corresponded on these and off Indian affairs generally with the late Mr. Robert Knight, who esteemed him.

PERHAPS, no name in the English world of letters of the day is so widely and wellknown as George Augustus Sala. A Prince of the Press, in all its different departments of reporting, special correspondence, leader-writing, or feuilleton producing, or paragraphing—a veteran in prose fiction, one of the last two stragglers to our fortune left behind of the noble band of the Dickenses and Thackerays—he has for half a century contributed to inform, improve, and inspire the minds of his countrymen and the world in general. Such a being is worthy of every felicity, and it is with sincere rejoicing that we hail his marriage. If this is his first prenticeship at Hymen's mart, it was too long deferred. But better late than never. According to our Hindu notions, marriage is the most important step in life—a necessary purification, a regeneration. The choicest gifts are unacceptable to the gods from the hands of the unfortunate condemned to a life of single misery. Marriage is a sovereign cure for cynicism. Literature itself receives a specific colouring from the great fact of human life—marriage or no-marriage. There is no more efficient antidote to the tendency to the blasé in modern writing than a good wife and children. For by marriage we here mean that happy union which we hope and pray has fallen to Mr. Sala's lot. A couple of years back, he travelled round the world, and, on his way back from Australia, came to this country. Unfortunately, he fell into the hands of the official wise men of the East, who sent him off to the bogs of Barrackpore, out of humanity's reach, where his genial, generous spirit pined, and he fell ill and was hastily packed out of the country.

IT is curious to remark how the great masters of literature fail in the regular profession of journalism. Thackeray who turned the brush into a pen, was versatile enough; he is even understood to have achieved the summum bonum of literary aspirants, namely, inditing a leader in the Times; but, in reality, he was never attracted to the service. Dickens, scion of a journalistic house, himself the first editor of the great Liberal organ, (the Daily News), is a conspicuous and confessed failure. Not so Sala, his original disciple, who in this, as in his original pursuit, resembles rather his rival (Thackeray.) His versatility indeed has been the enemy of his permanent fame. His appearance in literature was an event. It augured the continuity of the elder race. But, instead of sticking to elaborate works, he was more and more seduced to the paths of journalism. Herein his success has been prodigious. He and Sir Edwin Arnold together have been the making of the enfant terrible of the British Press—the Daily Telegraph. But his shoulders were broad enough for many burdens. Accordingly, while he was, in different capacities, supporting those marvellous men of business, the Lawsons, in their determination to make the Daily Telegraph a success and break the monopoly and preponderance of the Times, giving to the new journal that freshness, life and colour so scorned of the intellectual aristocracy, which carried the heart of the generation by assault, without altogether neglecting the claims of formal literature, he had taken under his protection the Illustrated

London News, suffering as it did from the competition of newer ventures. In the days of its glory, this was a double-barrelled concern, depending alike on art and letters. With the lamented death of the spirited founder, it suffered in both departments, until the column or two of gossip on things in general under the head of Echoes of the Week signed "G. A. S." latterly gave the paper a peculiar interest in the eyes of English-reading folks throughout the globe. These "echoes" are necessarily of the nature of small talk, but it is no small privilege to approach genius in dishabille and catch its unpremeditated wisdom and eloquence. Of late, the echoing columns have lost their charm, often returning an uncertain sound. At any rate, it is not the same echo. G. A. S. having left them, the conductors now try to fill the void with another noted wizard. Mr. James Payn is a clever writer and would be an acquisition to any journal if he took sufficient pains. But there's the rub. Under any circumstances, it is no discredit to Mr. Payn that he could not be a substitute for the charming veteran. The stoppage of the "G. A. S." papers in the Illustrated has been a loss to the whole English-reading public. The announcement of their revival will doubtless be hailed by thousands. They will be continued, with the venue changed. India will have the honour of the Revival, the Bombay Gazette being the paper through which Mr. Sala will address the world. We hope our contemporary's enterprise will be adequately rewarded. We trust the reading classes in India, Europeans and natives, will manifest an intelligent curiosity and a becoming appreciation.

We have a sneaking partiality for old G. A. S. He was one of our early favorites. He also did us a good turn when this paper was started in 1882. A word in George Augustus Sala's Week is no joke. Dickens was offered £1,000 if he introduced some article of trade into one of his serials. There are numerous speculators at this moment who would pay as much or more to any first class literary man for the same service. We have reason, therefore, to be specially grateful to Mr. Sala for his kindness in speaking in the Illustrated London News of the editor of this journal as an "esteemed correspondent" and kindly announcing Reis and Rayyet—a name which reminded him of something good to eat.

MUCH as Sheridan was supposed to have exhausted the varieties of puffing, modern ingenuity has still left some crumbs. The Anglo-Indian jester with the queer name of Rudyard Kipling has just, in the columns of the Civil and Military Gazette, hit upon an original, if gross, method of advertising his own jest-books and stories. He sends all the way from Europe a sketch headed "On Exhibition," which is published with the significant label "All Rights Reserved," describing an apocryphal tea party at which he was on exhibition as a veritable Bengal Tiger. The sole prodigy of the hour, he was the cynosure of neighbouring eyes—the favorite of all. He was overwhelmed with attentions as the magnificent genius from the East whose name was on every lip in Europe, his works quoted and he there and then cross-examined on his characters. We say "apocryphal party," or else the writer would be a greater savage than Anglo-Indians are taken to be in England to publish such a damaging photograph of an hospitable scene to which he was invited. Surely, he would not dare in propria persona to call even a gentleman of the press—the Editor of the Concertina—"a burly ruffian with a beard." Besides, absurd as, in these regards, British manners may be, the dear old island has not yet been definitely made over to the administration of the Moon. Mr. Kipling is a satirist, and, in order to justify his satire, he draws with a free hand. He is a downright caricaturist. The only thing real in the matter is the advertising of the writer himself as an author—the puff impudent as we may characterise this outrageous species of the puff indirect. There is no pretence of delicacy in the article, which appears in the name of the writer.

Mr. Kipling is a clever writer. He brings out neatly the contrast between teas at Home and Indian teas. His main theme is, however, a trifling and a hackneyed one. What hope is there for a writer coming on the same ground after the Thackerays and Smiths and Hooks and Jerrolds? The furor of admiration of society for ephemeral heroes—the idols of the hour—once a phenomenon of much interest, after having employed the pens of literary men, and inspired the tongue of many a bel esprit who has set whole tables in roars of laughter, has at length descended to the bowels of the earth as it were as a spent joke.

So long ago as 1837, July 19, on the eve of the Princess Victoria stepping into the Throne as Queen, the late Earl of Beaconsfield, then plain Benjamin Disraeli, not yet privileged to write the charming letters M. P. after his name, in his letter to his sister, anticipated the main drift of all Mr. Kipling's elaborate machinery and endless gyrations to show off the absurdity of Lionising. The passage is as follows:—

"There was an agreeable party at Madame Montalembert's; but whether la Comtesse had taken an extra glass of champagne, or what might be the cause, she lionised me so dreadfully that I was actually forced to run for my life. She even produced 'Venetia' and was going to read a passage out loud, when I seized my hat and rushed downstairs, leaving the graceful society of Lady Egerton, much to my vexation."

How endless is the caprice of nomenclature! There is a municipal township in the Western Presidency called Kasandera or Kasandara. Why not spell it at once Cassandra and make an end of it? Not a very auspicious sound to be sure, but, such as it is, the place has not been able to escape the effect thereof! The town of Cassandra has been laid low. It has been disfranchised—its municipality dissolved by authority. On the principle of charity beginning at home, the prophecy of this Indian Cassandra has come true at home.

If Cassandra is deemed farfetched, still there is no escape. The toils of nomenclology still bind the ill-fated locality. If not Cassandra, it is Cassander and no mistake. And that is a change from the frying pan to the fire. We are reminded of the cruel warrior and base spoliator of the liberties of Athens. We refer to Cassander, the son of Antipater, who abolished representative government and institutions and put one man, Demetrius, in sole authority. There is surely no comfort in either branch of the nominal alternative. Cassandra or Cassander, it is a bad business for the poor Indian Municipality.

An awful name! prophetic of her end.

THIS sort of dissolution of municipalities is becoming far too common on that side. Complaints against municipalities are by no means infrequent in the whole empire: they are indeed the order of the day throughout the world. But nowhere else do these local misunderstandings, disagreements and even open ruptures are pushed to the bitter end—to the very loss of the franchise. We cannot speak to Madras, but our Bengal townships are not better than those of the Western Presidency, yet they just manage to preserve themselves. In Bombay, the municipalities, one after another, are shutting up shop, under compulsion. Is human nature anywise different on the Arabian Sea coast or in the neighbourhood of the Western Ghats? Or, is it the difference of official nature? That is scarcely likely. Bureaucracy is perhaps a pinch more bureaucratic in Bengal than in Bombay.

BE that as it may, the fiat has gone forth, and the municipality of Parantjit has been annexed and the people disfranchised.

WHATEVER may be the imperfections of the Congress, it is entitled to fairplay. They are simply unjust who sneer at it as a Baboo affair. Nothing could be more misleading. Our Bengalis are a drop in the ocean. Madras is the backbone of the movement—"blessings on her and eternal praise!" We wish our people of the North had half the earnestness of our brethren of the South, and were capable of their sacrifice.

On the 15th February, Madras held a great meeting of thanksgiving to her delegates returned from Congress and of other cognate purposes. The gathering was so large that the meeting was held in the open air. The chair was taken by the veteran P. Soonesoondrum Chettiar, who delivered one of his excellent addresses. His speech was interesting for its personal touches—its very egotism if you will. Such references become only such lips, and their exclusion is niggardly and indicative of faint-heartedness. They are worth ten times their quantity of impersonal disquisition. What could be more eloquent in the way of argument than the single statement that "despite my physical deterioration I attended the fifth National Congress on an hour's notice with my respected friend, G. Mahedava Chetty, as a matter of stern duty?"

At the very outset, he contributed the following interesting reminiscence of the early history of our Native Indian politics:—

"You put me in mind of my vigorous youth, which enjoyed the company of that great tribune of the people, whose name is enshrined in the hearts of every one who knew him or heard of him. I mean the noble Gajulu Lukshmanarasu Chettyar, of undying fame. My ideas were formed and my judgment was matured in his day. What seemed but a dream in those times is near fulfilment now. I congratulate myself that I live to see this approaching accomplishment of my cherished ideas, in the same spirit in which, two years back, my friend Rajah Sir T. Madhava Row congratulated himself on his being so far well in health, as to stand before the assembled delegates in Madras, and to witness in that gathering and its efforts, the proudest results of the British rule. I am, as you see, more than three score years old. But I have, as you well know, mixed with you all freely, and have been observant of the work and aims of many of you. I should be false to myself and to my powers of observation, if I did not see in the Congress, its leaders, and its work, the fruition of the aims and efforts of which my friend, the late Lukshminarasu Chettyar, may well be taken as the originator and the embodiment. He and his co-workers were the germ. The National Congress, with your strength behind it, is the sturdy growth from that germ. Standing on the border-land of two generations, I am able to take a retrospect into the past, and have an outlook into the future on the progress made in this generation. Doing this, I am bound to declare that while it was only permitted to the workers of my youth to lay the foundation whereon the great Proclamation of the British Queen was built, the Congress is the logical sequence following from those materials. More hopefully and more emphatically, do I now declare, after the fifth National Congress, that the Congress is the glory of British Rule in this land of historic fame—words that were uttered at the commencement of the third Congress."

Here, in this city, our boys, old and young, have returned from the field and quietly merged themselves in the community.

ON Wednesday evening, the wedding of the second son of Kassim Ariff, the well known Surat merchant of our town and the proprietor of the only silk manufactory in the Bengal Presidency, was celebrated with the daughter of Nawab Syud Ameer Hassan Khan of Bhikuapahari of Patna. The Nawabs of Bhikuapahari are political pensioners. They are the descendants of the first Mahomedan Family in the Province of Behar, from the Mahomedan Period. They are closely connected with the Oudh, the Nizamut and the Chitpore Families.

From our town, Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur proceeded to Patna on Tuesday evening, and the Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hosain on Wednesday evening to join in the festivities which continued for several days.

Mr. Justice John Freeman Norris is under trial—for having condemned Private Thomas O'Hara to death. At the last Criminal Sessions, Thomas O'Hara and William Bellew were tried by Mr. Justice Norris for murder of the toddy seller Sheikh Saleem of Dum Dum. Both pleaded not guilty. After the close of the reply for the prosecution, Bellew was, under direction of the Judge, found not guilty by the Jury, but O'Hara was, after the charge of the Judge to the Jury, found guilty by them and capitally sentenced by the Judge. The Advocate-General found that there was misdirection by the Judge to the Jury, and recorded a certificate under Sec. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865 for consideration by the High Court of the points of law indicated. A Full Bench was appointed for the purpose, from which the Native Judges of the Court were excluded. We suppose they were disqualified by their nationality to be peers either of the prisoner or the condemning Judge. The Chief Justice himself with Messrs. Justices Prinsep, Pigot, Macpherson and Norris, formed the Bench. The suspicion of bias in the black Judges was held sufficient to disable them from the exercise of their functions, but the inevitable bias, not to say the natural fury, of the White Judge in extremis was nothing. So Mr. Justice Norris tried himself with the help of his brother Judges. The Bench heard the case for 3 days and has reserved its decision. Mr. Woodroffe argued the case on behalf of O'Hara. Mr. Justice Norris pleaded his own cause from the Bench by questions, explanations and, last not least, admissions. The Standing Counsel represented and replied for the Crown.

CALCUTTA has been shocked by the almost simultaneous deaths of two young members of the Upper Ten of native society. Raja Poorna Chunder Singh of Paikpara, the head of the illustrious House of Lala Baboo, was aged 38. Kumar Promod Kumar Tagore, the eldest son of Raja Sir Sourendra Mohun Tagore, was barely 25. The latter is a peculiarly painful case. He was an accomplished young gentleman of amiable manners who will be mourned by all who knew him. The father bears the loss heroically.

THE rules directed against the saltpetre industry in municipal Calcutta have been extended to the area included in a radius of two miles from the limits of the municipality. It was a matter of course, the rules having been already enforced beyond the law in this new area, this was the only way of justifying the illegality.

A NATIVE correspondent writes :—

"Mr. H. Lee is a Philo-native. As a private individual, he mixes in the company of native gentlemen, playing with them at cricket and lawn-tennis as freely as if he were one of their number. He takes their leaders into his confidence, and thus keeps himself well-informed of local wants which he removes with promptitude. With a keen discrimination of character, he has a good word for every honest worker in his district. And yet a native newspaper daily 'crams and blasphemes' our benefactor."

M. FOUGUE, the mineralogist, has, with a mixture of silicate of copper and of lime, produced the brilliant crystalline "azure" of Pompeii, long the wonder of artists and scientific men. The new "azzurrino" is said to be perfectly unchangeable and identical with the Alexandrian blue known to the Ptolemies and imported into Italy in the first years of the Christian era. The lost arts are one by one being recovered.

THE HOWRAH MUNICIPALITY.

DIFFICULTIES OF MUNICIPAL ADMINISTRATION.

Dr. Gregg has been found tripping. He reported to Government, among other things relating to the Howrah municipality, against its drainage. The drainage of Howrah was roundly condemned and the Commissioners came in for some rather sharp reproof. It would now seem, however, that Dr. Gregg's view is not supported by professional opinion. Having taken some levels, he came to the conclusion that the slope of the country was westwards from the river, while he found the existing drains of Howrah were designed upon a contrary assumption, Dr. Gregg naturally became impatient, and was somewhat severe in his condemnation of the drainage system which all along had, in his opinion, been based upon an error. It would now appear, however, from the Government Resolution on Dr. Gregg's Report, that the error is his, rather than the municipality's.

This is, indeed, a sad contresens. But it would not have been in vain if it taught us the need of caution and forbearance in criticising matters municipal. Nothing is more common than these criticisms. Few have any idea of the difficulties besetting the path of a municipal reformer. We must do the Sanitary Commissioner the justice to say that he has given his earnest attention to the subject of drainage in general, and if his view in the present instance is found to be wrong, it only suggests the inherent difficulties of the question. We only regret the strong remarks into which he allowed himself to be betrayed.

The drainage of Howrah was condemned by Dr. Gregg as constructed upon an altogether erroneous system. The slope of the ground in his opinion is westwards from the river, while the drainage is made to run in an opposite direction into the Holloway's Pills.—Nervous Irritability.—No part of the human machine requires more constant supervision than the nervous system—for upon it our health—and even life—depends. These Pills strengthen the nerves, and are the safest general purifiers of the blood. Nausea, headache, giddiness, numbness, and mental apathy yield to them. They dispatch in a summary manner those distressing dyspeptic symptoms, stomachic pains, fulness at the pit of the stomach, abdominal distension, and regulate alike capricious appetites and confined bowels—the commonly accompanying signs of defective or diminished nerve tone. Holloway's Pills are particularly recommended to persons of studious and sedentary habits, who gradually fall into a nervous and irritable state, unless some such restorative be occasionally taken.

Hooghly, and accordingly he recommends that it should be diverted westwards, instead of being allowed, as at present, to flow into the river. When we read this in Dr. Gregg's report, some time ago, we had our misgivings as to whether such a gross mistake about the level of an old town like Howrah could be possible, or, being committed, persisted in so long. And we now find that we were not wrong. In the Government resolution are quoted professional opinions which are at total variance with Dr. Gregg's opinion. The Lieutenant-Governor, however, endeavours to reconcile the difference in his usual kindly way. He says :—

"Dr. Gregg is aware of this report, but does not accept the conclusion arrived at. It appears to the Lieutenant-Governor that Dr. Gregg's scheme is perhaps not necessarily at variance with Mr. Johnson's opinion, and that his proposals are to drain the town in a different direction from that which was originally understood. Whether this is so or not, it is certain that the Sanitary Commissioner's proposals merit further consideration, and with this object his report will now be transmitted to the Sanitary Board in order that a further professional enquiry may be made. The question is one of such great importance to the health of Howrah and of the port of Calcutta that no steps must be left untaken to come to a final decision on it."

Municipal administration in Howrah has, however, in other respects, not apparently been much of a success. The Sanitary Commissioner calls it "the dirtiest, most backward and badly managed" of large municipalities. And this is a municipality, which, with casual interruptions, has always been under official management. Our present object is not, however, so much to enquire where the fault lies as to show how faults are hard getting rid of in the best circumstances. It makes little difference whether the administration is official or non-official. For defects are to be met with everywhere, more or less. No town will bear strict investigation, and this without applying an ideal standard. In the case of Howrah, Dr. Gregg attributes the mismanagement to the Commissioners who are mostly persons of scant leisure, but the opinion of the Government points to the officials of the town as the more responsible of the two. The blame may be fairly apportioned between them in equal moieties, but a more pertinent question suggested by the case remains. If such a disgraceful state of things may be possible in a place having such manifest advantages of what is fashionably called the Surrey side of the metropolis, must not the task of municipal administration be in itself a peculiarly hard one? It may be all very well to insist upon a high standard of efficiency in the conservancy and other arrangements of our municipalities. In the growing sense of comfort and civilized tastes in the people, nothing could be more desirable than that such a standard were even approximately reached. But manifestly there are numerous difficulties of detail, and the more the subject is studied in its practical aspects, the more one is confronted by these inherent difficulties.

These difficulties will easily occur to those who have attended to the subject. They are of more than one kind. At the present moment, there is some tumult in Calcutta in connection with the question of the best method for the collection of small rates from occupiers of huts, and this is suggestive of the larger question as to the best method of collecting arrears of municipal dues. There is now a rigorous system followed of collecting them by distress warrants. This is indeed a hard system, and it is no wonder that the self-governing Committees in the country are, as a fact, chary of having recourse to it. The effect of their amiable forbearance to exercise the powers vested in them by law is, however, simply disastrous upon their funds. They must command adequate resources for municipal expenditure, and with an impoverished exchequer the work of town improvement can make little progress, if at all. There are other aspects of the question, and some of these may be seen in the Government Resolution on Dr. Gregg's drainage report on the Howrah Municipality. The question of drainage is everywhere a difficult one, and the progress made so far has been very small. Let us hope the new Sanitary Board, with the assistance of its Engineer member, will at last succeed in doing something worthy of itself.

NOTES FROM THE NOTE-BOOK OF A BOOKWORM.

March, 1862.—In my researches in the Wellington Square Dutt Family Library to-day, I lighted upon a book with the following title page:—"The Ladies' Monitor, being a series of letters first published in Bengal on the subject of Female Apparel, tending to favor a regulated adoption of Indian Costume; and a rejection of superfluous vesture, by the Ladies of this Country; with incidental remarks on Hindoo beauty, whalebone stays, iron busks, Indian Corsets, man-milliners, idle bachelors, hair-powder, side saddles, waiting-maids, and footmen. By the author of A Vindication of the Hindoos."

'From vulgar bounds, with brave disorder dart
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art.'

London: Printed for the author, and sold by———well, 344, near Catherine Street, Strand, Printed by De—ns & Co. Hart-Street, Covent Garden. 1809." The book is in most parts worm-eaten, and hence in copying the title page I have indicated by—a dash where I have failed to make out. The motto, from the few words which were left of it, I have supplied from memory. Though published in London, the book is one of the early contributions to English Literature in and by India. It presents too a picture of society and manners not only in India but also in England more than half a century ago. Under the head of "To the Reader" the author says that most of the letters contained in his book were published more than eight years ago in one of the Calcutta weekly papers. They were (in Calcutta) subsequently collected and given over to the Printer with a considerable Introduction called "Preface," &c. The Printer dying, the MS. was returned to the author who now launches his work in England. The author is an enthusiastic admirer of Indian beauty, Indian costume, Indian manners, Indian morals, and Indian institutions, and earnestly calls upon his countrymen and countrywomen to imitate them. In 1809, it appears that a short-waisted garment had just come into fashion. The author contends that it is in imitation of the Indian Peshwaz. He at the outset declares that had he despotic power he would make Englishwomen dress like the Hindoo females (of Bengal) with their single robe covering from head to foot. He denies, what is asserted, that Hindoo beauties are rather small, and explains any seeming smallness of the Hindoo beside the European beauty by the fact that the latter wears shoes and bonnet, and is literally a mass of clothes. He condemns in the severest terms the dress of English ladies, says it is unnatural, inconvenient, ugly, positively injurious to health and painful; condemns stays with whale-bones, iron busk, &c.; instances a lady who having got a fall was severely wounded by her busk, another who wore upwards of two hundred square inches of whalebone; says the steel busks are generally three inches in breadth each and that every lady used three of them; quotes the Genuine Memoirs of Asiaticus who came to India in 1783 in support of his opinion of Indian women; says even the latter writer's love for Miss Charlotte Rivers could not prevent him from ranking Indian beauties above English, &c. The author ably advocates polygamy, advises ladies to discontinue side saddle, proposes a tax on bachelors, advocates early marriages. The book exhibits how much more than at present language was lax—the author and even his female antagonists using language which would be highly indecent and vulgar now. It appears from the book that even at that age there were punkahs in India. I also glean that Mahomed Ali Khan, Nawab of the Carnatic, had born to him by the ladies of his seraglio seven hundred and fifty eight children, that three ladies (English) in Bengal used to ride like men, and that they did the same in England. There is a nice anecdote. Hussien Reza Khan, late minister at Lucknow, called at a friend of the author's where he was present. While talking, the lady of the house appeared muffled to the chin in a large cravat a la mode. The Mahomedan fancied she had caught cold, and expressed his sorrow at the circumstance when he was told it was simply a new fashion.

NATIVE OFFICERS AND THE LEAVE CODE.

THE native officers generally do not understand the proper value of leave, nor do they know how to utilise it. They are rather indifferent to this great privilege upon which depends a great deal of their health and future prosperity. Their unpardonable apathy towards such an important privilege has made the authorities also rather indifferent to it, and the consequence is that applications for leave do not receive sufficient consideration and attention. The practical effect of the wholesome Leave Code is that officers of this class are not emboldened to apply for leave when they require it most. Those with any experience in the matter must admit that native officers as a rule do not get leave with that facility, promptness and ease with which Civilians and European officers generally are allowed to avail themselves of it. They wonder at the distinction. They see that the other classes get leave for the asking, while their suit is summarily and arbitrarily rejected, or their superior officer finds excuses not to recommend it. Cases have occurred of applications backed by medical certificates being rejected and the applicants obliged to perform their heavy duties for 2 or 3 weeks with fever on and under other disabilities for which a European would not stay 24 hours in his station. Not unoften the leave is sanctioned after the occasion for it is gone, and then cancelled wholly or partially. The reason for the refusal is invariably want of officers coupled with the diplomatic expression "The exigencies of the public service." There is occasionally an order from the Commissioner or other supervising authority to the District head not to send up any application for leave.

But there are officers and officers. There are those who find it beneficial to enjoy the privilege. They must either suffer for the omission of others, or resort to subterfuges to gain their end and health.

They make themselves sick for the Doctor's certificate not for sick but privilege leave. Their various plans of obtaining leave cannot but leave an unhealthy influence over the moral tone of the service.

The application for leave must in the first place be sent up by the District Officer, then recommended by the Commissioner and afterwards sanctioned by Government. After the application has passed through the first stage, the applicant is obliged to see the Personal Assistant Sahib of the Commissioner or the Commissioner himself to see that his application is forwarded and not shelved. Then he must write to his friends in Calcutta to watch its further progress through the Accountant-General's Office to save its being sent back by the clerks of that office, on some technical plea. After it has braved through the 3rd stage, the Chief Secretary is interviewed, either by the officer himself if he can call upon him, or by some influential gentleman on his behalf. I don't mean to insinuate that such procedure has to be followed in each and every case. The Civilian or the European is not troubled with these cares and anxieties. In urgent cases, even before the leave is Gazetted, he is relieved at once, or the matter is settled D. O. and the leave Gazetted after a long time.

Once a Native officer applied for leave on the ground of ill-health. He was advised by the higher authority of the division to get a bed and sleep in office for sometime and then do the work. This was indeed very kind of that superior officer but the applying officer could not see his way to benefit by this practical and kind suggestion.

An officer is overworked or his health fails him. He requires complete rest. Although entitled to privilege leave, he must apply with a medical certificate. But such certificates are not in ordinary cases easily available. If you don't know the Civil Surgeon or he is a queer sort of man, then you must approach him through some of his pet Assistants. But I think when an officer absolutely requires leave and there are not very strong grounds to refuse it, he ought to get it quickly without adopting any improper means. An experienced person with sufficient common sense can always judge when one requires leave to recruit his health.

If native officers want to enjoy good health and the pleasant things of the world and do their duties properly and not in a half-dead condition, they ought to value their great privilege of leave and avail themselves of it when they have won it. They should not always keep it in deposit for sraddh ceremony of their deceased relations or such other occasions. If they shew a desire to value and appreciate the very liberal and just leave rules which the wise Government has provided for them, it would, I am sure, remove the obstacles which now lie in the way.

These officers ought to be the judge of their own powers and functions, and accordingly regulate their leave. I am inclined to think that the difficulties they experience are of their own making in some measure.

The great object of these liberal rules is that those for whom they are intended should fully benefit by them. It is farthest from their intentions that a man would be in ill health for years and drag himself to office in search of money at the expense of health and die a miserable death in harness.

A LOVER OF HOLIDAYS.

EDUCATION OF MAHOMEDAN LADIES.

At one time the Mahomedans were justly proud of their female education and there were very eminent female scholars and poetesses among them, as a reference to Tazkeratul Khawatin will shew. Even in the present backward state of our general education there are still poetesses and female scholars among us of whom we may well be proud, but alas! their number is small, and within a short time we will lose them in the natural course of the world, and it is not expected that any one of the present generation will be able to take their places. It is true that our general education is comparatively backward and it may be argued that the education of the sterner sex must precede that of the fairer. That remark may be applicable to ignorant, illiterate or other classes who have no taste or aptitude for knowledge. We have, indeed, still education of a kind in its different stages among the ladies of the respectable classes, but if we do not take care of what we already possess and try to overcome the difficulties caused by circumstances for which we can not be blamed much, we shall have to repent afterwards. The present state of female education in Bengal and Behar among the respectable and middle classes of the Mahomedans, is, I believe, generally the same as in the other Provinces of India. I mean, therefore, to confine my remarks to Bengal and Behar of which provinces I can speak from personal knowledge.

Our ladies generally read the holy Koran and sometimes also its Urdu translation and other Urdu books on religious subjects, not unoften taking up in addition books on social topics and other interesting Urdu publications especially selected.

There are very few who, in addition to the above, read Persian, write or correspond in Urdu and read Urdu newspapers.

There is another class who can read a little Bengalee and Hindi and compose in those languages. This class can be found only in the interior and not in large or old towns.

The great difficulty in the way of our female education is the absence of teachers. At the present day the mother, the grandmother or other elderly female relation teaches the girls and young ladies of a family. In some instances, old, trustworthy and respectable Moulvis are employed to teach very young girls and in very few cases governesses (Ustans) are told off. Now and then the male relations have to do that duty.

Tuition by female and male relations is very prevalent. I think in 5 or 10 cases only out of 100, governesses and Moulvis are employed. In fact, governesses are not easily procurable, and it is very difficult to find suitable Moulvis. Again there are families who would on no account place their girls of 8 or 9 under male tuition. In families where there is no female relation to act the teacher and male members can not find leisure or possess a desire to under take it, education is necessarily neglected. Every respectable and well-informed Mahomedan feels the great want of teachers and governesses. Anglicized Mahomedans sometimes get over the difficulty by introducing European or missionary ladies to their Zenana. Its general effect, as far as it has been seen, is to teach the respectable Mahomedan lady to affect the manners, conduct and habits of the Eurasian lady or of the Bengali who has "shaken off the trammels of superstition." Such a wife may be agreeable to the husband, but she is no gain to the community. For more than one reason, it is not only objectionable but often most dangerous to introduce this class of teachers into our Zenana. We should never forget the Patna case.

There is no doubt that English education has directed the attention of our wise and thoughtful men towards the manifold blessings and the urgent necessity of female education, and this difficult problem of education is now engaging our attention, as it is more frequently discussed than it used to be some 20 years back. I hear that among Bengalis education in the girl is fast becoming a condition of marriage, and it is no easy task to persuade a young man to marry a girl with no education. If not to that extent, signs of such a desire are clearly visible among our own community, specially among those who have received the benefits of English education. This desire is quite natural and laudable, and the Mahomedan parents ought to take a particular note of it. Enquiries are now quietly made by the would be bridegroom and mild hints are given to his guardians to select an educated bride. I am sure that the time is not far distant when this would be one of the primary conditions of marriage. It is fortunate that in most cases we have some sort of education, and in all cases as far as other accomplishments besides reading and writing are concerned our ladies take the first rank in the best Indian female society.

No one who knows the state of our community will deny that there is a dearth of female teachers and governesses in Bengal and Behar, and that in consequence female education suffers not a little. We require a set of respectable, competent, and well-mannered female teachers. The question, however, is Where can we find them? The N.-W. P. can supply a limited number but they are not generally properly qualified. The want is increasing almost daily and the supply is not forthcoming. Under such circumstances, unless we can fix upon some cheap and convenient plan to educate our girls, we will have to rue and suffer.

I have considered the question for a long time and now venture to suggest the following plan for consideration of the leaders and educationists of our community. I would respectfully ask them, bearing in mind the interests at stake, to lay aside all party feeling and selfish considerations which have thrown back the advancement of our coreligionists by quarter of a century.

Let then there be established a female Normal school in Calcutta or some suitable provincial town. To begin with, let there be three classes with a three years' course. Poor but respectable Mahomedan girls and young ladies, including young widows (of whom there are many) in every old city may be persuaded to enter this school. We must find handsome scholarships and a home for them and give every other possible encouragement. After completing their education in the institution where, besides reading and writing, they would learn needle work, &c., they may be engaged, on a reasonable pay, by us and will thus get a sufficient and respectable means of subsistence and at the same time supply our great want. One lady teacher may be employed by two or three families when one cannot pay her sufficiently. This is only a skeleton proposal and, if worked out with care, energy and unity, is likely to succeed. As regards money, I don't believe there will be any difficulty, if the plan is properly and systematically worked out. I do not deny that there are obstacles in the way, but at the same time it must be remembered that no success has ever been achieved without an effort. In my opinion, this is the only practical way of solving this troublesome problem under the present and peculiar circumstances of our community and the purdah system. No respectable Mahomedan can allow his daughters and female relations to go out of his house in search of education, however valuable it may be. This is not the place to discuss the propriety or otherwise of such a course, but it is a fact, and is fully consistent with their notions of respectability and propriety as with their practical experience of the world.

There is a class of men who, without caring to enquire into the merits of the question, are ever ready to pass an opinion on this complicated subject and are satisfied when they find themselves in print. Such men mislead the public and are far off the real issues. Such empty talk cannot remedy the evil. We have had enough talk and now is the time for action.

A MAHOMEDAN.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION.

I beg to enclose herein for your perusal two Question Papers set at the Entrance Examination which is still going on. One of these contains passages in Bengali and the other in Hindi, both intended for translation into the English language. I wonder from what source these literary dainties could have emanated—more specially the Bengali pieces! Could Missionary Bengali of our old days go further? If such stuff be imitated by our young undergraduates, as the specimens of composition in their own vernacular, there can be but little hope for our country, at least in the direction of linguistic excellence. The orthography, idiom, sense and style of the passages, it will be observed, are all remarkable. What can our new Vice-Chancellor now bring forward in defence of his Examiners? The fault here, at any rate, cannot be laid at the door of our poor school-masters, or their ill-prepared pupils. After this, can it not be said that it is high time that more attention should be paid to the selection of Examiners? For a business like theirs, the best available men are to be secured and no policy should be allowed to interfere.

The Hindi paper is hardly better than its Bengali counterpart. The pyramids in line four have been called "Patharon ke sab se bade dher." Are they larger than the Himalaya mountains, and would the examiner be satisfied if a candidate were to translate them as "the greatest of all heaps of stones?"—dher, faithfully translated into English, is a heap, no doubt.

Of course, not a line of either the Bengali or the Hindi, as given in these two papers, would bear the slightest criticism, as regards their orthography, perspicuity, or grammar. I should not therefore aim at anything like a critical review of the passages, but would simply draw, with due deference, the attention of the University authorities to the matter and solicit the favor of their preventing a recurrence of such a state of things in future. The use of such productions in the examination papers of the highest educational institution in the land, it needs hardly be told, is simply deplorable.

There is another point in connection with these papers which deserves special notice, in justice to the candidates themselves. If I mistake not, the pieces given in the several languages are meant to be the different versions of one and the same text, and the English translations thereof are expected to be all alike. The examiners may not thus, when awarding marks, refer to the passages as given in each language, but judge the faithfulness and accuracy of the translations from the question paper in one language only. But that will hardly answer. The Examiners are warned that, in the present instance, whether intentionally or otherwise, material differences have been allowed to creep into the passages as given in the several languages and that the English translations could not thus be expected to be identical in all cases. A comparison of para. 2 of the Bengali with the first sentence of the corresponding para. of the Hindi version will at once prove the truth of what I mean to say. And this is not the only instance of the kind. But as I have already stated, the language of the papers does not deserve any detailed criticism.

ONE INTERESTED.

Ranchi, 26th February, 1890.

DACCA.

March 4, 1890.

The University Entrance Examination has just been over. Nearly seven hundred students were in for the examination at the Dacca centre. The authorities of schools were a little more careful this year in sending up their boys for the examination; so it is hoped, that the percentage of failure will be diminished. The questions were all very fairly framed, and they admit of little or no objection. In the afternoon paper of the first day, a piece of Bengali prose was given for translation into English. Its style, spelling, grammar, matter and idiom were all very curious indeed. It must have come from the pen of an Anglo-Indian who is bold enough to frame questions in Bengali, pretending to be a professor of the language; or if it has come from the pen of a Bengali at all, he has surely tried to unlearn his mother tongue. Whatever it may be, the questions ought to have been carefully corrected before they were sent to the press. Some boys have been misled, by the bad spelling, into taking the questions in a different light and consequently their answers have been wrong. Will Mr. Rowe be held responsible for this? In this connection, I must tell your readers one thing which reflects seriously on our boasted education and intelligence. Some of the guards have been known to abuse the sacred trust imposed on them, in the examination hall; or, to be more clear, they used unfair means in favour of a boy who had the good luck to be the son of a gentleman who holds high official position. If the report be true, nothing can be more disgraceful to the University, and every right-minded man should feel it his duty to wipe out the reproach. I hope, Mr. Editor, you will strongly urge upon the authorities to be a little more cautious in appointing guards to superintend future examinations.

Is this the way that they mean to spread moral education among the boys? The teachers would do well to receive moral instruction before they are called upon to impart moral education to the boys.

The East Bengal Chhatra Samaj has been doing good work for some years past. The students who come here to appear at the University examinations find great difficulty in procuring suitable lodgings, cooks, and servants. To remove it, the members of the Samaj have formed themselves into a committee to look after the comforts of the candidates. Babu Rajani Kant Ghosh, B.A., was Secretary to the Committee this year. The members did their best to help the boys in all sorts of ways. Medical assistance was also given them when required. The mofussil candidates were entertained in the Northbrook Hall on the evening of the 29th ultimo. Mr. Mondy, the officiating Principal of the Dacca College, took the chair. Baboo Surya Kumar Ghosh, laboratory assistant Dacca College, performed several interesting scientific experiments to the great delight of the spectators. The most interesting treat was furnished by Professor Wilson, of the Dacca College, who delivered an instructive address on "Examination of Life." Mr. Wilson is a well meaning, intelligent young man. He has been labouring hard for the moral welfare of the Dacca students with unremitting zeal. No European professor was on so familiar terms with the native boys as Mr. Wilson. During his short term of office, he has been pretty well acquainted with the failings and weaknesses of the Bengali students and has won the love and respect of most of them. Mr. Wilson got his address printed at his own cost and distributed it among the students. He touched on several important topics, such as spiritual welfare, moral courage, habits of study, immoral practices among young men, bodily exercise and so forth. In conclusion, he exhorted the students to ask themselves a number of questions at the end of each day or every week. I give them below, and earnestly hope they will be laid to heart by all your young readers.

- (1) How have I spent this past day or past week?
- (2) Have I deliberately done anything wrong, anything which I knew to be wrong?
- (3) Have I tried to be watchful over myself?
- (4) Have I carefully avoided evil temptations?
- (5) Have I had in my mind any proud, vain, greedy, impure, envious or other bad thoughts?
- (6) Have I told lies or deceived others; have I used any violent or bad or impure language?
- (7) Have I been obedient, loving, and dutiful to my parents, teachers and superiors?
- (8) Have I wasted time and been idle in doing my duties?
- (9) Have I been strictly temperate in eating and drinking?

MONGHYR.

Jamalpore, February 27.

General Strachey and Sir A. M. Rendal, having arrived from England by the first week of the current month, are now busily engaged in overhauling the system of accounts, &c., in the Head Office at Calcutta and are expected to be here shortly, to inspect the way and works. The present topic of the day here, is nothing but reduction.

A few days ago, there was a case of rioting between Hindoos and Mahomedans at Benowra, Thanna Gogree, in Monghyr District, in which the latter came out the worse. The wounded have been removed to Dear's Hospital at Monghyr. The dispute originated in the right over a Jalkur.

Our Officiating District Magistrate, Mr. T. E. Coxhead, leaves the District a few months hence. Major Ramsay, the District Superintendent of Police, Monghyr, has been transferred to the metropolis.

The local H. C. English School has sent up 9 boys to the Entrance Examination this year.

The Volunteers (E. I. Railway) from various stations on the line have assembled here, for the annual inspection which comes off this afternoon. Major-General Hudson, Commanding the Allahabad Division, has come down to do that duty. The inspection lasted for about two hours during which time the Volunteers were put through the different manœuvres by the several officers of the local corps. The General was very much pleased with the way the Volunteers acquitted themselves, and, in an address which lasted about 20 minutes, praised them highly, assuring them of a favorable Inspection report to the Commander-in-Chief. The Inspection over, the Volunteers were treated to a substantial refreshment on the maidan. A Grand dinner was given to the General by the officers of the Volunteer corps headed by Lieutenant-Colonel Allen Mears, Commanding the Jamalpore Establishment of the corps.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

A RURAL LIFE SCENE.

I.

THE farmer sat in his easy chair,
Smoking his pipe of clay,
And his hale old wife, with busy care,
Was clearing the dinner away ;
A sweet little girl, with fine blue eyes,
On her grandfather's knee was catching flies.

II.

The old man laid his hand on her head,
With a tear on his wrinkled face ;
He thought how often her mother, dead,
Had sat in the self-same place ;
As the tear stole down from his half-shut eye,
" Don't smoke," said the child, " how it makes you cry ! "

III.

The house-dog lay stretched out on the floor,
Where the shade after noon used to steal ;
The busy old wife, by the open door,
Was turning the spinning wheel ;
And the old brass clock on the mantle-tree
Had plodded along to almost three.

IV.

Still the farmer sat in his easy chair,
While close to his heaving breast
The moistened brow and the cheek so fair
Of his sweet grand-child were pressed ;
His head, bent down, on her soft hair lay,
Fast asleep were they both, that summer day.

DELAROCHE'S PICTURE

ON NAPOLEON CROSSING THE ALPS

UNCONSCIOUS of the dreary wastes around,
Of sleet that pierces with each fitful blast,
The icy peaks, the rough and treacherous ground,
Huge snow-drifts, by the whirlwind's breath amassed—
Through which the jaded mule with noiseless tread,
Patient and slow, a certain foothold seeks,
By the old peasant-guide so meekly led ;
Moves the wan conqueror, with sunken cheeks,
O'er heights, as cold and lonely as his soul—
The chill lips blandly set, and the dark eyes
Intent with fierce ambition's vast control,
Sad, keen, and thoughtful of the distant prize ;
With the imperial robes and warlike steed,
That face ne'er wore such blended might and need !

VIVISECTION IN INDIA.

To the Editor of Reis and Rayyet. ■

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Knowing you to be a true friend of dumb animals, and an ardent upholder of the Law of Mercy wherever it is possible for mercy to be exercised, I venture to call your attention to the feeling with which the Report of the Hyderabad Chloroform Commission (so-called)—in reality a Commission for Vivisection—has been received in this country.

It is not a noisy feeling, or one that is to any great extent represented in the daily newspaper press ; but among the calmest and most resolved friends that India has in the British Islands, (and I am sure the same remark will apply to America, and to several European nations, when once the facts are known) it has a depth and intensity which I do not remember to have been equalled, in any like case, in my experience of public affairs.

The feeling is one of simple horror that India, of whose gentleness and mercifulness many Englishmen have strongly, and often, spoken, should have been selected for experiments which it has been publicly asserted would not be permitted in this country, lax as English law is with regard to the system of secret torture which goes under the name of vivisection.

The Lancet states that in Hyderabad 490 dogs, horses, monkeys, goats, cats and rabbits had been used—(kindly notice the word that I have italicised), and that 600 experiments had been carried out, under the direction of this Commission. The same animals had, in some cases, been used more than once, after an interval, say of three or four days. Every intelligent reader of the words knows what this means.

" In order " (the Report says) " to test the alleged danger from shock during chloroform administration, the Committee performed a very large number of those operations which are reputed to be particularly dangerous in this connection—such as extraction, evulsion (tearing out) of nails, section of muscles of the eye, &c. In many cases the operations were performed after the animal was merely stupefied by chloroform and not fully insensible." The stories of the fiendish cruelties inflicted by vivisection as we know it in England, I shall not attempt in any case to re-narrate. They are too horrible to keep before one, or to dwell upon.

I am quite sure that the Nizam cannot know what, in its naked deformity, vivisection really is, and how it has been depicted and stripped of its pretences, by men of the highest character and culture, both in science and literature, in this country. The vivisectors say that the operations are in many cases painless. They do not say in all cases ; and for what they do say their word is not accepted. From all parts of the British Islands have come words as direct as these—" We do not believe you ! The power, and the exercise of the power, of secret torture are in their very nature brutalising ; and neither you nor any other men are to be trusted to draw the line at which you suppose that there is no suffering. No such power as you claim ever was entrusted to any human beings without leading step by step to cruelties far beyond what was at first contemplated, or at least avowed."

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

We are pointed also to the fact that some eminent men have carried on these operations. I reply that eminent men have condemned these operations; and that for one vivisector who might perhaps be trusted to reduce the suffering to its smallest possible limits, there must, in the nature of things, be scores of vivisectors who do not care in the least what amount of suffering they inflict, or how long their helpless victims suffer.

There are many strong and unanswerable arguments against the practice of vivisection in any hands. I will mention three. Eminent doctors, and scientific men, testify that, in their opinion, Nature does not give up her secrets to the vivisector; that her way to knowledge, for any purposes of mercy to man never can be the way of cruelty and suffering intentionally inflicted on any other living creatures.

Another argument is that in the medical profession, (in many cases distinguished by gentleness and pitifulness, and in which these qualities are so greatly needed and so deeply prized) there is great danger that even the habitual sight of cruelty and torture will harden the heart to the cry of suffering, and turn the mercy into cruelty, the kindness into callousness.

Others point, with undeniable examples from history, to the fact that the love of cruelty grows; and that people who have begun by torturing animals which cannot speak, have generally ended by torturing helpless human beings.

Each of these arguments is, I think, worthy of consideration from its own point of view; and the concluding one is surely of great importance to India, which depends so much on its power to protect itself from every form and kind of cruelty. What may not be the consequences if these practices are allowed? You know that the kidnappers of half a century ago found in eminent doctors customers for dead bodies. Allow vivisection to prevail in India and we may have a new system of Thuggee, sanctioned by the Law and blessed by Science—till the evil thing is found out. This is but one reason among many which will occur to your readers why India in particular should not have vivisection forced upon it on any plea whatever. For the protection of India itself, and especially of its poor people, I plead against this unholy experiment.

But, Sir, these arguments, strong as they may be, do not include the one which I venture to submit to the Nizam, and to you, and to the intelligent men of India, as the strongest and highest argument of all. That we have no warrant, in the faiths of India, any more than in the faith of England, or in any instinct of the human heart, for the claim to inflict torture on any living thing, be the presumed, or asserted, benefit to man what it may. The cowardly plea that the vivisector may, by his researches, learn something useful to mankind has been dealt with by many earnest and gifted speakers and writers; and I am sure it will be met in the same spirit by many of the true men of India, and by none more earnestly than the generous writer who sketched the picture of the "Bengalee pariah, my poor Tom."

I can fancy poor Tom under the vivisector's knife, and fastened to a board, every limb bound down so that he could not stir, and his mouth gagged so that he could not cry. Can you, Mr. Editor, fancy this, and then fancy the writer who drew Tom's picture looking on, like a philosopher, callous to the suffering? The latter fancy is beyond me. I can fancy that writer flying at the vivisector's throat, and rying conclusions with him, man to man.

I earnestly appeal to the Nizam, on behalf of many English ladies, whose feeling I know that these words all too weakly represent, and of many Englishmen, ardent defenders of India's just rights, that he will reconsider the permission he has given to this Chloroform Commission; that he will consider the danger of opening the door to vivisection in India; the value to India, "Prince and Peasant" alike, of the law of mercy, which never before ran so great a risk of being set at naught in your land.

Carmarthenshire.

I am,
Dear Sir,
Yours Truly,
JAMES ROUTLEDGE.

P. S.—One other thought I might have mentioned. There is, I think, no doubt that many vivisectors push their experiments to the utmost extent that a living being can endure and live, or endure before death, the object being to gauge the limit of endurance. I leave this fact to speak for itself.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE Correctional Tribunal at Nice convicted and sentenced Ernest Benzon, of Monte Carlo notoriety, to three months' imprisonment. He was found guilty of obtaining money by false pretences, the serious charges of forgery having been dropped. It was proved against him that in November last he had given a cheque of over 100*l* to the landlord of a hotel in Mentone in payment of a bill for a smaller amount, and had accepted and pocketed the balance, knowing at the time there was no balance at his bankers', the Coutts. His friends however had come to his rescue and paid the landlord. The next was a cheque for 60*l* offered to an English friend for an accommodation of 40*l* at Monte Carlo Casino. This, again, was followed by cheques for 100*l*., 500*l*., and 1,000*l* which Benzon presented to the Crédit Lyonnais in the name of Hargreaves. The first two were reclaimed, but Benzon stumbled upon the last. Before the money could be paid, the bank had discovered the fraud and had Benzon arrested. The culprit coolly admitted that the moneys thus received had been gambled away at Monte Carlo. Nor were Englishmen—including the Marquess of Ailesbury, Captain Day and others—wanting to depose to Benzon's good character. He had funds also to employ the ablest Counsel in his defence. Benzon is said to have wept over the sentence. If there is honour among thieves, there is justice even in Hell.

Mr. A. Phillips has obtained leave from the 4th March to the 27th November. It is not yet announced who Stands Counsel in his absence. Is it to be Mr. Pugh or Mr. Bonnerjee? Mr. Phillips has been Standing much too long and has earned a title to a brief repose.

BADOO Chunder Nath Bose has been confirmed as Bengali Translator to Government, in which post he had been officiating since the lamented death of Baboo Rajkristo Mookerjee. At this rate, the great Circumlocution Office will soon lose its head.

MR. F. J. Marsden's furlough for one year is Gazetted from the 25th. But Mr. A. P. Handley has already taken charge as Chief Magistrate of Calcutta and Judge of the Court for the trial of Pilots. Mr. Handley has a long time to signalize himself. May we trust he will bring greater vigour to the office and will not allow things to take their own courses? At present, the head clerks virtually act the Chief Magistrate in their respective places.

A GERMAN professor, Victor Mayer, predicted in a lecture at Heidelberg "that we may reasonably hope that chemistry will teach us to make the fibre of wood a source of human food." Alas for poor Malthus's credit! The next cheering prospect for Europe—for conservative Asia will none of it—is, we suppose, the success of the experiments of the unsavoury Professor of the College of Laputa.

ON February 18, at Abbazia, Count Julius Andrassy died of cancer of the bladder. The Austrian Empire remembers his services. The Emperor condoled with the Countess in the most sympathetic terms. A monument, at the cost of the State, will be erected to the memory of the late Count in recognition of his services to the throne and country.

EMPEROR William has taken Tomy Atkins under his special protection. Officers have been strictly enjoined not to ill-use their men. "In my army," says the Emperor, "every soldier shall be treated in a legal, just, and worthy manner; because such a treatment forms the essential foundation for awakening and increasing in him a pleasure to serve and a devotion to his profession, as well as love towards and confidence in his officers. If cases of continuous and systematic ill-usage of subordinates occur, the generals in command are to report to me and make me acquainted with the names of the superior officers who are responsible for the want of supervision, and with what measures they shall have taken against such officers."

We are afraid the German soldier, if not knouted like the poor Cossack, is habitually ill used, or else why this earnest interference by the Kaiser himself? But what a commentary on the political and social progress of Europe that the soldiery of armies maintained by conscription, are not to this day "treated in a legal, just, and worthy manner!"

cording the feats of Richardson, the most celebrated of English fire-eaters, at the house of Lady Sunderland:—

"He before us devoured brimstone on glowing coals, chewing and swallowing them; he melted a beer-glass, and ate it quite up; then taking a live coal on his tongue, he put on it a raw oyster. The coal was blown on with bellows till it flamed and sparkled in his mouth, and so remained till the oyster gaped and was quite broiled; then he melted pitch and wax with sulphur, which he drank down as it flamed. I saw it flaming in his mouth a good while. He took up a thick piece of iron, such as laundresses use to put in their smoothing boxes; when it was fiery hot, held it between his teeth, then in his hand, and threw it about like a stone; but this I observed he cared not to hold very long. Then he stood on a small pot, and bending his body, took a glowing iron with his mouth from between his feet, without touching the pot or ground with his hands, with divers other prodigious feats."

So late as 1718, a Savoyard, of the name of De Hightrehtight or Heiterkeit, caused a considerable excitement in England. The whole metropolis was after him. And no wonder. For, he deliberately ate live coals, chewed brimstone on flaming fire, and swallowed them up. About the same time, flourished Powell, the greatest English fire-eater since Richardson. The astonishing nature of his feats may be judged from one of his bills which we reproduce entire, to wit:—

"Please to observe that there are two different performances the same Evening, will be performed by the famous who has had the honour to exhibit with universal applause, the most surprising performances that were ever attempted by mankind, before His Royal Highness William late Duke of Cumberland, at Windsor Lodge, May 7, 1752; before His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, at Gloucester House, January 30, 1769; before His Royal Highness the present Duke of Cumberland, at Windsor Lodge, September 25, 1769; before Sir Hans Sloane and several of the Royal Society, March 4, 1751, who made Mr. Powell a compliment of a purse of gold, and a fine, large silver medal, which the curious may view by applying to him; and before most of the Nobility and Quality in the Kingdom.

Mr. Powell, Fire-Eater, from London:

He intends to sup on the following articles:—

1.—He eats red-hot coals out of the fire as natural as bread. 2.—He licks with the naked tongue red-hot tobacco pipes, flaming with brimstone. 3.—He takes a large bunch of deal matches, lights them all together; and holds them in his mouth till the flame is extinguished. 4.—He takes a red-hot heater out of the fire, licks it with his naked tongue several times, and carries it round the room between the teeth. 5.—He fills his mouth with red-hot charcoal, and broils a slice of beef or mutton upon his tongue, and any person may blow the fire with a pair of bellows at the same time. 6.—He takes a quantity of resin, pitch, bees'-wax, sealing-wax, brimstone, alum, and lead, melts them together over a chafing dish of coals, and eats the same combustibles with a spoon, as if it were a porringer of broth (which he calls his dish of soup), to the great and agreeable surprise of the spectators; with various other extraordinary performances never attempted by any other person of this age, and there is scarce a possibility ever will; so that those who neglect this opportunity of seeing the wonders performed by this artist, will lose the sight of the most amazing exhibition ever done by man.

The doors to be opened by six, and he sups precisely at seven o'clock, without any notice given by the sound of trumpet.

If gentry do not choose to come at seven o'clock, no performance.

Price of admittance to Ladies and Gentlemen, One Shilling. Back Seats for Children and Servants, Six-pence.

Ladies and children may have a private performance any hour of the day, by giving previous notice.

N. B.—He displaces teeth or stumps so easily as scarce to be felt. He sells a chymical liquid which discharges inflammation, scalds, and burns, in a short time, and is necessary to be kept in all families. His stay in this place will be but short, not exceeding above two or three nights.

Good fire to keep the gentry warm."

In France, fire-eating occurs in one of the charming letters of Madame de Sévigné, under date the 30th June, 1680.

HEALTH OF THE SUBORDINATE JUDICIAL SERVICE.

The health of the Subordinate Judicial Service—of our Sub-Judges and Munsifs—as also of the Bengalee pleaders has begun to attract attention. Neither the general public nor the authorities are aware why their health suffers. Diabetes, nervous debility in its various forms, and other serious complaints are making a havoc in the ranks of these officers and pleaders, most of whom are Bengalis, and not old. Some Deputy Magistrates have succumbed to them, or injured their health so much as to be unfit for any active public or private life. I believe a large percentage of the Judicial officers and about 15 per cent. of the pleaders suffer from one or the other complaint. Many causes are assigned for this deplorable state of things, chief among them being sedentary and lazy habits, starchy food, great mental work. It is said by way of apology that these hard-worked officers and members of the bar have no time for any kind of physical exercise, as they are in harness both in Court and out of it. The officer writes his decisions at home and the pleader makes money, and therefore they are unable to get out of their rooms either in the evening or in the morning. The men who have ill health are daily sinking and losing strength, as in that condition they work voluntarily or are obliged to go through their routine duty. These men clearly accelerate their death and commit a sort of suicide unconsciously. Others who are yet healthy do not take any warning from the pitiable condition of their unfortunate brethren. I am sure most of these gentlemen cannot realize what is the first and best standard of health or its normal state, and how a healthy person enjoys everything in this world and with what strength and clearness of head he can do mental work. Most of these B. L. judicial officers and pleaders ruin or injure their health while graduating in the University and they come to their daily avocations with a shattered constitution to work in climates which no weak person can stand, or do that amount of work for which they are almost physically unfit. One finds among these officers men who are living and moving pieces of flesh without life or vitality in them. They can write and write sitting in their rooms, but are generally useless for anything else requiring locomotion. These gentlemen ought seriously to consider this question of life and death, success and disappointment in this world, and try to change their habits and turn to good account the education they have received. There are people both in India and in many other parts of the world who have more important and responsible duties, and less leisure, but still they keep well and preserve their health by exercise, timely rest and habits which preclude them from becoming lazy.

Ask any of our officers if he knows what is rest and has ever realized the practical meaning of that sweet word, and you are sure to be disappointed at the reply. These men have no idea of rest, they have never in their whole life utilized their leave or holiday to any useful purpose. Although they have long holidays and are also entitled to privilege leave, scarcely 10 per cent. of them ever move out of their stations or malarious homes for change. Privilege or other leave the judicial Baboo generally takes to perform the marriage ceremony of his children or the Sradh of his parents or to place himself under the treatment of some good doctor in Calcutta or elsewhere, or to go for a change after he has completely lost his health. I don't know any Bengali who has ever taken leave in order to give himself rest or to recruit and refresh his health by a change of climate without being pressed by a doctor. During the Poojhas he goes home generally to bring on a relapse of the malarious fever or other complaints. It is a pity that these men would not know what is rest and how leave should be utilised. Many persons for financial considerations do not take leave, as that would entail extra expense in several ways; others are afraid of losing their old station or an agreeable superior officer. But the most important reason is the expense. They will only sit at home and accumulate money at any cost. Tell them to move in society in a reasonable way and they laugh at you. The diseased forms of Munsifs and Sub-Judges are only visible when the Lieutenant-Governor comes to a station and they are forced to pay respects to him.

I think a man should enjoy his leave and take rest when he gets tired of his work or finds himself overworked, and not wait till his disease is declared incurable. Our officers and pleaders are content so long as they can drag their huge and flabby bodies to court. I have seen a Munsif working lying down on a quilt in the ejlas with a pillow under his breast. Even in this state of health, this worthy officer thought he was fit to work and draw his full pay. Such ought to take a lesson from their European masters who enjoy their holiday and live. The Mahomedans come next as they also know how to live and enjoy life, and who cannot live without society. When Mr. Gladstone or Prince Bismarck can find time for rest, exercise and society, your plea of want of leisure must fall to the ground. A healthy person can work better, quicker, and longer than a living piece of flesh with occasional enforced motion. How many valuable lives have been lost in the midst of their usefulness only on account of these lapses in the national habit. Look at the mournful list of the native Judges of the High Court and other eminent Bengali gentlemen who died young. We see every day how suddenly and without the least previous intimation, a civilian or European goes on leave. From this you must infer that whenever he thinks rest necessary, he at once quits his desk.

The education which Native officers receive does them no good as regards their habits and ways of living.

It is now high time that the Bengali gentlemen generally and these officers and pleaders especially should seriously consider the matter and try to improve and safeguard their health. They must acquire active habits, and do regular exercises, if necessary in some cases they should improve their diet and understand the value of rest and know how to enjoy it. Society itself is a curer of many diseases which grow from indolent and lazy habits. I have seldom seen a person sick or sorry who moves in society.

If a European suffers from such bad health in which our men work for years, he would probably commit suicide, as a person who knows the comforts and sweets of full health, would not remain an indoor patient in his own house for years or for the whole of his life.

HEALTH.

Public Papers.

NOTE ON THE RATES OF WAGES IN LOWER BURMA.

Outside the towns the usual pay for coolies engaged for short periods and not paid by results is annas 8 a day. In the busy season some men are paid Re. 1 a day in Rangoon, but they have to work very hard for it at the rice-mills. An industrious cooly can earn annas 12 a day either in town or in the district when paid by results. The Burmans earn as much as the Indians. The Public Works Department and Municipalities pay Rs. 10 to Rs. 12 a month to coolies who work eight hours daily. These coolies only work six days in the week.

Most of the Indian coolies leave Burma in May. Those that remain find work on roads. As repairs only are carried on at that season, but a limited number can be employed. The coolies come across to Burma about November and it is believed that every one of them finds work in the dry weather, i.e., from November to May.

In the districts adjoining Rangoon, agricultural labourers are paid as follows:—Ploughmen get for the season of three months the equivalent in grain of Rs. 40 to Rs. 60, and also their food, which costs about Rs. 5 a month. The ploughmen are usually Burmans from the neighbouring villages, or immigrants from Upper Burma. Natives of India are sometimes engaged for ploughing and get paid in money, a sum considerably less than the value of the grain which is given to Burmans. Very little rice is transplanted in these districts. When coolies are hired for this purpose, the wages are annas 10 to Re. 1-4 a day. Burmese labourers are hired for reaping and winnowing, and receive each for the three months' work grain equivalent to Rs. 30 to Rs. 60. In some cases the sheaves are counted at the end of the day, and the reapers get one-fourth to one-third of the total number of sheaves. Bands of Madrascas under maistrees take up reaping contracts. The maistree makes an agreement with the Burman cultivator to reap his fields for a certain sum together with rations. These men reap very fast, but not so carefully as the Burmans. They merely reap the paddy and do not remain for the winnowing, for which Burmans have to be engaged at rates varying from Rs. 16 to Rs. 24 each. The Indians while reaping earn annas 12 to Re. 1 a day, it is estimated.

In the Bassein district labourers are often engaged from ploughing time (June) until the threshing is finished (February). They receive, in addition to their food, the equivalent in grain of Rs. 60 to Rs. 110 for the season (food costs about Rs. 4 a month). Labourers hired for ploughing and planting only (June to October) receive in addition to their food the equivalent in grain of Rs. 30 to Rs. 75. The rate of wages varies with the skill of the labourer. A good ploughman gets the best wages. In planting and reaping time day labourers get a basket of paddy and the morning meal (annas 9 to annas 12). Madrascas labourers are not so numerous here as in the neighbourhood of Rangoon. They do take up reaping contracts, however, and earn annas 12 to Re. 1 a day while at work. Burmans are engaged for the reaping season, and receive in grain the equivalent of Rs. 30 and their food (Rs. 6).

In the Tharrawaddy district a ploughman receives the equivalent in grain of Rs. 30 to Rs. 40 and his food for 4 months (Rs. 16). In the south of Tharrawaddy, for transplanting and reaping, daily labourers receive in grain the equivalent of annas 9 to Re. 1. In North Tharrawaddy, for transplanting, wages are annas 8 to annas 10 a day, and for reaping annas 8 or annas 9 a day.

In the south of Prome district labourers receive annas 8 or annas 9 a day. In the north they get only 4 annas and their food (2 annas). Indeed, in the north of Mahatham five labourers of Re. 1 with food (annas 2 each) is a common estimate.

In the Tharrawaddy and Prome districts but few natives of India are employed as agricultural labourers.

In the Henzada district a ploughman receives in grain the equivalent of Rs. 25 to Rs. 40, and his food for four months (Rs. 16). Sometimes they are paid in money at the end of the ploughing season, and then they get Rs. 20 to Rs. 25, or, including the value of food received, Rs. 36 to Rs. 41. For planting and reaping one basket a day and the morning meal are usually given (annas 8 to annas 10). Women do the planting in this and other districts. Both men and women take part in reaping.

Occupations engaged in by cultivators whose holdings are so small as that the produce of the land is insufficient for the support of the family.

In the north of Henzada and Tharrawaddy and throughout Prome the holdings are very small indeed. In the northern tracts of Henzada and Tharrawaddy the average area of paddy land held by one cultivator is about 6 acres; in Prome it is from 3 to 5 acres. In these districts there are numbers of cultivators whose lands do not yield sufficient produce for the support of the family. In such cases the cultivator often works for daily wages in the fields of a neighbour who has a larger holding. Many of these cultivators have carts, and cart for hire or else travel about the country in the carts during the dry weather selling provisions. The Settlement Officer estimated that in this way a cultivator in North Tharrawaddy or Prome could by occasional carting during the dry season add without difficulty Rs. 50 to Rs. 80 to his income. The owners of very small holdings of paddy land often have betel or other gardens as well. Some also engage in dry weather cultivation on the islands in the Irrawaddy. Some (especially in the Henzada district) find employment in the fisheries and others in the forests.

Where the land is cultivable throughout and of average fertility, it can support in comfort an agricultural population of 400 to the square mile. In the north of Henzada the density of population slightly exceeds this number in several circles in which the people (with very few exceptions) are engaged in agriculture, and there are no other employments except carting of grain. Cultivators do not generally in this locality engage in trade as in Tharrawaddy, and the villages and towns in which the bazars are situated are not within the circles now referred to. The people in these circles are comfortably off. It appears then that where the land is cultivable throughout, even though there are but few traders, a population of 400 to the square mile is not excessive.

on the sort of stuff we meet with in the said "selection." The form of Brahmo theology which it expounds—call it the Conch Behar School—is a miserable hodge-podge. The New Dispensation of these latter days accentuates the feeblest side of Keshub Chunder Sen without the compensation of his genius. We present to our readers the following choice morceau which we find in a contemporary's columns purporting to be drawn from the New Dispensation:

"CHRIST AND KESHUB.

.....Christ announced his mission to be not to destroy but to fulfil the Older Dispensation and perfect it. So is Keshub, not an enemy or destroyer of the previous dispensations of God, but a friend, who seeks to fulfil them and carry them out to their logical sequence. Christ preached faith and hope and heaven to the vilest sinner in the parable of the Prodigal son. Keshub has no other gospel to preach than this parable, which is the essence of all scripture. Christ spoke of himself as the Son of God and declared himself as the universal and eternal atonement of sinful humanity with the holy Father. Keshub also believes thoroughly in Christ's sonship and reconciliation, and bears witness unto this truth. Christ said, I am the way. So art thou, O Jesus, says Keshub. I am the bread of life and shall be eaten by my disciple, that I may become flesh of his flesh and blood of his blood, says Christ. And Keshub, the loyal disciple of the Lord Jesus, lives in Christ Jesus, grows in his strength and rejoices in his joy, and verily Keshub's flesh is Christ's flesh through faith and his blood the blood of Christ. Christ said truly, wherever my disciples and servants are, there am I always, and wherever I am there they shall be. So where Yesudas Keshub is there is the blessed Yesu, and where Yesu is there is and shall ever be his faithful servant Yesudas. Jesus loves the poor sinner, pities him, regenerates him and dwells in him, and he in him and they both dwell together in the Father. So in Yesudas is Yesu and in Yesu is Yesudas living in secret yoga and intercommunion, and both the good master and vile servant, are one in the Father. Happy, happy, happy, am I, says Servant Sen, and thrice blessed is my master Jesus."

There is no mincing of matters here. The degradation is now complete. These good people who think themselves religious and better than their neighbours, have now definitively settled into man-worshippers.

THE Chinese Amban reached Calcutta on Tuesday by special train from Darjeeling, and was received at the Sealdah station with the usual ceremonies. There was a gathering of Celestials at the station for greeting his Excellency. The Amban's visit is in connection with the signing of the treaty about Thibet, and his stay will be a short one. On Wednesday, his Excellency paid an official visit to the Viceroy. Next evening, there was a party in his honor at Government House. The Celestials of the East and West met together to hobnob with each other if possible—certainly to stare at each other and laugh in their sleeves, long or short, at one another, as much as to say, What odd fish! what unbelieving barbarian for a' that and a' that!

AT yesterday's sitting of the Supreme Legislative Council, the Hon'ble Mr. Hutchins presented the reports of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend Act XXV of 1867 (Printing Presses and Books) and on the Bill for the prevention of cruelty to animals. The Committee on the first think that it will be sufficient for a printer to submit a single sample of every publication in the form of book or pamphlet which issues from his press, instead of two copies as originally proposed. The whole effect of the amendment of the existing Act is, that in place of three copies of every book now paid for, the printer will have to supply one copy within one month of the printing of the book, and an additional one or two copies if called for, within one year, but always free of charge. It will not be necessary to deliver mere reprints or subsequent editions in which no additions or alterations have been made, if the first has already been registered. The same exemption applies to periodical works for which the printer has made a declaration before the Magistrate. There is a slight alteration in the procedure for enforcement of the penalty. The Magistrate will proceed to punish a defaulting printer only at the instance of the Receiving officer or one acting under his authority. In both the old and the new laws, the penalty against the defaulting printer is the same as against the publisher refusing to supply the printer with the necessary copies to be delivered to Government—namely, Rs. 50 and the value of the books to be delivered. And why so? Is it not reasonable that the refusing publisher should bear the forfeiture of the printer defaulting not willingly but being incapacitated by the publisher? The Government gains doubly by one omission. Both publisher and printer are punished for the sin of one of them. This is so unfair, so manifestly unjust, that we wonder that the blot has not been removed. Why should a man suffer for the recalcancy of another?

The poor printer is handicapped enough to require such superfluous attentions of legislators to make his lot insupportable.

THE Press Bill is but another proof of the carelessness with which Indian laws generally are drafted. We do not speak of the policy, which has in a manner been forced upon Government by unscrupulous authors and publishers. We refer to literary lapses—verbal incongruities, conflict of different parts and provisions, and so forth. The Bill omits the word "three" in the preamble but makes no corresponding change in Part V. of the Act. The directions under that Part for registration of books being left intact, the following direction in sec. 18 of Act XXV of 1867, must, of course, stand!

"Such memorandum shall be made and registered in the case of each book as soon as practicable after the delivery of the copies thereof in manner aforesaid."

But, then, under the proposed measure there will be only one copy delivered, the subsequent copies may not be called for or may be called for long after the registration and the drawing up of the memorandum. We do not know whether other corrections are called for. We leave the Legislative Secretary to find that out.

NOT only is the penalty identical in both the existing law and the Bill in progress, but the very language used. Thus we find in both the value of the withheld books is to be added to the mulct of Rs. 50. The more homely counting-house word "price" is scrupulously avoided. We confess we do not like the sound of the more respectable term in the connection. It is Protean in meaning. Thus, the value of a thing may be out of all proportion to its price. The other word is not so equivocal. The price of a thing is just what it will bring—fetch in the market. Of course, there will always be a difficulty when the books are out of print and not in court, specially in the case of books not for sale. Then the word "value" is likely to enhance the difficulty. A specialist may put an exaggerated idea of the importance of two-penny half-penny tractate. A bibliomaniac on the bench is not an unlikely contingency.

IN the Bill for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the Select Committee have introduced several important and necessary matters. The law may be introduced into, or withdrawn from, any local area. The word "animal" is made to mean any domestic or captured animal. That beastly operation of phuká is specifically declared penal wherever committed and punishable with both fine and imprisonment. Disabled animals are to be detained in an infirmary and cared for and treated at the cost of the owner. Police-officers are declared ineligible for arresting offending persons without warrants. But Police Commissioners and District Superintendents of Police equally with Magistrates are empowered to issue search warrants on information in writing. They are further enjoined to order immediate destruction of an animal when its sufferings are such as to render such a direction proper. Lastly, the Committee save religious prejudices and rites by declaring that "nothing shall render it an offence to kill any animal in a manner required by the religion or religious rites and usages of any race, sect, tribe or class."

The new measure is more humane and wide in scope than the existing law. It sufficiently reflects the progress of kindly feelings towards the dumb creation.

BAROO Jodooolal Mullick threatens to be the Wat Tyler of Municipal misgovernment. The cordial sympathy of his countrymen has promptly solaced him in his contest with the town Corporation for resisting a harsh law by withholding payment of rates. Good promises to come out of evil. An unfeeling law has been recklessly driven over a doomed people. He who runs may discern that the new assessments which are being made in the town, are perfectly unbearable. The discontent brewing for sometime has come to a head, and a movement has been set on foot to apply to Government for relief. Pursuant to a requisition numerously signed, a meeting of rate payers has been called by the Sheriff, for ventilating the grievances of the house-owners and adopting memorials. We hope it will not be allowed to degenerate into an affair of boys, great or small. It deserves a better fate. The subject is a practical one—a matter of business, and the feeling of the town with respect to it is perfectly genuine.

We read in the biography of [one eminent Civilian by another this capital story; to wit:—

"When Mr. Hotham was made a Baron of the Exchequer, who never had any business at the Bar, he [Serjeant Hill] gave, as usual, a dinner at Serjeant's Inn, to the Judges and the Serjeants. Serjeant Hill drank his health thus:—'Mr. Baron Botham, I drink your health.' Somebody gently whispered the Serjeant, that the Baron's name was not Botham, but Hotham. 'Oh!' said the Serjeant aloud, 'I beg your pardon, Mr. Baron Hotham, I beg your pardon for calling you Mr. Baron Botham, but none of us ever heard your name in the profession before this day.'—Twiss's Life of Lord Chancellor Eldon, vol. I, p. 94.

The Calcutta gownsmen have avoided a similar contretemps, by withholding from Meer Ameer Ali Saheb the usual compliment of a dinner to any of their body who climbs to the bench of the High Court.

This is an extreme step. This is the first time that such a slight has been put upon one of their brethren so elevated. This regard—of the left-handed kind—of the profession for the new Mahomedan Judge is, if possible, emphasised by the special and cordial appreciation shown for the retired Hindu. The Bar has decreed a "trophy"—as it is called—to Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter. That is the highest possible honour from the profession, and the best and most legitimate triumph of his long career. Titles are nothing to it. It is the old story—

A king can make a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Sound law he mauna fa' that.

Royalty can lavish honours and even create titles, but it can never, for any favorite, create a title to the genuine regard of the people, or extort the admiration of the lawyers.

Luckily for the disappointed, there are Ameers in plenty about, and one of them has come to the rescue. Hossein is moving heaven and earth and what not, to get up a demonstration in favour of Ali. He was even ready to give a party to the City of Palaces at his house in honour of his old friend and now superior. Remembering that Ali did his worst to prevent friend Hossein's last elevation to the Senate, this was very creditable to the latter's magnanimity. Latterly, it was deemed expedient to make a public affair of it. So the apparition of an Association was conjured up, and the matter made over to a body glorying in the name of the Central National Mahomedan Association. Accordingly, invitations were issued for an entertainment at the Town Hall. A good deal of astuteness, not to say finesse, has been shown in the arrangements. It was no easy thing to fill the great hall with respectable men, and the name of the self-elected heir of the Caliphs of Bagdad is not likely to draw the Faithful, let alone the Nazarene and the Kafir. Accordingly, they hit upon the "dodge" of different messages to different persons. Vassals, whether of the precincts of the Gothic Tower of Babel in Esplanade Row, or not, were summoned to meet the new Kazy Bahadoor. Gentlemen in general received an invitation of the usual kind, namely:—

"The Central National Mahomedan Association request the honor of company at an Evening Party at the Town Hall, on Saturday, the 15th instant, at 9-30 o'clock. Synd Ameer Hossein, Secretary, 14, Theatre Road, the 1st March 1890."

THEY must be a factious lot who talk of the growing poverty of the people and of distress on all sides. And the arch-rebel is their Coryphæus Sir William Hunter who started the queer notion that forty millions of the people are almost at starvation point. It is all nonsense, for we are a prosperous nation, advancing in wealth by such strides that we are on all sides confronted by the—romance of wealth. Plutocrats are springing up about us whom their country wots not of. In a Chandernagore correspondence of the Indian Daily News, we make the acquaintance of a new benefactor of his kind, thus:—

"Baboo Jogendra Nath Basu, a millionaire, has, I understand, offered to pay Rs. 3,000 for metalling the road to Bazra—a village about 4 miles off, if it is called after the name of his deceased father. It speaks much for the Baboo's liberality in removing a long-felt want, and I hope the British Government, through whose dominion the road runs, will accept his offer."

We may be condemned for grovelling instincts, but, to us, we confess, the most striking thing in the above is not so much the donation offered as the declared pecuniary status of the donor. And this confession involves a still more serious one—that of ignorance of his being. We feel the gravity of our admission and of the offence it implies. Not to know the very millionaires in your neighbourhood seems to argue no small perversity. But our excuse lies in the abnormal activity of the Press—the over production of the article. The "chaff" at heroism in the opening verse of Don Juan is prosaically put to colossal fortunes. We may sing, after the noble Bard—

I want a Cræsus: an uncommon want,
When every year and month sends forth a new one,
Till, after cloying the gazettes with can't,
The age discovers he is not the true one;
Of such as these I should not care to vaunt,
Any more than the Father of our Press.

The situation is not, however, without consolation or moral. Happy is the land that knows not its millionaires!

For the rest, our contemporary's correspondent of the French settlement need not be afraid of the British Government declining any genuine donation for the public good. To our mind, the doubt suggested by him suggests a suspicion of the earnestness of the gift. At any rate, it is not clear to us, as to "Delta," that the offer speaks much for the Baboo's liberality, seeing that it is contingent on the glorification for ever and a day of his deceased father. The whole trumpet-blowing is far too early.

THE Indian Daily News, which, in its generosity to the weak, is always bringing to the fore the stragglers and strugglers for public recognition, notices the criticisms of Baboo Troyluko Nath Mookerjee or, as since he has been to England he likes to call himself Mr. T. N. Mukharji, in a native weekly, on the Poona Sarvajanaik Sabha's pamphlet on the 'economical question. This gentleman is supposed to be great on these subjects. Ever since "Buck's Baboo" went in charge of Indian exhibits to Europe, he promised to be an authority. And he has more than fulfilled expectation. He is given to speculation, and has a distinct proclivity to originality. In this he rivals the Prince of Prigs who attests for the state all the contracts of the metropolis and utilises his leisure by cultivating the Jains. That gentleman distinguished himself at a time of drought and impending famine, by pressing on Government his plan of forcing, at the cannon's mouth, the continent heavens to yield the withheld showers, and he is since understood to be engaged, with all the ardour of his confrères of Laputa, in reducing his plan to execution in a cheap way so as to be thoroughly employed in agriculture. Towards this object, he has himself, after a preparatory course of heroism with the air-gun, accompanied shooting parties to the bogs of Behala, and has been in constant attendance at the artillery practice at Fort William. The connection between cannonading and raining is, however, no discovery, whatever may be the "gumption" of the practical application of the idea for relieving agricultural distress. Mr. T. N. Mukharji's greatness is all his own. He became famous by his thoroughly original scheme of drugging the British poor in Great Britain with the Indian hash of rice and pulse called kichri. He is a man of action as well as of contemplation, and, instead of contenting himself with making his suggestion like any other publicist, he made an appeal to the public for contributions we believe, and took measures for opening a dole. The whole idea and the measures for giving it effect were of a piece. We wonder what came of it all. We remember Mr. Mukharji acquired much kudos from our easy-going press, and many good people were persuaded that this prodigious office Baboo had, if not extinguished, at least broken the neck of pauperism in England.

THE enquiry into the Durbhanga temple destruction case held by Mr. Boxwell has closed, and the Government orders on his report will soon issue. Meantime, Mr. Beadon, Chairman of the Municipality, has been transferred, and the Mahomedan Vice-Chairman has resigned. The Government also do not claim the site on which the temple stood, while the municipality has been directed to sanction any application that may be made for the restoration of the temple. So far so good. But we hope the Government Resolution will rise to the height of the occasion.

THE Bar has triumphed over the Bench. The British supremacy in India is maintained. The Judges have found Justice Norris guilty of the high crime of misdirection and sentencing away the life of a British-born—a Private in Her Majesty's Army. His Justiceship pleaded guilty. The conviction has been quashed and O'Hara set free to hunt down the "black bastards."

The Judges are not concerned with the effect of their order. Justice is blind, and the Full Bench must be presumed to have given their verdict according to the statute, though they would not trouble themselves with the several questions of law raised in argument. But neither the public nor the Government can or ought to be blind to the political consequences of the trial on the country in general—on native India in particular. The result is simply disastrous.

A number of soldiers break out of their barracks fully armed and ammunitioned. They want more spirits to keep up the British spirit for spree or sport. They pounce upon a black bastard, a toddy seller, at dead of night. He refuses or is unable to supply the encouraging liquid as being against law. He is hunted out of his home and to the edge of a tank and there shot down dead. The death remains a mystery for a time. The military perpetrators escape detection. That is military discipline, we suppose. The Viceroy realizes the situation and presses for enquiry. To calm the popular indignation, the Cantonment Magistrate notifies a reward for detection of the braves who skulked and cannot be found. The reward at length succeeds in souls untouched with remorse all this long while, and two of the associates give themselves up. They receive the Queen's pardon and depose to the guilt of their comrades in arms and crime. The special procedure for the trial of the high and British-born is regularly gone through. The Magistrate sends up two accused to the Sessions. The High Court tries them with a special jury mostly of their countrymen. They are ably defended. One is let off, and the other is found guilty and capitally sentenced. The law has its course, the murder is avenged and the country is satisfied.

It was for a moment. An unwritten law more powerful than the Code or the Acts of the Statute-book remained behind. Frequent enough as have been murders by White men, there is hardly a precedent to speak of of capital punishment of a Briton for a Black death. Whether it was or was not against British prestige, it was certainly against the British grain. It is not for black bastards to claim blood for blood. The sentencing Judge must have been carried away by momentary emotion. He himself began to relent. The Chief Justice was applied to for an escape out of the dilemma. He called a Council of Five. They considered the matter for several days. Their understanding was illuminated by the costly White light of Counsellor Woodroffe, the man of light and leading of the High Court. Ultimately, it was decided to blot out the crime from the records of the High Court.

The country will never forget it, though. Just now, the people are dumb-founded.

We trust Government are not idle spectators of this unparalleled spectacle. The leaders of the people too have a duty in this situation.

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1890.

LORD CROSS'S REFORM BILL.

AN APPEAL TO INDIAN PATRIOTS AND POLITICIANS.

LORD Cross's Bill is a fair measure, and the Congress would be well advised to take it in good part. Sir Madhava Row is a Congressist himself and he, at any rate, should be listened to. He expresses a hope that the large and important concessions made by the Bill will be welcomed by the Congress with due and becoming gratitude. Nothing could be wiser than such an attitude. It would go a great way to redeem the very character of that movement. It would show that the Congress is not always under the ascendancy of mere agitators, but that there are men of sound practical sense who know what they are about and are able to make their influence felt in its councils. Here is a grand opportunity for the Congress to retrieve lost ground. In itself, the movement must command the support of all honest friends of India's welfare. But the excesses of its leaders have naturally created prejudice against it. Our position with respect to it may be mistaken, though we must confess we fail to understand how such a mistake could arise. Is it possible for our strangely constituted nature to derive no pleasure from those dreams of a regenerated India which have such a fascination for the Congress mind? An Indian Parliament sitting at Calcutta, or the British Parliament with a large representation therein of the Indian peoples—an Indian Army and Navy manned and officered in sufficient proportions by our own countrymen—Indian Volunteers in every town and station—the Civil Service in its upper and lower grades Indianized in its personnel,—why, one must be unhuman not to be charmed by such a gorgeous prospect! We are aware that the Congress aims at nothing less than the realization of a state of things like this. If, nevertheless, our ardour is not set ablaze by an institution with such highly patriotic aims, are we necessarily of the hostile camp? Such an inference would be the greatest wrong that could be done to us. The fact is, it is impossible for any true Indian not to be in real sympathy with the Congress itself—the absolute ideal, unconditioned by time and space, and unhampered by personality. But there may be too great strain put upon this sympathy by the indiscretions of its leaders—their individual ambitions, and demoralising methods. It had and has our natural sympathy and will continue to have it, even in the midst of our keenest regret for its tactical blunders, its extravagances and its want of moderation. The best cause may be spoilt in unskilful hands, and if we have reproved the Congress in somewhat plain terms, it is where we found it going too fast for a prosperous career. Indeed, the Congress has been too much in the hands of professional agitators and political irreconcilables. The leaders are everything, and the rank and file nothing. We are prepared with proof of this, but even if we were ten times more opposed to the Congress and its ways, we would never be a thorn in the side of a movement in which so many good and true men are engaged. Let us at this moment, when the Government of their own motion have brought in a Bill in Parliament for the reform of Indian administration, remind the members of the Congress all over the country that they have a rare opportunity of showing, if they are so minded, that they are not mere puppets in leading strings but capable of judgment themselves. We ask them to think on Lord Cross's Bill without bias, and express their opinion of it as independent men. Is the Bill not a measure of sufficient importance to merit their approval? Will it not put the Legislative Councils on a more satisfactory basis, and give them a more representative constitution? Are not the rights of interpellation, and discussion of the Budget the very things for which the country has cried itself hoarse? And when the Government listen to the cry and concede those rights, is it for us to sullenly reject the gracious offer, simply because one or two things have been withheld on the present occasion? We put it to the Congress men themselves to consider what would be the proper demeanour for Indian politicians at this juncture. Let them calmly ponder and decide for themselves and not surrender their own common sense at any one's bidding.

To understand the question in its just lights, they have only to see what they have got and what they have not. They wanted a more representative constitution for the Legislative Councils. They demanded the right of interpellation and the discussion of the Budget, and they have got all these things. If the Councils are not to be strengthened to the extent, and in the manner, they demanded, and if they really think the Bill objectionable on these grounds, the best course for them would be to state those objections, while all the same expressing their gratitude for the concessions which they are already promised. You want a lot of things of which some are given while the rest are withheld. This, at the best view, is the position of the question. Is this at all an occasion to justify the tone of sullen discontent and bitter resistance in which the leaders of the Congress have chosen to criticise the Bill before us? Mr. Hume speaks of the Bill as if it were aimed against the existence of the Congress itself, or something equally dangerous or sinister. He calls it "worse than nothing. It is simply an insult to the country. It is a case of the authorities to whom we humbly petitioned for bread, casting a stone in our faces." And organs of the Congress in the press have not been slow to follow suit. And it will go forth in the name of this vaunted political association that there is nothing for Lord Cross's Reform Bill but unmeasured condemnation from those whom he intended by this Bill to please.

Now, is that the real Indian sentiment? Is it even the sentiment of the Congress? Has any one been at the pains of ascertaining public feeling on the subject? There has been no such thing, and yet the so-called leaders of the Congress or, for that matter, of all Indian opinion, say that the Bill is nothing, while in truth it is the mature outcome of long and earnest deliberations on the part of the Home as well as the Government of India as to the steps which, in their opinion, were needed for satisfying the aspirations of educated Indians by enlisting their co-operation in the administration of the country.

We have already expressed our opinion on the elimination of the elective principle from Lord Cross's Bill. It would be desirable, we think, if a modicum of election were given a trial. But our recent experience of its operation in municipalities has not enhanced its claims upon our regard. Nor is the Congress itself very sure as to the best method of applying the elective principle. At first it would confer the franchise on the Municipal and local Boards, but all on a sudden it has lately thrown over those bodies, and gone in for what are called Electoral Colleges. The practical difficulties of constituting such electorates are conveniently lost sight of, in the ardour with which the demand for election is made. We do not know how Lord Dufferin proposed to deal with the question. Probably he took the Congress at its word and proposed giving the franchise to the local bodies. But the Congress has since changed its opinion. Altogether, the problem is of great complexity, and from what we have seen of the abuses and failures in Municipal elections, we are not disposed to enter into another electioneering vortex. Let us not be befooled by words. Let there be no prejudice against names. Despotism may be better than Democracy. And of all tyrannies, Heaven defend us from the tyranny of the majority from which, as M. de Tocqueville first pointed out, the vaunted Land of Freedom beyond the Atlantic suffers in dumb despair! On the contrary, nomination is an excellent practicable system of much elasticity, alive to circumstances, ready to take shape according to need—just the thing for grave experiments, if properly worked. Even the most enthusiastic believer in the mysterious efficacy of the Vote for selection would be reconciled, provided the selections were good. The real difficulty lies in securing that proviso. Men are men, and officials are but too human! The nominations made hitherto have been, with rare exceptions, of the worst kind, and hence we would still have some sort of election by some simple and easily workable system. We are glad, however, to find that Lord Cross has expressed himself not disinclined to have some system of this kind. His Lordship said that the nominations might be made by the Imperial and Local Governments in consultation with Universities, the Chambers of Commerce and bodies like the British Indian Association. This ought to satisfy all fair minded people, and lead them to support the Bill. It has a good prospect of passing, while the phalanx of Radical opposition with which it is threatened in the House of Commons may, without doing any good, throw back the cause of progress for some years to come. The talk of Mr. Bradlaugh the Invincible carrying his India Bill, is all "bosh" or mere bunkum, and will not delude any one who knows Parliament and Parliamentary work.

FIRE-EATERS, LAY AND RELIGIOUS—

EASTERN AND WESTERN.

THE love of wonder is ingrained in man. No culture or training is proof against curiosity into the marvellous. The sturdiest pocus-curantism, if honest, will dissolve before a miserable lusus naturæ. We are, therefore, by no means surprised to see that the following account of a Hindu religious festival, held on the 11th February at Benares, supplied by a Correspondent to the Pioneer, is or has been reproduced in almost every paper in India, Ceylon and Burma, with demonstrations of surprise at the marvel related therein:—

"Yesterday invitations were issued to all civil and military officers and other European and native residents to witness a festival known as 'Angi Kund,' which literally means walking over a pool of fire, at the residence of the Rani of Coorg. The invitations were largely responded to, and all the European spectators were astonished at seeing the natives walking over a pool of living coals. The spot where the fire was placed was about 20 feet long, 4 feet wide and 2 feet deep. At one end of this was situated the god of fires, made of kneaded flour, and the great god Mahadeo was conveyed round the fire three times in a grand palanquin, borne by priests amidst great singing and dancing (something after the fashion of the Indian war dance and song). After the third turn the priests, with a drawn sword, severed the head of the god of fires, which they said had the effect of 'cooling fire.' After the defeat of the god several natives, young and old, of different castes, walked across the fire with bare feet. Whether their feet were burnt I cannot say; at any rate none of them complained, but repeated their walks. At the conclusion 'atar' and 'pan' were distributed."

India abounds in such surprises. Indeed, the commonness of such phenomena blunt the edge of curiosity and destroy the old exaltation of feeling at their occurrence. To speak after the good Irish, marvels are simply matters of course in India—every-day incidents. At any rate, this fiery business is a stale trick. It is known throughout India, in the feats of jugglers, if in no other shape. Its use as a promoter of faith in religious ceremonies may not be universal, but it is popular in the South and the East. The Fiery Festival is observed with great enthusiasm and much eclat in the Madras Presidency. It is the veritable Southern ceremony that was performed at Benares and seen with so much wondering satisfaction by the European officers and gentlemen of the Upper Provinces. There is a fiery rite in Lower Bengal likewise, but not synchronous. It is not over yet. There are 25 days for it. When the day comes, our poor miserable Bengal weaklings will pass through the fiery ordeal as gallantly and gaily as any braves or bullies or Bahadoors from Far North or South—the Far West or Farther East. We have ourselves seen men not only walk over live coals, but stir and beat a huge pile of burning faggots and scatter the burning coals about in all directions and up in the air, by way of sporting with them, to the bewilderment of simple folk.

There is no mantra or charm in all this, and the secret is widely known. The clowns attached to the commonest jātrās often emit fire from their mouths. Some jugglers go so far as to cook from fire stowed in the cavity of the mouth.

Nor is the fire-eating business unknown in Europe. There are at least half a dozen exhibitors in England on record, and many more on the Continent. As early as 1633, Sir Henry Wotton mentions an English exhibitor in London for two pence. Next we find the refined Evelyn in his Diary, under date the 9th October 1672, thus re-

"FRANCE for the French" seems to be the ruling spirit of the new French naturalization and military service laws. They are at any rate being worked in that spirit. It has been proposed to exclude the children of all foreigners from the French communal schools, where French children, are, from want of room, unable to obtain admission. There are about 5,000 foreign children, and half of these will be affected by the proposed rule. By and by, we are afraid, poor France may be reduced to Celestial exclusiveness.

THE curriculum for the German cadets will include German history and geography and the German language, the practical use of modern languages, the history and intellectual life of the most important modern civilized nations, and the various examples of heroic conduct in ancient and mediæval times.

Understanding the "intellectual" to include the "moral," that scheme is to the point and thorough. It keeps clear of all the time-honoured superstitions. It is no doubt the outcome of much earnest thought. Its rigid rejection of the claims of pedantry and suppression of useless knowledge is remarkable in Germany. It might look like painting the lily over again to offer advice, but one suggestion we will hazard. The addition of translation of the Mahabharata, say the English version of Pratap Chunder Roy, would be a distinct gain to the studies selected.

A MASTERPIECE of Rembrandt has turned up. It represents a man with an angel on each side of him blessing a table, close to which there is a servant, and bears Rembrandt's signature, with date 1656. At Pecq, near Paris, an old lady died, and her chattels were put up to auction. At that sale, this picture was put up. It was believed to be a worthless copy of one in the Louvre, known as "Pélerin d'Emmaus," and offered at an upset price of 200 frs. only. A joiner, paid for the purpose, purchased it for a knowing Paris picture-dealer. A few hours after, the picture-dealer received an offer of 4,050 frs., but he refused to part with it for less than 250,000frs.

AT Christiana, before the Geografiske Selskab, Dr. Nansen, the Arctic explorer, has explained his plans for a North Pole expedition. He proposes the construction of a ship with a special view to strength, her sides at such an angle that, instead of being crushed by the ice, she will be raised by it. The route is to be through the Behring Straits, whence advantage is to be taken of the favorable current which will carry the vessel northward and thus attempt to reach the New Siberian Islands as soon as possible. Here the vessel would enter the ice floes and would proceed towards the North Pole, in which direction the current would probably carry her.

THE Belfast News Letter reproduced a speech delivered in August 1888, at Enniskillen, by Mr. Porter, in which occurred the following passage :—

"It was shown a month or so ago, by sworn testimony, in 'The Times and O'Donnell' case, that Mr. Campbell, the M. P. for South Fermanagh, sat in the office in Westminster, and wrote the orders and gave the knives to Mrs. Byrne, who brought them to Ireland, by which Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke were murdered."

Mr. Campbell is the Private Secretary to Mr. Parrell, and he sued the proprietors of the News Letter for libel, claiming 5,000l damages. The plaintiff complained that that was a false and malicious publication, insinuating that he wrote the orders for the Phoenix Park murders on May 6, 1882, and supplied the knives for the bloody crime. The defendants traversed the publication of the defamatory words and relied on the fact that the alleged libellous matter was contained in a bond fide report of a public meeting. The jury found for the plaintiff and awarded 200l damages.

WITH the commencement of the new official year, a distillery in which spirituous liquors may be manufactured after the native process will be established at each of the stations of Krishnagpur in the district of Nuddea, at Berhampore in Moorsshedabad and at Soory in Birbhoom. No liquor, not manufactured at the said Sadar distilleries, will be allowed to be sold within certain prescribed limits without a pass from the Collector of the district, and no still allowed to be constructed or worked or spirituous liquors manufactured, except at the said distilleries.

THE Charitable Endowments Act (VI) of 1890 received the assent of the Governor-General on the 7th March 1890, and, from 1st October 1890, it comes into force in the whole of British India, inclusive of Upper Burma and British Baluchistan. Under the Act, "charitable purpose" includes relief of the poor, education, medical relief and the advancement of any other object of general public utility, but does not include a purpose which relates exclusively to religious teaching or worship.

BABOO Brij Mohan Thakur and Rai Bahadr Hari Mohan Thakur, of Bhagulpore, have made a donation of Rs. 1,000 in aid of the funds of the Behar Sanskrit Sanjivan Sabha, and won official recognition in the Gazette for "their liberality and public spirit." This brace of Thakurlogues conveys, to our mind, a mixed picture of both love and hate—union in esse and disunion in posse. It shows the assertion of legal rights against the etiquette of the East and the sentiment of submission to seniority.

Holloway's Pills.—Important for the delicate.—It is difficult to determine which is the more trying to the human constitution, the damp, cold days of autumn and winter, or the keen, dry, easterly winds of spring. Throughout the seasons good health may be maintained by occasional doses of Holloway's Pills, which purify the blood and act as wholesome stimulants to the skin, stomach, liver, bowels, and kidneys. This celebrated medicine needs but a fair trial to convince the ailing and desponding that it will restore and cheer them without danger, pain, or inconvenience. No family should be without a supply of Holloway's Pills and Ointment, as by a timely recourse to them the first erring function may be reclaimed, suffering may be spared, and life saved.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE House of Commons has agreed to Mr. Smith's motion on the Parnell Commission without division. The closure was repeatedly applied, and on one occasion there was no House. Lord Randolph Churchill attacked the Government and caused sensation by a remark that the "mountainous labour of the Times had only produced a ghastly bloody rotten fetus in the shape of the Pigott forgeries." Mr. Gladstone's motion denouncing the Pigott forgeries and urging that Mr. Parnell was entitled to reparation, was, after a week's debate, lost by a majority of 71 votes—339 against 268.

THE cause of education in British America has received a heavy blow. The Toronto University has been destroyed by fire. The name remains—unhurt amid the war of elements—but the local habitation is gone. It is, among other things, at once a literary and an æsthetic calamity. It was the finest educational building in Canada and contained a valuable library consisting of 33,000 volumes, valued at 1,000,000 dols. The building with the contents are estimated at 1,500,000 dols. The insurance amounts to only 160,000 dols.

A CLERGYMAN, Canon Baynes of Bristol, has been sentenced to four months' hard labor for robbery. Dr. Dodd evidently left his cloak behind in the Church for the benefit of holy men in difficulty. In India, the Dodds and Baynes would be Mohants of Tripati.

THE Novoe Vremya having many a time called M. Notovitch, the Russian agitator, an imposter, the latter, who is now in Paris, repels the charge and threatens legal proceedings against the offending print. In vindicating his own conduct, he divulges some secrets which implicate him as well as the editor. He makes no secret of being the prime mover of a Russian patriotic league for rousing public opinion in favor of a rapprochement between France and Russia. He claims M. Sourvorin, the editor of the Novoe Vremya, as one of the most active and important members of that organization. Notovitch bore a present to M. Déroulède from this party, and afterwards, at the special solicitation of the editor and proprietor of that paper, carried a Russian sword to General Boulanger. The last was in acknowledgment of the important services rendered to that paper by the General, by sending the necessary documents, towards the defence of the action of libel brought by the German Military Attaché at St. Petersburg, Major-General Villaume, against the Novoe Vremya. He was the correspondent of that journal, but he ceased to be so since the editor discovered him to be a Jew and withdrew his credentials. Notovitch had been to India in 1887, ostensibly as a Correspondent of that Russian paper, in the interest of a Russian official, but Lord Dufferin smelt a rat and declined to see him. Who was this Russian official who has such a deep interest in India that he actually sent a private Embassy all the way to this country? Was it Giers? Hardly. Lord Dufferin would scarcely have refused audience to the delegate of a friend. And what business could M. Giers personally have in India? Whether it was M. Giers or the holder of a jaw-cracking Slavonic name that sent over to us Notovitch, the errand was assuredly political. He came on state business. It would be satisfactory to know what the business was. Of course, Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace, who has supplied the Indian information, knows. It cannot be a very agreeable business to India, we suspect.

THE Indian Councils Bill has passed through another stage—the Committee. So far so good. For the rest, the telegrams are not very intelligible, or intelligent either. Thus, we suppose, we are expected to be grateful for the information that Lord Cross is willing to empower Provincial Councils to legislate on local matters, and that he considers the extension an advantage to India. It is more to the purpose that his Lordship has announced that negotiations are proceeding with the Viceroy with a view to further decentralisation. But the crowning conundrum is the news that Lord Herschell has given notice of a motion for a new clause enabling local Councils, with the approval of the Viceroy, to amend laws prior to the subsequent passing of the Act,

IT is the season of the Simla Exodus. Preparations are making for the flight. The officers and clerks have drawn their travelling allowances. The Viceroy leaves Calcutta on the 30th March but does not reach Simla before the end of April. His Excellency travels via Saharanpore, Dehra, Mussooree and Chakrata. The Secretariats at Calcutta begin to close within a fortnight, namely, the Finance and Legislative Departments on the 28th instant; the Home and Revenue on the 29th instant, the Public Works on the 31st instant, and the Foreign Department on the 3rd April.

THE Government of India is slow indeed to reduce the Exodus expenses. Last year, the education allowance for children left in the plains was withdrawn. That was doomed on account of the frauds practised on Government by their fathers. This year, the travelling allowances have been curtailed a little, the lowest grade clerks, as a matter of course, suffering the most.

The family maintenance, the grain, and house-rent allowances will be continued as before to the clerks, and the officers will draw the Presidency house-allowance on the heights of the Himalayas.

BOMBAY has bade farewell to the Duke of Connaught and the Duke has taken leave of India.

MR. Grattan Geary, of the Bombay Gazette and President of the Bombay Corporation, has taken Mr. Symons, a broker, to task, and has obtained a summons against him for damages, for insinuating, at the Town Hall loyal meeting in honor of Prince Albert Victor, that Mr. Geary had openly expressed sympathy with the Fenians. At that meeting, Mr. Geary lost the chairmanship of the Reception Committee by one vote. It speaks not a little for the popularity of Mr. Geary that, notwithstanding such an ugly imputation, he missed the chair by a hair's breadth against the whole official influence.

THE weakness of our High Court has assumed the character of a grave public grievance. Unfortunately, we see no signs of a disposition to redress. Such a disposition would undoubtedly have taken advantage of every opportunity to infuse fresh blood. The applications for even short leaves would not be neglected. And how behold the latest arrangements! Mr. R. F. Rampini, District and Sessions Judge Burdwan, and Mr. Charles H. Hill, Barrister-at-law, Public Prosecutor, Allahabad, officiate as Judges of the Calcutta High Court in places of Messrs. Justices Beverley and Trevelyan. Mr. Justice Tottenham also goes on leave from the 17th April for five months, Mr. H. W. Gordon, District and Sessions Judge, Sarun, officiating. At any rate, we trust Mr. Hill has left his advocate's conscience behind at Beni Ghat and will now cultivate judicial spirit, and never in his office wish to advance the interests of his N.-W. P., "chums." Mr. Tottenham has, we suspect, had enough of his Kazi Bhai and is driven to seek a change.

THE Chamber of Commerce has complained to Government that the whole cost of the Fire Brigade is levied on the jute-pressing industry, and prayed for adequate relief by throwing a larger portion of the cost on the general tax-payer. Municipalities must now prepare to vote a share of the rates for the Fire Brigade expenses.

THERE is, or used to be—for we do not see it now—a weekly publication under the name of The Liberal and the New Dispensation, written by a wellknown Armenian journalist whose position on the daily press enabled him to continually bring it to the front in the columns of the Statesman, just as another gentleman is doing the same invaluable service to another paper in another paper. From the dissensions that had broken out in camp of the lamented Keshub Chunder Sen, whose organ it was, and the way in which his family went on alienating his most valued coadjutors and disciples, until his very brother, the amiable and accomplished Krishna Behari Sen, himself an experienced journalist, was driven from its helm and from all participation in it, we confess, we were not very sanguine of its continued existence to any purpose. But we are glad to have mistaken. Still it moves! Life is patent and beyond misgiving, so far as regards one of the Siamese Twins—the religious side of the double-barrelled organ. For, we see a "selection" from the New Dispensation in another publication. Life, then, is certain. Would it were worthier! We certainly cannot congratulate the conductors

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

A LYRIC OF THE LOWLY.

THE strawberries grow in the mowing, Mill May,
And the bob-o'-link sings on the tree ;
On the knolls the red clover is growing, Mill May,
Then come to the meadows with me !
We 'll pick the ripe clusters, among the deep grass,
On the knolls in the mowing, Mill May,
And the long afternoon together we'll pass
Where the clover is growing, Mill May.

The sun stealing under your bonnet, Mill May,
Shall kiss a soft glow to your face ;
And your lip the red berries leave on it, Mill May,
A tint that the sea-shell would grace ;
Then, come, the ripe clusters among the deep grass
We 'll pick in the mowing, Mill May ;
And the long afternoon together we 'll pass,
Where the clover is growing, Mill May !

MY WIFE'S A WINSOME WEE THING.

The last Song of Dr. Charles Mackay, written two days before his death.

My wife's a winsome wee thing,
Wed twenty years or mair,
And aye the bonnier growing,
As baith mine eyes declare.
'Tis love that made her bonnie,
And love that keeps her sae,
In spite o' Time and Fortune,
On Life's uncannie way.

Love scares awa' the wrinkles
From aff her smooth white brow,
And duty done through good and ill
Aye keeps her conscience true,—
And yield her happy peace of mind,
If e'er the world goes wrong,
And turns the murmur of lament
Into a cheerful song.

The kisses gather on her lips
Like blossoms on the rose,
And kindly thoughts reflect the light
That in her bosom glows,—
As wavelets in a running stream
Reflect the noontide ray,
And sparkle with the light of heaven
When rippling on the way.

She is a winsome wee thing,
And more than twenty year
She's twined herself about my heart
By all that can endear,
By all that can endear on earth
Foreshadowing things above,
And lead my happy soul to heaven,
Rejoicing in her love !

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

AN Ape, much cheer'd (he chatter'd like a man)
Denounced the weakness of the government.
"Where shall we find true valour?" he began.
"Not in the craven crew we are content
To call our leaders. Let him lead who can !
Old kingdoms tempt new conquerors. Prevent
The impending ruin of this empire old !
Tho' big, the brutes that lead us are not bold."

And so, taken at his word and his own estimate, fil'd by all the boys, young and old, stuffed with meat and rint, merrily goes he to conquer Old England.

The confidential functionary who had charge of the funds in whom this aristocratic committee, of course, had 'unbounded confidence,' has disappeared, and £50,000 has disappeared with him, the melancholy result being that the Emperor has insisted upon his brother, the Grand Duke Vladimir, replacing the deficiency out of his private fortune—an order which has caused the relations between them to become decidedly strained."

AN infant Brinvilliers is reported from Chester. Elizabeth Roberts, a girl of 10, has been found guilty of attempting to poison Annie Hodgkinson, to whom the girl's father was engaged to be married. It is reported that the girl had taken a great interest in the Maybrick case. Sometime ago, she would put different mixtures, mostly innocuous, in Miss Hodgkinson's tea. Latterly, however, the mixture was of lead and Miss Hodgkinson fell ill. After the administration of the poison, the girl kept on enquiring how her victim was, and once openly remarked, "I thought she would be dead, as I have given her poison." She said that she had been advised by her grand-mother to do what she had done, and confessed to having once poisoned the grand-mother herself. There was no corroboration of the first statement, and the second the grand-mother did not remember. Mrs. Rider deposed to a fact which goes to prove that the girl had a very early predilection for poison and poisoning. The prisoner and another child used to play Mrs. Maybrick, one feigning sickness, the other playing the poisoner. The child has been sent to a reformatory to reform until she grows to be sixteen.

HERE is the most amazing record of social degradation in the heart of Christendom:—

"At Deese, a village in Hungary, the schoolmaster died a few weeks ago, and his widow shortly after his death received from an insurance company the sum of 2,000 florins. The following night, a couple of gendarmes, on their beat, took shelter for an hour or so at the widow's house. Towards midnight four men wearing masks entered the house and asked the woman to give them all the money she had in her possession. She gave them twelve florins, but they wanted the 2,000 besides. She then told them that she kept the sum in the next room, and led the four robbers into the apartment occupied by the gendarmes, who lost no time in placing handcuffs, on the intruders and taking them into custody. But what was the general surprise when the robbers turned out to be the judge, the pope (Greek priest), the public notary, and the parish clerk of the said village!"

That goes much beyond Coleridge's account of Sicily. Friar Tuck is a poor joke beside this association of the most honourable depredators.

NEW regulations have been issued for presentations at the Queen's Drawing Rooms. By a drawing room in the strange English tongue is usually meant what we in Bengal call a baitakkhana; but here a drawing room is a Durbar. The regulations published are

"1. The privilege of making presentations to the Queen at a Drawing Room is restricted to those ladies who have themselves been previously presented to her Majesty, and who are themselves present at the Drawing Room.

2. Under such circumstances a lady has the privilege of presenting one lady only at a Drawing Room, in addition to her daughters or daughters-in-law.

3. The restriction does not apply to ladies who, from official position or other circumstances, are specially privileged to make presentations to her Majesty.

4. It is not expected that gentlemen will present themselves at a Drawing Room except in attendance on the ladies of their family. Any gentleman who, under special circumstances, should desire to be presented to the Queen at a Drawing Room, will observe the same regulations as are in force for her Majesty's Levées."

Are ladies who have not their lords to protect them left to their fate and the mercy of God?

THE following is from The Grocer of Feb. 15, 1890:—

"Our readers will doubtless remember the discovery in the early part of last year of the admixture of American lard with bleached cocoanut oil; this substance, however, seems likely to find a legitimate use as a substitute for butter. In Amsterdam a factory is being started by the 'Dutch Vegetable Butter Company' for the purpose of extracting from cocoanuts and similar oily products of the tropics a substance which is styled 'cocoanut butter.' The credit of discovering that in the cocoanut there exists a good fatty substitute for butter belongs to Dr. Schlunk, of Ludwigshafen-on-the-Rhine. The first attempt to turn his discovery to commercial profit was made by the firm of Müller & Sons, who sank a lot of capital before succeeding in producing a fair saleable article. It is no new thing to convert the cocoanut into a food-stuff; in those countries where the cocoanut palm is indigenous the natives esteem it very highly as one of their most important food supplies. The albuminous flesh of the nut contains from 60 to 70 per cent. of fat, which can be transformed into 'butter' of a clear white colour, yielding on analysis the following results: 99.9932 per cent. fat, 0.0008 per cent. water, and 0.0060 per cent. mineral matter. The process by means of which it is prepared eliminates all disagreeable taste or smell. Its flavour, of course, bears no comparison with that of dairy butter, and it is probably better adapted to cooking than to table purposes. In Germany the poorer classes are taking to this new 'butter' very generally, and it is used in many of the State institutions. It costs about 7d. per lb. Some of the hospital authorities in Germany have ordered this new substitute to be used entirely by the patients instead of dairy butter, because they say that it is more digestible than the latter, since it is freer from acids and other disturbing elements."

THE Indépendance Belge reports that

"the trade of Antwerp is seriously declining. In 1889 there was an absolute decrease in the tonnage of 467 tons, while in the whole of the eight years ending with 1888 there was only an increase of 900,000 tons; in 1880 the total was 3,063,829 tons; and in 1888, 3,920,714 tons. Rotterdam, on the other hand, is making remarkable progress. During the nine years ending with 1889 her trade sprang from 1,681,690 tons to 2,721,479 tons; while the trade of Antwerp only increased in the same period from 2,766,806 tons to 4,355,511 tons. The tonnage entering Antwerp in 1880 exceeded the combined trade of Rotterdam and Amsterdam by 400,000 tons, while now it is 150,000 less. Other towns also have been striving to deprive Antwerp of her trade, notably Bremen, Flushing, Dunkirk, Marseilles, and Bordeaux. In 1880 Antwerp had at her command the entire transit traffic between South and East Germany, Northern and Eastern France, Switzerland, Austria, England, and America; but it is now being distributed between the ports above named. It appears that excessive dues have driven the shipping from Antwerp Harbour. For example, ships of 1,800 tons have to pay in the Scheldt taxes to the amount of 400 fr., which they do not have to pay either at Hamburg or Rotterdam."

We trust inter-urban rivalry had no hand in the disastrous fires that lately occurred in Antwerp.

SWEDEN is rapidly multiplying her beetroot sugar manufactories. Last year, the four manufactories at Arlaf, Staffanstorp, Sábzhölm, and Trelleborg, all in one district, handled altogether 108,222 tons of beetroot. At the present moment, a very large factory is being completed at Helsingborg. It will have a capacity of crushing about 5,000 cwt. beetroot per day, or about 600,000 cwt. during the four months of the "campaign."

THE Oerlikon Machine Works, Switzerland, have decided to draw the motive power from Burlach—a distance of 13 miles, where water-power of 500 H. P. will be obtained and transmitted by means of electricity to the works.

A LONDON trade journal remarks that, although India is one of the principal cotton-growing countries, out of 250,000 tons of cotton-seed oil consumed in England in 1888, only 4,000 came from India. It attributes the smallness of export to the very near impossibility of forcing Indian seed from the fluff and to the smaller percentage of oil in Indian as compared with American and Egyptian seed. Another reason given is that good prices are obtained on the native market for all vegetable oils.

THE Chairman, Mr. Finlayson, of the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce at the last annual meeting, complimented the members saying that the British flag carried 45 per cent. of all goods and passengers in the world, and congratulated the Clyde ship builders on the record of the City of Paris which had not been beaten. He also pointed out that the foreigners who worked long hours had the advantage of the British nation in the textile trade, and hoped the eight hours Bill would never pass except for colliers.

No less than twenty-four glass bottle manufacturing companies in the United Kingdom have united and formed themselves into a mammoth company under the style of "The Glass Bottle Industries, Limited," with a share capital of £1,400,000. The object is stated to be "to acquire and consolidate certain glass works throughout the United Kingdom, so as to cope with foreign competition, and remove, or at any rate check, certain usages that have for some time past been very injurious to the trade." How intelligently wideawake these Europeans are, compared to our listless stupid ways of depending on Providence!

LODGE Marine under the Mastership of the ever wakeful Mr. R. D. Mehta, we find the only masonic body in Calcutta who wished the Duke of Connaught, Grand Master of English Freemasons in Bombay, farewell on his retirement from India. The message—telegraphic—runs thus:—

"To-night (Mar. 10) Lodge Marine, number 232 E. C., in meeting unanimously resolved that, in view of the departure from India of H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught and the services rendered by him to the cause of Freemasonry in India, both as Grand Master of English Freemasons in Bombay, and as the brother of our dearly beloved brother the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Grand Lodge of England, this Lodge humbly approach his Royal Highness with valedictory greeting, wishing all health and happiness to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess. I, as Master of Marine, feel proud to convey the message, which I trust your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased to receive."

The following reply was received from his Royal Highness's Equerry: "To the Worshipful Master, Lodge No. 232 E.C., His Royal Highness Duke of Connaught sends best thanks for kind telegram received, and wishes all prosperity to Lodge Marine and Freemasonry in India."

What were the Prinseps and other gentlemen Rajmistrees who are nothing if not masons about when the Queen's son, who and his eldest brother had honoured the craft by lending their names to it, was leaving the country?

IN their last Report, the Council of the Ceylon Asiatic Society makes an earnest appeal to Government, for recovering the ancient literature of the Island, by systematically collecting, transcribing and publishing the manuscripts which are scattered about in the libraries of temples, as well as in private houses. Within the last three years, private exertions have secured 69 MSS., some of great value.

A POOR Hindu of the Bombay Presidency, wearied of the journeys in quest of justice through the great Circumlocution Office of British Judicature, appeared in the High Court before the Bench of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Scott, and, after giving them a bit of his mind as to the farce at which they so gaily presided from day to day and month to month, finishing with the remark that he could stand it no longer to be baulked of justice from pillar to post as it were, in one Court after another, produced a knife with which he proceeded to cut his own throat. He was prevented by the crier and turned out by the guards. Not, however, before the Chief Justice had told him to send a petition representing his grievance. Herein, the Judge showed humanity rather than prudence. What relief can the good Chief or the Full Bench for that matter, administer to the victim of a huge and mournful system—a preposterous machinery, of which the Court is not the least part.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THERE is a ministerial crisis in Germany. The Bismarcks—father and son have sickened of their youthful Emperor. The Emperor too seems wearied of the father, his dominance and constant threats of resignation, and has relieved him of the every-day cares of the Empire. Of course, Prince Bismarck goes out with honors. The Emperor thanks him for past services, and expects that the Fatherland may yet profit by his counsel and devotion in the future as in the past. Prince Bismarck retires as Duke of Lauenburg, Colonel General of Cavalry, and Field Marshal-General of the Forces.

Even these philosophical Germans who are up to the feat of evolving an elephant out of the depths of their moral consciousness, do not see the absurdity of rewarding success in the cabinet with military honours. The retiring Chancellor is preeminently and exclusively a Civilian in every sense of the word. A theologian and a lawyer by education, versed in jurisprudence Roman and comparative, a parliamentarian, a diplomat, and minister of state by profession, what a mockery to constitute the Grand Vizier at the moment of retiring into private life a make-believe warrior and military conqueror!

General Von Caprivi, Minister of the Imperial Admiralty, Commanding the Tenth Army Corps in Hanover, succeeds Prince Bismarck both as Chancellor of the Empire and President of the Prussian Ministry.

No orders have yet been passed as regards the son. Count Herbert Bismarck, whose resignation has not been accepted, continues in charge of the Foreign office.

THE House of Lords has sanctioned the Indian Councils Bill as introduced by Lord Cross and amended by Lords Herschell and Northbrook. The telegram as regards the first amendment, as we pointed out last week, is unintelligible. We publish the Bill elsewhere. The full text of Lord Northbrook's amendment, which has been accepted by Lord Lansdowne, has been supplied to the daily press here from the Government House. It runs thus:—

"Addition to clause 1:—Provided that the Governor-General of India in Council may, from time to time, with the approval of the Secretary of State for India in Council, make regulations as to the conditions under which such nominations, or any of them, shall be made by the Governor-General of India, the Governors and the Lieutenant-Governors respectively, and prescribe the manner in which such regulations shall be carried into effect."

That addition deprives the Viceroy of the absolute power of nomination, and binds the Governor-General and the Secretary of State to lay down, from time to time, the principle and manner of selection of both Supreme and Local Councillors and, at the same time, keeps open the door for election even as recommended by the Congress.

The Bill, it will be observed, quietly justifies all additions—whether by cession or conquest—to the Indian empire since the passing of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, or the earlier Acts 3 & 4, William IV., chapter 85, and 16 and 17 Vic. cap. 95. The Allahabad High Court had already rectified the Acts, and now Parliament has been moved to sanction that Court's interpretation of those laws by declaring that existing territories include and have always included after acquisitions. It was not without a purpose that the Acts were limited to the then existing dominion of Her Majesty. For one thing, the Home Government was always jealous of extension of territories by the East India Company. That jealousy may not survive under the direct government of the Queen, but that cannot justify the sweeping assertion that Parliament always intended to apply those Acts to "Indian territories now or hereafter under the dominion of her Majesty." The righteous course, we need scarcely say, was to admit the illegality and to legislate fresh for the new territories.

THE British workman continues to indulge largely in strikes, and finds the game paying. In January, Hollowware trades, brasstube makers, fire-brick makers, edge-tool makers, boat-builders, grinding and polishing trades, locksmiths, brass-workers, tinplate makers, bedstead makers, nail makers, &c., struck work and obtained advances of 10 and 15 per cent.

Last week, the miners threatened strikes unless they were allowed 5 p. c. increase in July. One hundred thousand colliers stopped work on the 16th instant, causing stoppage of the Lancashire cotton mills for failure of coal. There were riots among the dock strikers at Liverpool and the military had to be called out. There was a meeting of dock labourers on the 17th. A dock owner named Houston exhorted his men to resume work as he had agreed to their demands. He was only yelled at, for, they said, none could go to work while any remained starving. There was a general uproar. The crowd grew furious and were bent on excesses. A passing load of wheat was pounced upon, the bags scattered over the street and the waggoner stabbed. The police who came to the rescue were stoned. Five hundred troops were ordered from Preston to preserve peace. The day following, twenty thousand engineers on the Tyneside Engine Building Yards threw up work. In Lancashire too mills and factories suffered. For want of coal, they were obliged to burn wood. The latest reports are, however, satisfactory. The strikes are settling down. The Liverpool dock labourers have returned to work. The colliers' strike is ended, they having obtained an immediate increase of 5 per cent. and promise of another like increase in August.

THE Berlin Labour Conference is making good progress. The Emperor has dined with the Foreign delegates, and has decorated the French delegate M. Simon with the Prussian Order of the Red Eagle. A Committee has been appointed to discuss the questions of work in mines, Sunday labour and women and children's labour.

THE Labour Question has received prominence in France. M. de Freycinet, in his statement to the Chamber of Deputies on the 18th, said that the first duty of Government would be to facilitate the progress of the working classes and to better their position, and that Bills would be introduced to that end.

THERE is a change in the French Ministry. M. Freycinet has formed a new Cabinet with the following cast :

- M. de Freycinet, Premier and War Minister.
- M. Constans, Minister of the Interior.
- M. Ribot, Minister for Foreign Affairs.
- M. de Fallieres, Minister of Justice.
- M. Rouvier, Finance Minister.
- M. Bourgeois, Minister of Education.
- M. Jules Roche, Minister of Commerce.
- M. Develle, Minister of Husbandry.
- M. Barbey, Minister of Marine.
- M. Etienne, Under-Secretary for the Colonies.
- M. Yves Guyot, Minister of Works.

GOVERNMENT has sustained two defeats in the House of Commons. The motion to entrust to County Councils the maintenance of rights of way in Scotland was carried against Government by a majority of thirteen, including Mr. Chamberlain's vote. General Hamley's motion for meeting from the public revenues the deficiencies caused by the equipment of Volunteers was adopted by 135 against 102, many Conservatives and Liberal-Unionists voting with the majority against Government. These defeats are of no moment, yet, the Premier has deemed fit to hold a meeting of the Conservative party at the Carlton Club on the 20th, at which he rated his followers for the bad moral effect of these losses. He ridiculed the idea of an early dissolution, as the results of recent bye-elections were, in his opinion, not at all disheartening.

THE Lieutenant-Governor reached Ranchee on the 8th instant. His Honor was received with the usual honors. There was a conversazione the same evening under shamianas spread over the grounds of the Commissioner's house, where a municipal address was read. Sir Steuart Bayley was exceedingly pleased with it. It was brief and asked for nothing. Sir Steuart Bayley found the district prosperous and expressed his belief to the Municipal Committee that "there is a great future before Chota Nagpore both in agriculture and in the development of its mineral wealth." On the 13th, he distributed prizes at the Government zilla school. The next day, he invested the Zemindar of Padma with the title of Raja. The day following, there was an entertainment at Dorunda, by the soldiers. Sir Steuart then moved on to Chybassa, which little town did its best to receive the Governor. He stayed there one day and left it on the morning of the 17th. On the 21st the Governor started for Hazaribag where he remains two days. His Honor is due at Calcutta on the 27th, to assist the Viceroy in laying the foundation stone of the new Laboratory of Dr. Sircar's Science Association.

AFTER such expression of gubernatorial preference in regard to the literary form of the demonstrations for receiving the Lieutenant-Governor on tour at any town or village, we expect to see an era of, if not wit itself, the soul of wit. Others will doubtless improve upon the Rancheewalas, until the ponderous proportions of the orthodox address of welcome is reduced to a gracile and sparkling epigram. Finally, some wise people might go the whole hog in melioration, and refine the thing out of existence.

There is high literary precedent for such a reform. In the satisfaction felt by Sir Steuart Bayley out of all proportion to the magnitude or rather unmagnitude of the cause, he merely echoed the principle of the famous sentiment—

My pain is great, because it is so small.

And every student of literary biography remembers how the rationale was carried to its legitimate conclusion, and a distich completed with the line—

Then were it greater, were it none at all.

WE expect to see a bumper attendance at the Science Association rooms on Thursday next, and the Viceroy ought to be able to announce some ample donations. It is very good of the rulers to honour and encourage a national institution of prime importance. It were equally discreditable to the people to allow it to languish for want of support.

WE rejoice to learn the result of the prosecution of the Phoenix for libel. After dragging its slow length along for months, the case has at length ended in the discharge of our colleague Baboo N. Gupta, editor of the Phoenix, and his publisher. The proceedings arose out of a newsletter from Shikarpore published by our contemporary on the 19th June last, reflecting on the administration of the jail. The Superintendent, Dr. Corkery, took fire and denounced vengeance on the offending print. He asked for permission to prosecute and obtained it, but not unconditionally. With an appreciation of the public functions of the press and of the difficulties of journalism, bespeaking at once benevolence and broad statesmanship, the Government ruled that the Editor was to be let off, provided he gave up his informant and besides satisfied the local authority that he had acted in perfect good faith and with reasonable caution. Likewise, the correspondent and publisher were not to be troubled, on their submitting to an apology or retraction such as the Commissioner in Sind might deem sufficient. Negotiations for a compromise were set on foot, but they ultimately fell through. So at last Superintendent Corkery appeared before the Magistrate on the 18th December last. After several postponements, granted on the application of the parties, the first hearing came on on the 1st March. The trial came to an end on the 12th, when the Magistrate passed the order of discharge.

SENSATION upon sensation ! If all went—ill, the Bengal public might once more enjoy a legal spectacle such as it has not beheld for nearly thirty years, since the celebrated missionary James Long was sent to jail by the Supreme Court. The virtual trial of a High Court Judge in the O'Hara Scandal has no sooner been closed than we are promised the excitement of the judicial impeachment of a holy man, who is the consolidated apostle of the Gospel and of temperance. Who has not heard, or heard of, Thomas Evans ? That man must be deaf indeed ! Besides going from province to province and district to district and city to city and preaching in the market place, and from door to door, he has been sending forth manifestoes innumerable, booklets, tracts, tractates, leaflets. Add to that, he is an indefatigable correspondent and contributor to the press—not in one paper or two or half a dozen, but no end of journals. One of his letters appeared in the Statesman of the 13th inst. on "Temperance Work in India." It is a characteristic specimen of apostolic literature in which there is little mercy for human frailty and great readiness to damn outsiders. Thus, the lawyers of the highest grade are thus denounced:—

"I have found gentlemen of the bar to be, as a rule, devoted disciples to Bacchus, and in more places than one the 'bar' has been a bar to the work of reform in temperance."

That is not a statement to neglect. Such a charge against any class appearing in a respectable newspaper in the name of a respectable person, is a serious matter, and cannot be passed over without detriment. Silence would mean acquiescence and surrender of character and credit. In the present instance, the superior members of the legal profession have been pointedly denounced as drunkards. It was therefore with some surprise that people saw no notice taken of the accusation. On the 18th, however, "A Barrister" appears in the Statesman to tackle the enemy. This limb of the law evidently means work. Without spending breath, he proceeds straight to the point, thus:—

"I beg hereby to call upon Mr. Evans either to substantiate this statement or to withdraw it. It may not be amiss to remind your reverend correspondent that the Nil Durpan trial established the principle that a man (in that case too a missionary) may be successfully prosecuted for a libel against a body of men, just as readily as for a libel against an individual."

Mr. Evans has not yet come forward in reply, but an indifferent amicus curiæ has been sent forward to cover his approach.

BISHOP O'Dwyer, in his Lenten Pastoral, read in the Limerick Diocese, attributes all the poverty and misery of Ireland to intemperance. He denounces in unmeasured terms the almost national practice of the use of drinks at Irish wakes and funerals. We suspect the episcopal artist lays his colours with a spatula, and on this occasion he had charged his palette with black only. Surely, the Irish masses cannot be so very bad. Drunkenness is the special weakness, as the peculiar necessity, of the North, and it is unfair to single out the Irish for impalement for a vice common to a great part of Europe. We do think that the Slavonic or Teutonic peasantry are a whit superior to the Hibernian.

THE Englishman of the 27th February writes:—

"An article on the use of English, by the late Charles Mackay, published since his death in the Nineteenth Century, makes very severe strictures on common inaccuracies of speech and writing. Yet the article itself contains the following sentence, in which singular and plural are strangely confused:—'A concert of music, a garden party, a fête champêtre, or a dinner, festivity, or a ceremony of any kind, is not a function, though the penny-a-liner and the alumni of the Board-school speak and write them as such.'"

That is a shame to British literature to be sure, but it affects more the magazine than the contributor. If Dr. Mackay, in age and weakness, and in the hurry for the next world, made a slip, that was no excuse for the editor to pass it without correction.

Nor are the people of the Englishman more careful. One would suppose that for sometime at least, our contemporary would keep clear of those forms of bad English which, to its knowledge, has been exposed by the late Dr. Mackay. So far from this, we find the same issue from which we take the small paragraph quoted hereinbefore not free from the faults noticed in the very paragraph. Nor is it any poor Eurasian reporter nor Anglo-Indian contributor that is at fault. It is the European specials that are allowed to talk of a party, a concert, a dinner or other festivity as a "function." The truth is, it is the vice of the day.

NAWAB Asman Jah has relieved the Duke of Connaught by taking all his carriages off His Royal Highness's hands, at the magnificent sum of Rs. 20,000. Considering that the Hyderabad Premier already possessed a splendid well-filled coach-house and enjoyed, besides, no end of conveyancing from the state departments, this is proof of no ordinary loyalty in this distant Mahomedan grandee to the House of Brunswick.

Of course, this sort of loyalty must be confined to the few. It is only great Mussulman grandees and ambitious tuft-hunters* that can afford such costly demonstrations. Even they cannot always afford, though they make a show of doing so. The great Salar Jung (the First) was ruined by this loyalty to Europeans, official and non-official, from Princes, M. P.s., globe-trotters, down to the veriest adventurers—until he left to the state, as it ultimately proved, a debt to the tune of between thirty and forty lacs!

Fortunately, there is no such fear in the present case. There are Nawabs and Nawabs, grandees and grandees, even in Hyderabad. There is no comparison between the estate of the Salar Jung and the resources of the Shumsool Omrah family. Twenty thousand Rupees is a flea-bite to Sir Aman Jah. Only, we would rather his good Knightship habitually submitted himself to such minute punctures in some better causes than overwhelming the high and mighty—or the rich and titled—with superfluous succour.

After all, twenty thousand is no joke, even for grandees, royal or extra-royal. To us, at any rate, Rs. 20,000 for the late Commander-in-Chief of Bombay's second-hand carriages strikes as rather an extravagant figure. We do not know what equipage his Royal Highness maintained here. It must have been on a scale of more than the highest European princely grandeur to justify such a price in disposing of it at leaving. Surely, his landau and char-a-banc are not mounted in gold or silver or fitted with pearl pendants! Nor did he trade in horses and carriages like some people of the lawyer caste in our neighbourhood!

So Mr. Pugh and not Mr. Bonnerjea officiates as Standing Counsel. The last seems to have lost the confidence of Government. When the appointment was first offered to Mr. Bonnerjea, he was not disposed to accept it. But now times have changed, and he feels the withdrawal of the honor.

THE Moore-Norton case has not ended satisfactorily to either. Mr. Justice Sheppard has found for the plaintiff and has awarded only Rs. 100 damages against the defendant.

THE Mohunt of Tripati has but slightly succeeded with the Madras High Court. The conviction is upheld, but the sentence is reduced from 3 years' rigorous imprisonment to 18 months' simple confinement. The dishonour is all the same, though he suffers less in body.

THE Tibetan Convention has been signed, and the Amban is the lion of the city.

HIS splendid munificence has earned for Sir Dinshaw Manicjee Petit a baronetcy.

DR. Coates retires from the Medical College and Service. Dr. Birch replaces him in the Principalship.

MR. J. H. Belchambers, for forty years Deputy Registrar of the Appellate Side of the High Court, is at last on the eve of retirement. Mr. W. H. Joyce, the popular Private Secretary to the Chief Justice, succeeds him. This is expected to be a good selection. Mr. Joyce's promotion confirms Mr. J. Lewis as Assistant Registrar.

MR. H. Lee has joined the Calcutta Corporation, as one of the seventy-five, replacing Dr. O'Brien who has resigned, and is being initiated into the Eleusinian mysteries of the Corporation in order to fit him for the Chair which he is shortly to fill.

THE Maharaja of Vizianagram has, with his truly princely liberality undertaken to bear the entire cost of the new Laboratory of Dr. Sircar's Science Association. The estimate is about Rs. 50,000. The Committee have Resolved to call the Laboratory after the Maharaja.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1890.

THE METROPOLIS MEETING IN HUMBLE PROTEST.

THE city has spoken and well. Those who were made to feel have, it is to be hoped, cried sufficiently loud to be heard. A good case has been made out against the oppressive incidence of the municipal law. The citizens assembled in public meeting, at their Town Hall on Monday last, to complain to the Ruling Powers of their hardships from operation of law and at the hands of officials, and they acquitted themselves of the delicate and unpleasant purpose with great judgment, resolutely steering clear of all sources of offence and unnecessary irritation. The Hall was filled to overflowing with the respectable and house-owning classes of the community, from the highest to the humblest. Notwithstanding the influx into the Hall of despairing or excited ratepayers, many of them armed with the preposterous notices of assessment under the new law, the meeting was most orderly and, considering the sufferings of the people, temperate beyond precedent. The speciality of the meeting indeed was moderation. There was no rabid eloquence or rhetorical denunciation. The promoters were far too much in earnest for the mood to attitudinise. The speakers evidently cared only for the business in hand, and meant not to air their talents and accomplishments. The nuisance of the glib tongue could not altogether be eliminated. Where so many professions were represented, the intrusion of Orators could not well be prevented. But the temper of the vast majority undoubtedly kept them in check and there was abatement—in the ordinary sense if not the legal—of the evil. Nevertheless, the connection of these talking machines of flesh and blood must be admitted to have been the weakest part of the whole thing. Their very presence was ominous. But how could that be prevented? There is one gentleman of our community who has been thrown back on us by an indiscreet Government, to its misery and our own, who cannot help himself, to whom the atmosphere of public meetings is the very breath of life.

Meetings, or public calls, he never missed—
To dictate often, always to assist.
Oft he the clergy joined, and not a cause
Pertained to them but he could quote the laws;
He upon tithes and residence displayed
A fund of knowledge for the hearer's aid;
And could on glebe and farming, wool and grain,
A long discourse, without a pause, maintain.

At any rate, every effort should have been made to restrain the interlopers down to a silent vote at most. Their taking an active part in the proceedings was unfortunate. Their interference gives a character of unreality, not to say puerility, to any business.

That was the single flaw in the affair—the sole rift in the lute—the only incident that detracted from the harmony, completeness and force of the meeting of last Monday.

Whatever may be said of the tactical blunder of allowing professional agitators and orators to be the spokesmen of the classes having the most stake in town, the meeting itself was no sham as such connections might lead the Government to suppose. It was a tangible, formidable reality. It was, to begin with, convened by Sheriff Turner, in obedience to the strongest requisition possible, signed as it was by the owners of half the landed property of Calcutta. It was preeminently a native movement—the cry of distress of the permanent population—of those who live in their own houses and expect to die in them, in the firm and pleasing hope that their children and their children's children to the remotest generation will do the same after them—as distinguished from the fluctuating units—the birds of passage. We have seen the propriety of his action questioned, but in the absence of any constitutional precedent to the contrary, we think Mr. Henry Turner can scarcely be blamed for vacating the chair after declaring the meeting open, leaving the assembled citizens to elect their Chairman. Maharaja Jotendro Mohan Tagore, K.C.S.I., seconded by Raja Doorga Churn Law, with the consent of all, offered the Chair to Maharaja Narendra Krishna Bahadur, K.C.I.E. The Chairman, in his opening, spoke of the consternation of the people at the prospect of having to pay on four times the existing assessment on their houses. He said the value of house property, as of all building materials and the price of labour and construction, had enormously increased, and it would be a tremendous hardship were the people called on to pay on their private residences, under the new law, on the existing value of property which had in many cases descended to them, which had been built in the era of cheapness fifty years ago, and which had all been built during a long course of time and the cost whereof was spread over many years. In conclusion, he gave the tone to the demonstration in these characteristic terms:

"I earnestly invite you to discuss the objectionable provisions of the law, and if we succeed in making out a strong case, our good Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Stuart Bayley, will not refuse our humble prayer to amend the unjust provisions of the new Municipal Act."

This tone of loyal trustfulness and dependence on Government, was not only continued but accentuated by Kumar Devendra Mallick, who was called on to move the first Resolution. He not only relied upon the justice of Government but, speaking from personal knowledge of the character of the retiring Chairman of the Corporation, he unfeignedly expected Sir Henry Harrison himself to come to the rescue of his own victims, and assist them in obtaining relief from Government, if he but knows the extent of the mischief he had caused. There is no reason to question the bona fides of this sentiment. It is genuine unsophisticated Orientalism, and proves only that the leaders of this movement come from a wholly different class from the social and intellectual upstarts who, under a misunderstanding of Tom Paine, John Mill and Herbert Spencer, have lost all reverence for parents and society, Government and God. The rigours of the new legislation have forced to the political platform a grave quiet-loving class, respecting themselves and honouring their superiors and rulers, who rarely venture out into the troubled waters of controversy. They are not the men to manufacture grievances; they would never cry unless seriously hurt. Even now, they seem almost ashamed of their situation and as it were ready to accuse themselves of impertinence in coming forward to accuse the authorities. It would be a pity and a shame if such loyalty went unrewarded. The failure of such a modest representation would be a direct premium upon the low arts of blatant agitation and impudent bullying.

For the rest, the Kumar made a capital speech, brief and to the point. He is in feeble health, and could not be heard beyond the precincts of the platform, but his reported words must tell. He moved:—

That this meeting desires to place on record its respectful but emphatic protest against the provisions of section 122 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, which introduces a principle of assessment that is foreign to the law of the land and is opposed to the maxims of English law, as interpreted in a recent case in the High Court; and the meeting views with alarm the severe hardships with which the operation of the Act has been attended in practice, leading to heavy increase in the assessments of dwelling houses.

The question then was seized by the speaking-trumpets. No sooner was the first Resolution seconded by Baboo Damodar Das Burman, than the Surrender Not sprang to his feet and bored the audience until he had torn the question to tatters, absorbing, after his wont, all the talk, and anticipating everybody. Of course, he did not sing in unison with his predecessors. He characteristically defied the Powers—

• My sentence is for open war.

He protested, emphasised, gesticulated, stamped, made himself hoarse, to show how he could—work himself into frenzy for the occasion. He lives in an atmosphere of "protest" and "emphasis." Fortunately for the cause, as an active member of the Corporation for a long series of years, he spoke not without the book. For once, he made a creditable statement, the facts and reasoning of which would have been far more effective, if presented without their vicious setting. Babu Lal Mohan Ghose followed, exposing the erroneous impression under which the preposterous principle of assessing residences had been adopted by Sir Henry Harrison and sanctioned by the legislature. It was understood to be the English principle. If it was English, it would not necessarily be suited to India. But Mr. Ghose challenged Sir H. Harrison to establish its pretension to be English. He had applied to the Chairman for his authority, but Sir Henry had wriggled himself out of it. He had no leisure to grant the doomed citizens even the assured consolation of suffering from a genuine British principle. Mr. Lal Mohan Ghose contended that the English law knew no such principle, and quoted certain recent cases in the High Court and the Chief Justice's dictum.

The second Resolution was moved by Nawab Syud Ahmed Ali, of the Chitpore Family. As a nobleman, he used the right word in confessing that he could not adequately express his sense of "disgust" at the way in which the taxes on bustee or thatched hut lands are levied, the owners of the land being required to pay in advance for all his tenants! The Resolution runs as follows:—

That the provisions of the Municipal Law which make it obligatory upon owners of bustee land to pay the rates leviable from tenants and then to realize them, have entailed serious hardship upon owners and loss of revenue to the Municipality; and this meeting desires to express the earnest hope that this part of the Municipal Law, and other sections which the Committee on further consideration may consider objectionable, may be modified."

After a good speech in Bengali by Baboo Amrita Lal Bose, and a long one in English by Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, Baboo Koonjo Lal Banerjee supplied the comic element by travelling out of the record. He took upon himself to propose, without offering an amendment, that the memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor then before the meeting be condemned, and a new one embodying "other minor objections" unnamed be prepared by the Committee. It is needless to say that there was no Pantaloon to second Harlequin.

The Resolution Final naming a body of gentlemen to carry out the objects of the meeting, was entrusted to Mr. R. D. Mehta. It is a mere formality and is usually performed pro forma. But such an obscure rôle does not suit this young Parsee who, if Ormuzd, the good God, grants life, will yet distinguish himself farther than his worst enemy apprehends. Ingenuity can carve an opportunity under the worst circumstances, and in coming to plough a thoroughly exhausted field, Mr. Mehta was able to contribute some golden sheafs of corn to the harvest of discussion. At the outset, he brought the meeting back to its normal tone with which it had set out before the music was shattered by the Vandals. Lucky Sir Harrison, even the Parsee believes in him! Said he—

I have great pleasure in seconding this resolution. I am quite sure that if we personally lay our grievances and appeal for justice to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, or to the Viceroy if necessary, those high-minded statesmen will, with their usual generosity and concern for the people, redress them. Nor can I bring myself to think that even Sir Henry Harrison will raise difficulties in our way if we are able to convince him that our case is a just one and that we have legitimate grounds of complaint.

Our duty is clear in the matter, we have to go on with our representation, persevere in it, of course with moderation and discretion, and triumph ultimately we must.

Nothing can ruffle his all-round graciousness. He fondly strokes the chin of the lamb he has prepared for immediate sacrifice.

The principle of assessment in the abstract is just, but it is not expedient to put into practice, seeing that it will have the effect of doubling, trebling or quadrupling the amount payable at a single step.

He concluded with a couple of practical suggestions, to wit—

1. Nothing has been provided for outlay on repairs during the six years of the continuance of the assessment. This really puts the valuation higher than it ought to be.

2. The peculiarities in the mode of constructing residential houses forced upon Hindus, Mahomedans, &c., by their habits and customs, should not be liable to taxation, as the measure involves the imposition of an indirect taxation on those habits and customs.

These are original contributions to the subject. The first comes from the man of business. The second shows a higher speculative grasp.

THE BUDGET.

NOTWITHSTANDING some ugly appearances like the increasing drain of our resources in military expenditure, Dewan Barbour has on the whole produced a satisfactory Budget. The Annual Statement for 1890-91 was presented to the daily press in the afternoon of Thursday the 20th, but with instructions not to "publish or make known in any way any portion of it" until it was formally laid before the Viceroy's Legislative Council the next day. With the abolition of the Press Commissionership, there is a tendency to favor the daily to the exclusion of the weekly press. The weekly papers on the Press Commissioner's list are, we believe, equally entitled to the courtesy of Government for such scraps of information as are thought safely communicable to the public, both in the interests of the governors and the governed.

The Budget estimate of 1888-89 shewed a deficit of Rx. 698,000, the revised estimate, made a year later in March 1889, reduced it to Rx. 201,700, the actuals, however, give a surplus of Rx. 37,018.

The estimate of 1889-90, framed in March 1889, shewed a surplus of Rx. 106,300. In revision, after certain special arrangements of figures and transfers, it is made to yield a surplus of Rx. 1,809,700, after restoring the Famine Grant to Rx. 600,000 (or Rx. 1,058,100 including the net charge on the revenues on account of the Protective Railways constructed through the Agency of Companies), and postponing the contribution of Rx. 490,000 from Provincial resources for which credit was taken in the Budget Estimate, to 1890-91. There is a steady permanent improvement under all the main Revenue heads—in Land Revenue, Salt, Excise, Stamps, Provincial Rates, Customs, Assessed Taxes, Forests, Registration, and Tributes from Native States. Bengal Opium gives an increase of Rx. 286,400, for it sold at Rs. 1,136, instead of Rs. 1,070 a chest as originally calculated. There is also a decrease in the expenditure side of Rx. 708,800 for poor crop in the province. There is a saving of about Rx. 200,000 in exchange, originally calculated at Rs. 4'38d. but subsequently taken at Rs. 4'55d a rupee.

For 1890-91, the Budget surplus is Rx. 270,4000. It would have been more but for the heavy and special expenses in connection with the Army. That expenditure for 1890-91 is shewn at Rx. 21,505,100, of which that in England is Rx. 4,620,100 against the revised estimates of Rx. 14,950,000 and Rx. 4,126,600 respectively of 1889-90. There is considerable increase in the English charges, namely, £614,800, for re-arming the British troops with the new rifle and supplying 21 more batteries of 12-pounder breech-loading guns. The Finance Minister prepares the country for similar expenditure in the year 1891-92. And yet he hopes in that year for "a position of comparative ease, with a surplus in hand, moderate in amount, but sufficient to allow of some improvement in financial conditions."

Sir David Barbour affords no relief of any kind from the Income Tax, but raises an additional revenue of Rx. 100,000 by subjecting imported spirits and Indian brewed beer to the same tax as is levied on imported beer.

Not the least notable thing in the present Statement is the declaration on the subject of the Famine Insurance Fund. Under the clearing influence of Parliamentary agitation, the eyes of Indian Bureaucracy are distinctly opening.

Having produced a satisfactory Budget, though not without fresh taxation, the Finance Minister is free to speak freely on the Famine Insurance Fund. He admits the diversion of the Fund to other than its proper uses, but says, the Government is alive to the fact and will make up omissions in future years.

DEATH OF "BEL BABOO."

ONE of the most popular figures of the native stage of the metropolis has been removed by the death, by his own hand, of Amrita Lal Mookerjee, better known as "Bel Baboo." The young man belonged to a well-known Brahman family of Calcutta--the House of the illustrious Doorga Charan Mookerjee. He showed a turn for mimicry from the time when he was a little boy, which afterwards developed into unmistakable genius. His histrionic powers were indeed so remarkable that he could always command attention. He became a favorite of the audience as soon as he joined the professional stage a little over eighteen years ago. Before the pre-actress days--the Age of Darkness, as it may fitly be called, of the modern Indian Theatre--his impersonation of female rôles was as clever as his later male performances were uniformly successful. His Malika in Denobandhu Mitter's Nabin Tupasini is not likely to be forgotten by any one who ever witnessed it. Not the cleverest of lady artistes has ever been able to over-shadow or even equal him there. After the introduction of actresses, up to the time of his death, he filled innumerable characters, in none of which, serious or comic, he failed to make an impression. Always happy in his conception, it was rarely that he overstepped the modesty of nature. But it was more in comic than serious impersonations that "Bel Baboo" betrayed his wonderful force and versatility. His very appearance was a signal for "fun," and he spoke and strutted upon the boards amidst the deafening cheers of an audience turned mad with laughter. Comedy was his forte, and in comedy, he was equally at home, in the high and the low. He was the man who introduced harlequinade on the native stage. As harlequin, he was without a rival; he has hardly yet found an imitator. It was a marvel what an artist in high histrionics was this volatile buffoon. As Gadadhar Chandra in "Sarala," Bel Baboo was more than delightful--simply charming. Gadadhar Chandra will never allow its interpreter to fade away from our memory. In modern India, genius in any art languishes for want of proper appreciation, becoming more a source of mortification than pleasure to its possessor--the Bohemian's art has yet to be recognized amongst us. In the West, the death of a comedian like the late Amrita Lal Mookerjee would be regarded as a great social, if not a national, calamity. Here, in our unformed society, nobody thinks of noticing publicly his death or regards it as much of a loss, and no memento perhaps will remain of his worth except in the wicked columns of Reis and Rayyet. Of course, the Star Theatre was closed on last Wednesday out of respect to the memory of this Prince of Actors, who was one of its main pillars.

THE DUM-DUM MURDER.

ACQUITTAL OF THE PRISONER O'HARA.

In this case, on Monday last, we decided that it was our duty to exercise the power of review given us by the 26th clause of the Letters Patent. We accordingly heard counsel for the prisoner and for the prosecution, and yesterday made an order quashing the conviction, setting aside the judgment and sentence, and ordering the prisoner to be discharged. Having arrived at the conclusion that this must be done, it was our duty to make the order without delay. But as we thought it proper to state our reasons in writing, we deferred until to-day the delivery of our judgment in the case; and we now proceed to state the grounds on which we have considered it our duty to quash the conviction.

In our judgment upon the application for a review of the case, we had stated the reasons which led us to the conclusion at which we arrived, namely, (1) the improper reception of evidence consisting of the communication to the jury of statements said to have been made by two of the witnesses for the prosecution, and (2), a virtual misdirection by the learned Judge to the effect that one of them, Goldsborough, was not, within the meaning of the law, an accomplice, as we have held that he was.

In reviewing the case for the purpose of determining what judgment should be passed upon it, it becomes our duty to decide, whether, apart from the evidence improperly admitted, and apart from what must be considered the natural and reasonable effect of the misdirection in the case, the conviction can be allowed to stand. —See Evidence Act, s. 167, and 9 Bo. H. Ct. Report, 375.

We must therefore consider this case as the jury had they been properly advised would have done, namely, upon the footing, that Goldsborough alias Taylor was not an independent witness but an accomplice within the meaning of the Evidence Act, giving his evidence under pardon conditionally granted to him as a witness in the case, and open to the presumption to which that character made his testimony liable. He is the witness upon whose testimony alone the prisoner is charged with the actual commission of the murder. We have no power, under the Letters Patent, to send back the case for a new trial. We must come to our own conclusion as to the effect of the evidence in the case, using for this purpose, according to the established practice, the notes of evidence taken by the learned Judge in the case, and which he has supplied to us. As Goldsborough is the source and support of the case against the accused, it is absolutely necessary to consider the whole case, changed as its aspect is from that in which it was most probably regarded by the jury.

It was contended for the prosecution, that our functions in reviewing the case were limited to the mere determination of the question whether there was in the case, as before us, sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction.

We are of opinion that the nature of the case was such as to cast upon us a much wider function than this, which would, in truth, have involved us in a repetition of the same error which made it, in our judgment, our duty to review the case. For in treating the evidence in the manner suggested, the consideration of the amount of credit to be given to the witness Goldsborough would have to be excluded, and we should have had to consider only the effect of his evidence (with the rest), assuming it to be free from anything in the nature of a suspicion attaching to it.

From the evidence of Goldsborough and that of Macdermott, who also gave his testimony under a conditional pardon, it appears that these two, with the prisoner O'Hara, and Bellew, while drinking at the canteen, agreed to go out shooting pigs that night, and that for this purpose they left armed with two rifles, and with some ammunition which they somehow obtained.

There appears no reason to doubt that the object of the expedition was, as stated by these witnesses, the pursuit of sport. They had, however, been drinking at the barracks and appear to have been all of them more or less intoxicated when they left, and they seem soon to have forgotten their original object and to have gone in quest of drink. They went towards the village of Gouripore, having left the barracks about 10-30 P.M. On the way they stopped at the house of one Boothnath, woke him and demanded toddy. He took them to a toddy-seller, Ajudia Passi, who gave them some toddy. They next stopped at a druggist's shop on their way, broke into it, took from it a bottle of Eno's salt and some other article of small value. After a while, they went to the house of the deceased, found him lying on his verandah and asked him for toddy. Up to this point the evidence of the two witnesses, generally agrees with that of Boothnath, of Ajudia Passi, of Mataboodin, owner of the dispensary, and of Beta Bebee, widow of the deceased; of these only Boothnath identifies any of the party, an identification upon which we are unable to rely.

The party soon after, according to these witnesses, left the house of the deceased. Goldsborough says O'Hara pulled deceased along. Macdermott says "He came out of his own accord, so far as I know, on our asking him for toddy." They all went, with the deceased, to a tank about 30 or 35 yards to the south of the deceased's house.

As to what happened on their arrival at that place, there is no evidence adduced, save that of Goldsborough. It was stated at the trial by both Goldsborough and Macdermott, that the latter went on in front of the party, and according to their evidence, he was some distance ahead (how far is not distinctly stated) when what Goldsborough narrates is said by him to have taken place.

Goldsborough alias Taylor's statement is as follows:—"The man was sleeping in the verandah, with a mosquito-curtain over him. We asked him for toddy. O'Hara asked. O'Hara pulled him along. Macdermott was in front, Bellew next, O'Hara with the native, and I was last.

"When we got near to a tank the native started murmuring and O'Hara shoved him into the tank up to his waist in water, and whilst he was in the water he murmured again. O'Hara dropped on his knee and fired at him: the man appeared to have been hit: he shouted and threw up his hands. At the moment O'Hara fired I was three yards away. Bellew was a half left turn facing O'Hara. Bellew was 10 or 15 yards from O'Hara. Macdermott was in front still walking on. No one did anything to prevent the native being shoved into the tank. I asked him, O'Hara, 'to get up and not to do it; if anything happened there would be a terrible row.' He said 'Never mind, there are plenty more of the black bastards.' He loaded after he shoved the native into the tank. He was putting the round into the chamber in the act of kneeling. There was a second shot fired by O'Hara a little distance from the tank, after the native had been fired at. At the time O'Hara fired the first shot, the other rifle was in Bellew's hand. Up to the time the native was hit, I had not a rifle in my hands, nor had Macdermott, since he handed his to O'Hara. The native was about 10 yards off when O'Hara fired at him. The native was up to his waist in water. He was on a lower level. O'Hara's second shot was fired at nothing. I did not see when he loaded the second time. I think Bellew's rifle was first loaded, after leaving the tank, on the main road. We passed round another small tank, then took a southerly direction for a long distance. We got some more toddy. I got up trees for it. We went on and took a turn to the left, and came to a tope of trees and we all four fired at chatties. We each one loaded a rifle as we wanted to fire. I got a rifle from Bellew, and used one of my own cartridges. I gave O'Hara one or two more cartridges. I fired two or three shots. We went on and came out on the Jessore road again. When I had fired I handed the rifle back to Bellew, left empty cartridges there. When we came out [on Jessore Road] we sat down and drank toddy. We got on a cart to ride part of the way and got into barracks. It was about 2-30 A.M., when we got back to barracks. I sat on the steps for 10 minutes and unlaced my boots and went to bed."

The moon was full on that date. It was a bright night: and at that time of the night the moon must have been high.

Therefore Goldsborough's story is that, in bright light, the three men, namely, he, O'Hara, and Bellew being so close together, this desperate murder was committed by O'Hara, who before their eyes, knelt down, loading as he did so, and fired upon the deceased.

Macdermott says:—

"The native left the house with us four. I led out first. When I got on the road I found there was no one with me. He came out of his own accord so far as I know, on our asking him for toddy. I did not look back to see how the others were coming. I got to a pond and went past it. I can't say whether we passed another. We got out on the road from the path. I remember passing only one pond. I do not remember passing two ponds. I came till I got to a road which turned to the right. I heard two shots fired, after which I turned round to look for my comrades. I walked, went towards them up to the tank I noticed. I went about fifteen yards. I found my three comrades. I had not my senses properly at the time. I looked for the native, and saw him standing out in the pond. I asked my comrades whether they gave him a swim. They made no reply; they were laughing. We came away on to the main road again. We had to go back 40 or 50 yards from this spot to get into the main road. We then turned again to our right. I could not say who had the rifles. I swear I do not know in whose hands the rifles were when I went back to the pond. We then saw some toddy trees to the left, and I went up a tree to take toddy down.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Travellers and Emigrants.—Those who cross the seas change the climate, but they do not change the constitution. The altered conditions of life, the exigencies of travel and other causes render the traveller and emigrant peculiarly liable to diseases and accidents when far from efficient medical aid. With these associated remedies at hand they may be said to have a physician always at their call, and they may be certain that situations will be constantly arising in which they will require a ready resource in time of need. The directions for use which accompany each box and pot of Holloway's Pills and Ointment are written in plain and simple language, and are applicable in all cases.

I did not get it down, but Taylor did. We got two chatties which we took home. I carried them. Taylor told me to come down, as I knew nothing about it. I carried both chatties. He got both down."

That is the evidence given by these two witnesses in their direct examination. In cross-examination Macdermott said—"The two shots were fired rapidly; there was no time to load between them: but they were not together. There was just an interval of clapping hands between them." The widow of the deceased states that her husband was brought into the house at what time of the night she does not say by her mother-in-law and one Luchman, and that he died about daybreak. Luchman was examined for the prosecution, but gave no evidence as to his bringing the deceased into the house. There is nothing to show how, or when he got back to his house.

The medical evidence shows that the death of the deceased was caused by a wound inflicted by one bullet, fired, in the opinion of the Surgeon, from a higher elevation than where the deceased was when he was struck by it, and from a distance of about 10 yards. This bullet entered about 2½ inches above the right collar bone, passed through the left lung out at the left side and broke the left arm of the deceased. Death was caused by internal hemorrhage.

It need hardly be observed that, when it is said that the evidence of an accomplice needs corroboration, it does not by any means necessarily follow that his evidence, when corroborated, ought to be or will be accepted. In that case we are of opinion that even were we to take it that in some of the less important parts of his story Goldsborough is corroborated, his evidence is not, on the whole, such as could be safely acted on.

In several points Goldsborough's evidence is without corroboration:—

1. That Macdermott handed the rifles to O'Hara at the start of the expedition.

2. That he handed ammunition to O'Hara near the dispensary; a statement which he admits he did not make to the magistrate, but made for the first time at the trial.

3. That O'Hara laid hold of deceased and pulled him along: save that the widow does say that one of the soldiers seized him by the arm.

4. That O'Hara shoved deceased into the tank.

5. That he knelt down, loading his rifle in the act, and fired, shooting the deceased.

It is not necessary to deal with contradictions, of which some exist, in the evidence of Goldsborough. He has certainly by his own admissions mended his evidence since his first going before the magistrate. At the trial he admitted that his evidence there differed, from what he had at first said, in several respects. At first he said Bellew led the party when going to the tank; he now says that Macdermott went first: a change which obviously made a serious difference in the case as to Bellew.

It was at the trial that he, for the first time, said that O'Hara loaded as he was in the act of dropping on his knees: it was then, also, that he first said that he had supplied O'Hara with any cartridges.

But there is a contradiction between his story and that of the other witness Macdermott which is such as to exclude the possibility of acting on Goldsborough's evidence. Macdermott deposes to two shots close together, while the party were at the tank and before he returned to it. Goldsborough's story is wholly inconsistent with this; he states positively that one shot only was fired at that time, and that it was the first shot which was fired after they left the deceased man's house. If Macdermott is speaking the truth, Goldsborough swears what is untrue, and it is quite impossible that this can be either by mistake or for any other innocent reason. If that second shot was fired, why did Goldsborough not state it? Who fired the second rifle? Not Bellew, for Goldsborough did not say so. Who else?

We cannot reject Macdermott's statement; and we think this inconsistency in the case for the prosecution renders it impossible to accept and act on Goldsborough's evidence of what passed at the tank, unless it be confirmed by other evidence, which it is not.

The conclusion is that the conviction for the crime of murder cannot be supported: and under the circumstances we consider that there is no proper course to be taken in this case save to quash the conviction and set aside the judgment and sentence.

NORRIS, J.—I have endeavoured to consider this case in the light in which I should have directed the jury to regard it, if I had properly directed them that Goldsborough was an accomplice, and in that light I have been unable to rely upon Goldsborough's testimony and I do not find in Macdermott's evidence sufficient corroboration to warrant my acting upon it.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not milenge, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE SAGE AND THE NYMPH.

A TALE FROM THE SANSKRIT.

BENEATH a fig tree's spreading shade,
A holy Sage his dwelling made !
Of twisted reeds and tendrils wove,
And grass and broad leaves strewed above,
The sultry noon to intercept,
Or noxious night dews as he slept.
But noon or eve, in cold or heat,
The tree's fantastic root his seat,
He pored upon the sacred book,
Or pondered how from fleshly nook
To weed away, as deadly sin
All feeling of the man within,
Or good or bad ; the heart that chains
To this world's pleasures, or its pains !
That from such vile corruption free
His spirit far from earth should flee,
For ever from existence mounting
Back to its pure primæval fountain.

In no unkindliness to man,
Markanda's life austere began.
No deed of violence repented,
No hope deceived, no wrong resented ;
Nor age, affecting to deplore
The follies it can share no more.
Scarce had he traversed half the span
That destiny has fixed for man,
Though lonely thoughts and hermit's fare,
Had done the work of time and care,
And on his furrow'd brow appears,
The vestige of declining years.
Not distant from his cottage lay
A city, whence some few would pay
A visit to the Hermit's cell,
For counsel sage or magic spell ;
And in requital carry there,
Milk, curds, or fruit, to aid his fare :
Whilst near at hand, a bubbling tide,
Meet beverage for his meals supplied.

Once, as at dawn, upon his mat,
Before his hut, Markanda sat,
In meditation plunged profound
On man and life, a buzzing sound,
Of voices came—he raised his eyes
And marked with calm but deep surprise,
A female train that through the wood
Came hurrying, and before him stood.
Of costlier garb, and prouder mien,
Two dames before the rest were seen ;
The one of matron form and face,
The other rich with every grace

That beauty in its blossom heightens,
And youth with glow unfaded brightens.
Her eyes upon the ground were cast
In modest mood, and pensive past
Across her cheek, a sober shade
Of thought, where smiles had fitter played.
The features of the dame expressed,
Some stormy passion swelled her breast ;
Which thus in sobbing accents broke,
As trembling, to the Sage she spoke :—

" Most reverend Sir, if I have ever
The laws our faith instils received ;
And a devout and firm believer,
In all our Brahmins teach, believed :—

" If duly at the morning hour,
Mid-noon, or at the sun's decline,
My humble offering, fruit, or flower,
Hath still been laid at holy shrine :—

" If I have held the ' gods of earth,*'
In reverence like the gods of heaven ;
And ever, at my widow'd hearth,
A hospitable welcome given :—

" So may you listen to my prayers,
So to my earnest suit attend ;
Or thence, at least, a mother's cares,
To hear with pity condescend.

" This girl has, from her infant years,
Been cherished as my dearest treasure ;
The object of my hopes and fears,
My only care, my only pleasure :

" Confiding that maturity
Would a sure recompense confer,
And that her age would yield to me,
All that in youth I gave to her.

" The gods had gracious done their part,
And crown'd her days with health and beauty ;
'Twas mine to see, that taste, and art,
And talent, should perform their duty.

" To read, to write, to paint, to dress,
To dance, to sing, to sound the lute ;
And with the rolling eye express,
What hearts would say, when tongues are mute ;

" All this, and use of varied speech,
And skill in various games, was taught her :
All that to courtly maids they teach,
My anxious love secured my daughter—

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

"Secured in vain, for now she flies
This life's enjoyments with disdain :
Her sole desire, in heavenly skies
To dwell, and ne'er be born again :

"And distant from the world's delusion,
Her graces and her charms to hide,
She seeks some thicket's dark seclusion
With bears and lions to abide.—

"But tell, oh tell her, thoughts of heaven
Should not in tender maids have birth ;
Who, like the stars of night are given
To scatter light and love on earth."—

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

WE have much pleasure in laying before the lovers of poetry the opening of an ancient Aryan story, rendered in English verse by a distinguished writer. More when we complete it.

THE Viceroy leaves Calcutta tomorrow at 6-15 P.M., Calcutta time. The departure will be private—a kindness to the would-be satellites which will scarcely be appreciated. His Excellency visits Saharanpore, Dehra, Mussoorie and Chakrata, and arrives at Simla on or about the end of April. The legislature in India has thought fit to abolish the sabbath, and Governors do not mind travelling on Sundays. Lord Lansdowne will be accompanied by Lady Lansdowne, Colonel J. C. Ardagh, C.B., Private Secretary to the Viceroy, Surgeon-Major E. H. Fenn, Surgeon to the Viceroy, Captain H. A. Pakenham, A.D.C., Captain G. C. Lister, A.D.C., Mr. F. W. Latimer, and Lord William Beresford. The last will be with the Viceroy till only the 18th April, when the Military Secretary goes on leave. The Viceregal Court will, we are sure, feel the separation—and all who have to deal with, or come within the influence of, the Court. The Mastership of Ceremonies may not be a great thing, but it is a most delicate office, and a perfect master of ceremonies is as valuable as it is a rare possession. Lord William was such a master by virtue of his unceremoniousness—his straightforward handling of matters and his frank genial courtesy. He was no wise old world ass of a Polonius, but a downright English gentleman. We can say this without suspicion of flattery now he is going away, possibly for good. We may add that we speak from observation and from credible report, not having ourself the honour of his Lordship's personal acquaintance.

To perpetuate the memory of the visit of Prince Albert Victor of Wales to India, the 1st Regiment of Punjab Cavalry, Punjab Frontier Force, will in future be known as "The 1st (Prince Albert Victor's Own) Regiment of Punjab Cavalry."

SOME of the English papers report that "a religious American millionaire has offered the Sultan of Turkey the sum of one hundred thousand dollars on condition that he will embrace the Christian faith." This is characteristically national. In America, we have a people who professing Christianity believe in the Almighty Dollar. As for the hard-pressed monarch of insolvent Turkey, there need be no doubt about the reception of the cool proposition. We can already see the unspeakable Chief of an unspeakable people grinning and cursing audibly—the Kambakht and Kafir!

THE Duke of Seville, for speaking disrespectfully of Queen Christina of Spain, was condemned to a fortress from which he escaped. Her Majesty has now made a virtue of necessity, and pardoned the Duke.

IN Sicily, four ruffians got into a train when leaving the station of Ficcarazze, and, entering one of the baggage-waggons, bound the guard and porter in charge of the luggage, broke open a chest, took £,000 lire and goods valued at 4,000 lire, and decamped before the train could reach the station of Palermo.

HERE is the latest revelation of the criminal progress of Christendom, and it is startling enough in all conscience!

"The body of a man, aged about thirty, was found recently in a wood near Princeton, Canada, and it was clear that the deceased had been murdered. The corpse has been identified as that of Mr. Frederick C. Benwell, an Englishman, who arrived in New York in the Britannic on Feb. 1. He travelled with a young man named Pelley and with a married couple named Burchell, all going to the Niagara Falls. On leaving there Mr. Benwell went to London, Ontario, for the purpose of buying a farm, and was not heard of again till his dead body was discovered. A statement made in connection with the murder tends to show that a plot was concocted in England to lure young men to Canada, and there murder them for their money. The name of the man Burchell, who has been arrested on suspicion, is prominently mentioned in this statement. Mr. Benwell is said to be the son of a Colonel Benwell, living at Cheltenham; and Mr. Pelley, who travelled with Mr. Benwell and the Burchells, is described as the son of an English clergyman."

The feats of the poor Indian Badmashes in their palmy days pale before the elaborate, circumstantial and sustained villainy of these enlightened and refined Thugs.

IT is said that the Czar has prohibited the Princess Dolgorouki, the morganatic wife of his late father, and her family from re-entering Russia. She also ceases to own the Russian estates given her by the late Czar, valued at thirty million roubles. She will be allowed a full compensation of fifteen million roubles for the loss of the estates—according to the arithmetic and equity of Autocracy.

A PERSIAN letter intimates that the Czar soon visits his Central Asian provinces, where preparations are making for his reception.

HERE is a providential escape:—

"While two children were playing near the top of the cliff at Auchmutie, Arbroath, they slipped, and rolled down a glassy slope that terminates in a perpendicular precipice. Several persons who witnessed the accident hastened down to the beach, expecting to find the mangled bodies of the children. They were, however, amazed to find the little ones on their feet and practically uninjured, their only injuries being a few slight scratches. The height of the cliff, according to the Ordnance Survey Map, is 145 feet."

Age might have sustained, under the circumstances, a series of fractures, simple and compound, to say nothing of the nervous shock, the giddiness, and the rest of it.

A RARE phenomenon was visible at St. Malo on the 5th March. Between four and five in the afternoon, a little above the western horizon, in a row, were seen three suns. The central luminary shone with unwonted brilliancy, and the other two supporters darted rays of all the prismatic colours. Simultaneously, at a little distance, a rainbow shewed itself upside down, with its convex towards the horizon.

MR. William O'Brien, M.P., v. Lord Salisbury is still hanging fire. There was judgment for the defendant, and a new trial was refused by the Divisional Court. The plaintiff applied and has obtained time for entering an appeal against the decision of the Divisional Court, on giving security for costs for 100*l.* There was opposition on behalf of the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff was an impecunious man and ample security should be taken if time was granted. It appears that Lord Salisbury has already borne heavy costs, namely, at the Manchester trial 3,500*l.* in the Divisional Court 250*l.*

British justice seems as costly at Home as Abroad. Had Lord Salisbury been Governor-General of India, or for that matter an Assistant Magistrate or Collector or Sub-Opium Agent or a District Superintendent of Police in India, instead of a maker of Indian rulers that he is, he would not have to pay a farthing out of his own pocket. That is a material difference—for the taxpayers.

THE High Court has revised the Rules for the admission of Advocates. The old Rules, dated the 1st of July, 1874, have been repealed and the new ones came into effect from the 1st March 1890. Any person entitled to practise as a Barrister in England or Ireland, or as an Advocate in the principal Courts of Scotland, who is of good character, may be admitted as an advocate of the Calcutta High Court. He must apply by letter to the Registrar, Original Side, and file along with testimonials to character a certificate testifying to his eligibility to practise as a Barrister or an Advocate in the United Kingdom. If the Judges accept him, he will be admitted on payment of the admission fee. He will be awarded a certificate of admission under the signature of the Registrar and the seal of the Court. Any Advocate may, on the payment of a fee of Rs. 5 in Court fee stamps obtain a certificate, under the same signature and seal, showing that his name is borne on the roll of Advocates of the Calcutta High Court. The names of Advocates are to be entered alphabetically on a roll and kept by the Registrar, Original Side, and to be open to all persons for inspection without fee or reward.

SURGEON-General Sir Benjamin Simpson, M.D., K.C.I.E., retires from the service from this date, without any other appreciation by the Government of India of his past services than that evidenced by the knighthood conferred previously. Deputy Surgeon-General W. R. Rice, M.D., Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, N.W. Provinces, takes Dr. Simpson's place as Surgeon-General and Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India.

Mr. Gay, Comptroller-General, is more fortunate. He goes on furlough for nineteen months and a half from the 16th April 1890, and probably does not rejoin. The Governor-General in Council in anticipation of his retirement, records "his high appreciation of the public services rendered by Mr. Gay."

Mr. C. J. O'Donnell, C. S., has recovered caste, and has been placed in charge, as Superintendent, of the Census Operations from the 1st April, 1890.

DURING the absence, on privilege leave, of Mr. G. H. Simmons, Mr. J. H. Apjohn will act as Vice-Chairman of the Calcutta Port Trust. Mr. C. E. Symth's time on that Board is up, and the Chamber of Commerce has elected Mr. H. B. H. Turner in his place.

THE next Half-yearly Departmental Examination of Assistants and Deputy Magistrates and of Officers of the Police, Jail, Medical and Forest Departments in the Chota Nagpore Division will begin at Ranchi, on the 21st April next.

THE First Half-yearly Examination of Compounders will commence, at the Temple Medical School at Bankipore on the 7th April.

ANOTHER development of the Post Office of India. From the 1st April 1890, parcels may be exchanged between India and South Australia on terms and conditions applicable to parcels addressed to Victoria, Australia.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Owing to extraordinary pressure on our space, we are compelled to decline or to postpone many communications of interest, as to pass over several topics. Our respected correspondent "An Observer" (Panihati) who writes on the silver difficulty must wait till next week.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

BOTH the Queen and the Prince of Wales are away on the Continent. The Queen left Portsmouth on the 25th instant and arrived at Aix-les-Bains yesterday. Prince George of Wales completed on the 20th March his special course of gunnery instruction on board the Excellent at Portsmouth, and has gone to Germany in the company of his father to witness the military manœuvres. The Prince of Wales and his son arrived at Berlin on the 21st, and were received at the station by the Emperor, the Royal Princes and Empress Frederick. There was a banquet at night. In proposing the visitor's health, the Emperor eulogised the Army and Navy of England and repeated the hope, he expressed while in England, that the English Army and Navy would always act in concert with Germany in the interests of peace. Next day, the 22nd, there was a Grand Chapter of the Order of the Black Eagle, and Prince George of Wales was decorated along with various members of the Diplomatic Service and statesmen. On the 24th, there was an inspection of the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland's Own Dragoon Regiment, after which the Emperor William and the Prince of Wales dined with the officers. The Emperor drank, amid much enthusiasm, the toast of the Queen, the Honorary Chief of the Regiment. There was a dinner too at the British Embassy, at which the Prince of Wales and the Emperor proposed each other's health and wished the two nations continued prosperity. Prince Albert Victor of Wales, who has just finished his tour in India, has been admitted as a Major in the German Blucher Hussars of which the Prince of Wales is Colonel.

PRINCE Bismarck has taken farewell of his Emperor. They parted in all cordiality. The Emperor embraced and kissed the Prince. The retired Chancellor will bear the title of Duke as his second title. The Prince of Wales, now on a visit to the Emperor, has lunched with Prince Bismarck. Count Herbert Bismarck has also given up the Foreign Secretaryship, and Caprivi succeeds both father and son. Emperor William has assured Emperor Francis Joseph that the new Chancellor will preserve the triple alliance existing between Germany, Austria and Italy. General Caprivi and Counts Kalnoky and Crispi will shortly hold a conference.

THE Berlin Labour Conference closes to-day. At Kropenick—a suburb of Berlin—a workmen's meeting to discuss the eight-hours' question, waxed warm and developed into a riot. The gendarmes were called in to restore order. They charged and wounded several of the crowd, and the crowd hurt two of the gendarmes.

MR. Balfour, the Irish Secretary, has introduced the Irish Land Purchase Bill. He proposes to amalgamate the Landed Estates' Court and the Land Commissioners' Board of Works into the Land Department for the purposes of the Act. He prescribes 20 years' purchase at a net rent without arrears. The Government advances three millions, which is secured upon a county contribution, the tenant paying four per cent. annuity. When the grant is exhausted, it will be re-advanced as it is repaid, thereby securing a perpetual fund. A separate treatment is suggested for congested areas. The measure is permissive, not compulsory. Mr. Gladstone pronounced it the most complex ever introduced into the House of Commons, but thought it ought not to be made a party question. The second reading has been fixed for 14th April next.

THERE was serious rioting on Thursday, the 22nd, among the students of the Moscow University. They demanded certain reforms in regulations which were refused. Five hundred arrests were made. Troops are guarding the neighbourhood, and traffic is forbidden. The students are found implicated with the Army officers in a plot against the Czar.

THE House of Lords has adopted without a division the report of the Parnell Commission. The Gladstonian-Liberals did not vote, but recorded a protest against the adoption.

OXFORD has beat Cambridge in the boat race. Both boats led alternately, Cambridge had won the toss and had the best position. The race is said to have been the finest ever known. The weather was lovely, and the crowd of spectators vast. Cambridge was a strong favorite but Oxford, after a severe contest, proved superior by one length.

UNCOVERING the head for salute has been abolished in the British Navy. Perhaps, it is considered an unhealthy custom, exposing the saluter to cold. The Admiralty have ordered that instead of raising the hat, a sailor shall salute his officers after the military fashion, but with the side of the hand not the palm to the front. An Army Order prohibits quartermasters of cavalry to wear the cocked hat, but allows them to assume "the full-dress head-dress worn by other officers of their respective regiments."

FLOOD and fire have made a sad havoc in America. A disastrous cyclone has devastated the Ohio valley from Cincinnati to Cairo. There is disaster at Louisville. Eight hundred lives have been lost, three hundred houses demolished, the City Hall with 300 dancers overthrown, and the railway station blown bodily into the raging waters of the Ohio. The falling of houses was followed by fire which added to the confusion and death. The dykes at Greenville, Mississippi, are strained to the utmost, and a fresh disaster is expected every moment.

AUSTRIA has decided to spend four million florins on smokeless powder, and the Minister for War has the command of the Emperor to apply to the Delegations for the grant.

OLD Europe is wont to "chaff" young America as "go-ahead." But the sneer invariably recoils upon the sneerer. There is not a smarter fellow under the sun than Cousin Jonathan. There is not a more knowing Government than that of Uncle Sam. Take Alaska, and compare its Past and its Present! Paradoxical, not to say absurd, as it may sound, it was not without extreme unwillingness that Europe voluntarily delivered that country into American possession. Alaska was an appanage of the House of Romanoff—a Province of the Great Northern Empire. It was one of the Russias of which the Czar is the Autocrat. But it was no good—of no more use than to swell the already swollen titles and possessions of that Sovereign. It lay a dead weight on his hands. It was a weakness to the state—a drain on its resources. It did not pay its own way. The statesmen of Russia were heartily sick of it. Yet they had not the heart to give it up. Earth-hunger is a well-known Muscovite weakness. The idea of empire over all the Continents of the Northern Hemisphere was dear to the Russian imagination, and the fact no doubt conferred prestige on the Power. At last, under the financial stress of the last war, Russia disposed of her America for a consideration. She cemented her friendship with the Great Republic of North America by making it over to the latter.

The courts of Europe thought that the Czar had made a bargain, though he got less than 2 million pounds for a vast territory. Of course, the suggestion was that Uncle Sam had been "done in the eye"—as the vulgar phrase goes—by the wily Bear. The question was asked, what will Uncle Sam do with it? But Sam always knows what he is about. And, besides, he has the gift of making good out of evil, if necessary. He did not covet Alaska for a mere costly feather in his diadem. He would not maintain the white elephant like a living god for magnificent worship, but has made it work for him and his as an honest beast. Alaska was purchased from Russia by the United States for 7,200,000 dols. Under the last lease, these islands of what was formerly known in geography as Russian America yielded a revenue of 6,350,000 dols on fur seals. The new lease is expected to secure 20,000,000 dols, or an annual revenue of about 1,000,000 dols. We wish our Government might take a leaf out of the book of American statesmanship.

THE extraordinary overproduction of silver in our generation has caused a currency difficulty throughout the civilised world. That difficulty is nowhere so embarrassing as in America, where the production has been greatest. The Americans are, however, showing the Old World a good example of intelligent activity in dealing with the crisis. After a series of delicate negotiations, they have appointed delegates from all the States of their Continent to meet and discuss the subject and, if possible, find out a remedy. The latest news is that a Committee of the Pan-American Congress recommends the coinage of a common silver dollar for legal tender for all American nations and the issue by the United States of certificates on bullion deposited by the people of the Central or South American States. It is expected that the said Congress will adopt these suggestions.

WE have been able to gather the following stray bits of economic and commercial information from various sources, and lay them before the reader for what they are worth. In the issue of the 13th May 1888, the "London and China Telegraph" has the following note:—

"Of late shark-fishing has been usually successful on the Java coast. The flesh of these creatures, hard and tough as it is, finds ready sale as an article of food. Salted and dried, it answers among the natives as relish to rice. Shark's fins also meet demand among the Chinese, who look upon them as strengthening diet."

If measures were taken on a large scale for catching sharks in and about India, our ordinary fish supply would be appreciably augmented, while the dried and salted sharks themselves furnished an addition of cheap food for the million.

MR. G. Strachey, Her Majesty's Chargé d' Affaires at Dresden, in a despatch to the Foreign Office, dated the 11th May 1888, with respect to the sale of cocoanut butter in Saxony, says:—

"The local sanitary police decided some time since that the regulations of the margarine law were applicable to cocoanut butters. On the complaint of some Munnheim makers of the article, the provincial authorities quashed this decision as illegal."

They ruled that a cocoanut butter, being on analysis to be in the nature of a pure vegetable fat, was not a preparation similar to animal butters in the sense of the margarine law. This surrogate might, therefore, lawfully bear the designation of cocoanut butter and could be sold without restriction."

Where are cocoanut butters in India? Ghee having been abolished, we badly want an honest substitute.

AGAIN, the Earl of Lytton, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, in a despatch to the Foreign Office, dated the 3rd May 1889, encloses copy of a decree of the French President, applying to Guadeloupe the law of the 4th March 1887 and the official regulations of the 8th May 1888, relative to the repression of the frauds in the sale of butters.

THE following particulars respecting the egg trade of Denmark are extracted from a report to the Foreign Office, dated the 15th April last, by Mr. Conway Thornton, Her Majesty's Chargé d' Affaires at Copenhagen, and issued as a Memorandum by the Agricultural Department of the Privy Council:—

"About the year 1866-67 the total exportation of egg from Denmark is stated to have been, annually, about 45,000 score, with a declared value of 32,400 kroner, Danish money, equivalent to 1,800 sterling.

In the year 1877 the total had risen to 944,000 score, at a value of 925,000 kroner, or 51,388*l*.

In the year 1885 the number exported was 3,624,480 score, representing a value of kroner 3,359,893 or 186,660*l* nearly.

In 1886 the figures given are 4,650,500 score, value in kroner 4,030,121 or 223,895*l* nearly, and in 1887 5,546,725 score valued at kroner 4,725,255 or about 262,514*l*."

A COMMUNICATION, dated the 6th May last, encloses to the Secretary of the London Office of the Inspectorate General of Chinese Maritime Customs, a statement, from which it appears that the number of foreign type merchant vessels owned by Chinese at the Treaty Ports on 31st December 1888 was 135, with a total displacement of 34,426 tons. Of this total, 72, with a tonnage of 9,910 tons, were sailing vessels, and 63, with a tonnage of 26,519 tons, were steamers.

THE President of the Stockton-on-Tees Chamber of Commerce, at the annual meeting, said that the Teesside salt field now covered an area of 11 square miles of the average thickness of 70 feet. In some places the stratum was even 100 feet thick, and there every acre contained 200,000 tons of salt. According to him, there was sufficient salt in the district to supply the whole world for 800 years.

A GENTLEMAN of the name of Leiner, who had formerly been in the army and risen to majority, was serving a tradesman—a beer agent—as an office clerk in Vienna. One day, coming out of a bank after cashing for his master 37,600 florins and putting them in his pocket-book, he suddenly fainted and fell down insensible. On recovering soon after, he missed the money, pocket-book and all. Some one must have taken advantage of his helplessness, he declared, to purloin the pocket-book. The Police suspected Leiner himself, to the derision of his master who believed his clerk incapable of theft. Leiner afterwards issued an advertisement allowing the purloiner or possessor of the note-book with its contents, the option of keeping for his own use and enjoyment 7,600 florins if he just quietly, without disclosing himself, returned him by post the balance, 30,000 florins. We must here, for the sake of what follows, give the very words of the account which is going the round:—

"After writing several letters he went in an omnibus to the Central Cemetery, and, standing on the grave of his first wife, he shot himself dead with a revolver. Early in the afternoon his employer received an unpaid letter, which when opened was found to contain the 30,000 florins. The address was printed, and cut from one of the advertisements published in the morning. Had the poor fellow waited a few hours longer before committing suicide the proof of his innocence would have been seen from the letter. There are, however, some persons who think that it was he who, before shooting himself, put the money into the post office."

These "some persons" are a horrible lot, many, we are afraid, imagine. We confess we incline to think with the "horribles;" they have a truer appreciation of that living paradox, man, and show an insight into the deeper mysteries of our nature. For us, however, at this distance, depending on a meagre scrap of fifth-hand report, there are special difficulties in arriving at a confident conclusion. The very chronology of the transaction is defective. It is not clear whether Leiner shot himself the very morning the advertisement appeared. If that was the case, poor Leiner's memory must remain forever burdened with the Pelion upon Ossa of reproach—the suspicion of having sealed treacherous larceny with suicidal blood.

MR. Labouchere has labelled the Premier as—Untruth thy name is Salisbury. In addressing a meeting in North St. Pancras on March 1, the day after his suspension from the House of Commons for systematically refusing to withdraw the offensive expression that he did not believe Lord Salisbury, he said :—

"It was a matter of the most absolute indifference to him what the majority in the House decided in regard to him or upon many other more important subjects. He regarded the majority of the House of Commons as the most disreputable crew of men that ever Providence in His wrath inflicted upon a people. Why was he suspended? The House of Commons seemed to think that the members for Northampton should be very believing men. The House of Commons not many years ago expelled his colleague because he did not believe in things heavenly; they suspended him (Mr. Labouchere) because he would not believe in things of the earth, earthy. He declined to believe in the Marquess of Salisbury. He would like to see the Conservative who would stand up and say on his honour that he believed one single word the Marquess of Salisbury ever said. When people wanted to say that a person was telling a lie, and wished to say it civilly, they said, 'You tell a Salisbury.' He thought Lord Salisbury, when he (Mr. Labouchere) said he would not believe him, would consider it a delicate flattery. Everybody liked to excel in some particular character. Lord Salisbury's speciality was that he could not tell one single word of truth."

At another meeting, to influence the same election in favor of a rival candidate, Lord George Hamilton remarked :—

"He devoted his attention to what he called the deplorable incidents of the previous night in Parliament, and after describing what took place said that while the debate was in progress he said to his neighbour, 'Why is our time thus taken up with such things?' 'Oh,' was the reply, 'do not you know what it is done for? It is to influence the North St. Pancras election.' He found that was the general opinion in the lobbies, and he saw that night that Mr. Labouchere was advertised to address a meeting in St. Pancras. They must recollect that since Mr. Labouchere had been in political life he had been playing the same game. Personal calumny and mendacious tittle-tattle were the weapons with which he fought. If his career were cut short the whole thing to be said of him would be that he had devoted his life to making personal calumny profitable. If they returned Mr. Graham at the head of the poll, not only would they be doing great service in maintaining the unity of the Empire, but a still greater service in striking a deadly blow at the malpractices of political black-guardism. It was regrettable that any section of a political party should ever sink to such methods."

But Labouchere, however, won the day. The election turned in favor of Mr. Bolton (G. R.) by 108 votes against the Conservative candidate Mr. Graham.

THE Tichborne claimant has announced that his case will be re-opened in April. A fund of 150,000*l.* has been guaranteed towards the necessary legal and other expenses. He is staying at the Plough Hotel, Far Green, Hanley, and looks remarkably well. Every evening he delivers free discourses on his last trial. He has found that of the 385 witnesses, 272 were positives and 113 negatives.

Let nobody laugh at this Udyoga Parva of the Tichborniad—these preparations for recommencing a lost—all too lost—game. No matter the cause has been over and over condemned, no matter the impudent Claimant has been thrice slain, his chances are not all exhausted, so long as there are subtle lawyers and incompetent judges. Law is a strange land of contradiction—of Hope and Ruin. It is a region of surprises. Nothing here is so certain as the unexpected. From what we have recently witnessed in India, we see no ground to despair of the fortunes of the adventurous butcher. It was Orton's misfortune to fall into the hands of a crazy irascible Irishman as his advocate, who in the same breath ruined both client and counsel—his own good self. Had the Claimant been advised by, say, a Charles Paul, had his case been argued and watched over by a James Woodroffe, what wonder that the perspicacity of a Coleridge would have been eclipsed!

THE Government Resolution on the Sone Canals Committee's report shows the usual difficulties of dealing with recommendations of Commissions and Committees of Enquiry, where such recommendations involve material changes of administrative principles or policy. Minor suggestions are more easily given effect to, but where more fundamental questions are in issue, a Commission may argue ever so conclusively, the Government always fight shy of its proposals. It is thus that Commissions after Commissions have sat and collected evidence and reported, without much good coming of it in the end. In the case of the Sone Canals Committee, some of the matters which it was required to report upon were of the gravest import. The complaints against the canals were not merely directed against the assessment of the water-rate or the exactions of irrigation departmental officers, but against irrigation itself. It was alleged, for instance, that canal water has an actually deteriorating effect upon the soil, and a desire was expressed for reverting to old methods of irrigation from wells and reservoirs. An equally, if not more, serious grievance, was the injury alleged to be done by irrigation to the health of the districts by the dampness of the soil occasioned by its channels, and 2ndly by the obstruction to drainage caused by the canal embankments. These and some other equally grave matters were referred to the Committee for investigation and report. The Committee went into these questions and made enquiries with a great degree of pains and diligence.* But cui bono? The Committee's finding as to the reality of the alleged grievances can hardly lead to any practical results. The Epidemic Commission similarly found the Railway Embankments to have occasioned the malaria from which the country was free before. But was it possible for the Government to do away with the Railways in order to secure the health of the people? In the same way, it is now too late to complain of the canals, which must be accepted with their evils for the measure of protection they afford in seasons of deficient rain-fall against the effects of scarcity.

THE controversy on Indian excise administration has proceeded far too long and with too much bitterness to make it desirable to pursue it any further. The Government of India have just addressed an elaborate despatch on the subject to the Secretary of State, in which they defend their excise policy from the charges formulated in the Resolution of the House of Commons passed at the instance of Messrs. Caine and Smith. The Government contend that their excise policy has always been free from the reproach laid against it, of being aimed merely at the production of a large revenue at the expense of the morals of the people. On the contrary, the principle which has formed the basis of that policy has been to check the manufacture and consumption of intoxicants by imposing upon them the highest possible duties short of prohibition. The contention may be accepted. The abstract principles that are laid down by the highest authorities in this or any other case, may be open to little objection, but the actual administration of sound principles in the hands of a subordinate agency may nevertheless be as bad as popular opinion, probably with some exaggeration, describes it to be. Look at the Income Tax for an example. If one were to read the discussions in the Supreme Council at the passing of the Income Tax Act, nothing could be more reassuring than the anxiety expressed by Hon'ble members to prevent it from being a source of hardship to classes of people who may be considered poor and who are expressly exempted from its operation. But who that has any knowledge of the proceedings of the assessing officers and even of Collectors possessed with a zeal for raising the revenue, will deny that great illegalities and hardships are committed by them in utter violation of the law and the wishes of its makers.

The same is the case with excise administration. It is satisfactory, however, that the agitation on the subject has pointedly drawn the attention of the Government of India to the weak points of the excise administration. The outstill system had for years received an encouragement which it should not have done, and the public ought now to be satisfied with the orders which have now been issued for its abolition in all populous districts. The outstill system will, of course, be retained in sparsely inhabited tracts for which the Central Distilleries are not suitable, but they will be safeguarded by proper restrictions on the capacity of the stills as well as by the fixing of a minimum price for the liquor.

THE Metropolitan Institution of Pundit Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar has sustained a heavy loss in the death of its popular Professor of English, Baboo Prasanna Kumar Lahiri, M.A. He was a distinguished graduate of the Calcutta University, a Prem Chand Roy Chand Scholar, and a favorite pupil of Mr. Tawney's. Vidyasagar's experiment of carrying on his College with an exclusively native staff of teachers, owes the extent of success which has attended it, in a great part, to the deceased professor. Indeed, there must have been stuff in a man who held his own as an expounder of the higher English classics in the midst of the competition of more favored State and Missionary Institutions with their European staffs. He had a rare aptitude for his profession, and it is indeed a pleasure to hear his pupils speak enthusiastically in his praise. Babu Prasanna Kumar was quiet, modest and unostentatious in his demeanour and manners and, withal, possessed of much true self-respect. It was his self-respecting disposition which made him shun the service of Government. Probably, he thought he could not thrive in a service in which he found people prospering by arts which were repugnant to his feelings. Outside the circle of his own students, he was more widely known as "P. K. Lahiri," the popular author of "keys" for Entrance and First Arts Courses, and even for some of the English text-books for the B. A. Examination. He made a small fortune by this means, of which he has bequeathed no inconsiderable portion for the benefit of the poor, the rest being divided among his surviving relations.

There was a meeting lately held at the Metropolitan Institution to do honor to his memory. Judging from the large attendance at this meeting, and the speeches which were delivered, one can have no doubt as to the great popularity enjoyed by the deceased. Mr. Tawney was present, and expressed the high opinion he had of Prasanna Kumar as his pupil. Mr. Tawney said that he had twice offered him an appointment in the Education Department of the Government, but he declined to accept it. But seeing the great popularity which he had won amongst the large number of students whom he had taught in a private college, he, Mr. Tawney, was not disposed to regret the choice Lahiri made of masters.

A subscription has been opened among the pupils, friends and admirers of the deceased, and the form of the memorial, which will depend on the sum raised, will be decided afterwards.

ON Thursday, in presence of a brilliant assembly of the rank, wealth, and intelligence of the land, the Viceroy, assisted by his Law Member and his Lord Lieutenant of the Province, laid the foundation of the Laboratory for the Science Association. They who were not present missed a rare enjoyment of the highest order. The ceremony was worth attending, if only to hear Dr. Sircar on his favorite topic. He almost surpassed himself on the occasion. Such an address as he delivered, is itself an event,—in India at any rate. But there was a far more agreeable surprise in store for the meeting—the announcement of the Maharaja of Vizianagram's right royal benefaction, made with right royal self-unconsciousness of doing anything extraordinary. We would willingly dwell on the subject and the scene, but between the claims of the Budget debate, the invasion of the Influenza, and other matters, we have space only to reproduce Dr. Sircar's Address. We elsewhere give the full text, which is not to be found in the morning papers.

THE epidemic known as the "Influenza" has travelled all the way from Europe to India, and has made its appearance in several towns in this country. Last week it was very bad at Bankipore. Elsewhere will be found a special account from that town giving the unpleasant details. The unwelcome disease seems to have broken out in Burrabazar of our town. The principal symptoms of the disease are head-ache, prostration, aching of the whole body, fever and severe cough.

KEDERNATH MOOKERJEE, the well-known Head Assistant of the Governor-General's Agent with the late King of Oudh, has been under suspension, as our readers are aware, for several months, while his accounts are being audited by an Auditor specially deputed for the purpose by the Accountant-General for Bengal. He had already been made to pay Rs. 8,000, about a year ago, as he was unable to account for that sum, which had come into his hands in the course of business. We now hear that the Auditor has discovered a deficit of Rs. 10,600, in the accounts. We do not know whether Kedar would be compelled to give up the remaining 2,600, or whether he would be criminally prosecuted. He is, however, a lucky fellow, as we hear he is acting as a broker, in Mr. Upton's office, in the private sale of the late King of Oudh's houses.

COMPLAINT reaches us from Natore, that the Headmaster of the local Municipal High School is bent upon abolishing Persian as the second language in that school. He has accordingly applied to the Chairman of the Municipality and he, it seems, has taken up the cause. Persian is being taught in the school, since its foundation, and there seems no very valid reason for its suppression. If it is not the Court language, it is still the language spoken and understood by educated gentlemen of the Old School in every part of India, and it will do Hindoo boys good to learn that courtly language, and bring them en rapport with their Mahomedan fellow-subjects. It is ignorance that divides the two, to the detriment of both and to the injury of the best interests, social and political, of their common country. There is an urgent local reason at Natore for the study. Rajshahye is a Mahomedan District. It was Mr. William Adam's educational enquiries in that part of the country so far back as the administration of Lord William Bentinck that brought out the fact of the preponderance of the Mahomedan element in the population. Now, for Mahomedans there can be no education with any pretensions to liberality without Persian.

THE Indian Councils Bill having passed through the House of Lords, without a definite recognition of the principle of election, it is not to be supposed that that matter is settled. On the contrary, it is notorious that the whole question will be reopened in the House of Commons by the Radicals. At any rate, the democratic India Reformers will make a great demonstration on the point and try hard for the adoption of election. It is no wonder, therefore, that the communities which are in a numerical minority in India, should take alarm at the prospect, and protest in advance against any such recognition of the system. We understand that the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta, the oldest Mahomedan organization in India, founded by Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur, for the social and political improvement of his community, are preparing a representation upon the subject.

WE regret to have to announce the death, on Thursday the 20th March, of the widow of the late Baboo Rakhal Chunder Mookerjee, of Boinchi. This opulent Brahman Zemindar family was founded by the remarkable and good Thakurdas, father of Rakhal, Behary and Ramlal. Boinchi, once a thriving village, has been ruined with a hundred other places by malaria. Ramlal is dragging on a miserable existence in his retreat at Monghyr. The death of the lady leaves as sole occupant of the ancestral seat her honest and amiable son, Baboo Janoki Nath Mookerjee, once a leader of fashion in Calcutta, himself a valetudinarian. Baboo Janoki Nath is the owner of the estate on which the Battle of Plassy was fought.

MR. F. B. Peacock leaves for good—in every sense—on the evening of the 15th of next month, and Sir Henry Harrison takes charge of the Board the same day and, of course, Mr. Lee comes into his shoes as Chairman of the Corporation.

MR. Brett having taken leave, Mr. Carnduff, Under-Secretary in the Bengal Office, took up the duties of Registrar, High Court, Appellate Side, to-day.

UNIVERSITY scandals will not cease. The Calcutta University, at any rate, would seem determined to imitate the Punjab University in its morals. It is now an open secret that Question papers in several of the subjects of examination had been in the hands of several of the examinees before the examination was held. Is there any Larpent here also? We trust there will be a sifting enquiry, and the culprits brought to book. Already, some easy-going people are endeavouring to hush up the matter.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 1890.

THE DEBATE ON THE BUDGET.

THE debate on the Budget was, to adopt Sir Stuart Bayley's characterisation of it, one chorus of congratulation of the Finance Minister. Sir David Barbour had presented a most satisfactory balance-sheet, and naturally the Council was thrown into a happy frame of mind. Compliments and felicitations for his achievement of a good and substantial surplus flowed in upon him from all sides, and if there are anxious cares and toils incident to his position, for once he must have felt himself amply recompensed for them in the general and cordial expression of approval, satisfaction and confidence with which his Budget was greeted by his colleagues. The general character of yesterday's debate being thus pitched in a pleasant key, there were, of course, other notes touched in its course which, without marring the prevailing harmony, imparted more fulness and freedom to the discussion. Indeed, with the bright prospect of a year of surplus before them, it was only natural that Hon'ble Members should after a complacent contemplation of the outlook, indulge each his own views as to the best way of enjoying their good fortune. If in the rainy day they had restricted their expenses, or laid contributions upon Local Governments or imposed taxation upon the people, these were unpleasant alternatives to which they had been forced by sheer stress of want. Now that a brighter day had dawned, should they not live in a more ambitious style, relieve the Provinces of their tributes, and the tax-payers of their burdens? This was the strain of the debate, and altogether the proceedings were of a highly pleasant character.

The debate was opened by the Hon'ble Mr. Nulkar who spoke with candour of the shortness of the interval that had elapsed since the presentation of the Budget, as well as of the meagreness of the information which it offered with respect to the Home Charges. He expressed a hope that in future Hon'ble members might be in a better position to master the details of the document before they were expected to pass their opinion on it. In connection with the Home Charges, Mr. Nulkar expressed his great disappointment at the Secretary of State's decision against the abolition of the Statutory Civil Service. The recommendation of the Public Service Commission in that behalf, had the merit of eliminating all distinction of race from the principles on which that Commission proposed that the services should be recruited, and if, said Mr. Nulkar, that recommendation were adopted by Lord Cross, the Indian finances would be relieved of the burden now and hereafter to be borne by them on account of pensions of the Uncovenanted Service payable in England in sterling. His criticisms of the items of Revenue were mainly confined to Salt and Abkari. The enhancement of the salt duty was strongly condemned and an earnest appeal was made for its reduction "as a measure of relief to poor humanity." The Bombay Member spoke with almost the warmth of an unsophisticated Hindu on the Abkari revenue and hoped that the obtrusive features of its administration would disappear under the attention which the Government have been recently bestowing on the subject.

The next speaker was Sir Alexander Wilson who spoke with great ability. He supported the Government policy of maintaining existing taxation intact, notwithstanding there is a surplus. "No doubt," he said, "when a surplus Budget is declared, there is a popular expectation of some corresponding reduction in taxation. But the disappointment on this occasion will be tempered with the appreciation of the wisdom of the policy which declines in the first flush of prosperity to part with any of the resources of the State." While Sir Alexander Wilson was at one with the Finance Member in this respect, he had no hesitation in calling on the Government to embark on a course of railway extension on a scale of Imperial magnificence.

We are quite persuaded of the great importance of railways in these days of commercial competition and of their value as protection against the risks of famine. We can therefore sympathise with the representative of commerce in his views on the subject. Our only difference with Sir Alexander is in regard to his position on the subject of taxation. The oppressions and tyrannical proceedings incidental to the administration of the Income tax—the hardships felt by the poorer classes of many parts of the country from the enhanced price of salt—these things are too great and real evils to be maintained in easy times of financial prosperity. The Viceroy's remarks on the subject are, indeed, conceived in great wisdom, and we can appreciate the forbearance he has exercised in coming to the conclusion to retain the taxes until more confidently assured of lasting financial prosperity. Nevertheless, we hold that the evils in detail wrought by those taxes are not sufficiently realized or believed. We ourselves do not know them to the fullest extent in which they exist, but so far as we know is enough to strongly convince us that their retention can have only one justification, namely, that of an inexorable financial necessity not to be met by other means. But it is useless to quarrel with a decision which has been deliberately adopted by the Government, particularly as the Viceroy in conveying this decision has held forth, as in last year, the hope that on the advent of more assuredly better times, the recommendations made by Mr. Nulkar and by Sayed Ameer Hossein for the reduction of the salt duty and of the exemption of the lower classes of Income tax assessees would be favorably considered.

Sir Steuart Bayley and Mr. Evans urged strongly for the return of the contribution of ten lacs of rupees, which the Government of Bengal had made towards meeting the deficit of the Imperial Government. That deficit had now given place to a surplus, and as the Provincial Governments had loyally accommodated the Government of India and in times of difficulty, it was but fair that that Government should in their turn mark their sympathy with the difficulties of the Subordinate Governments by readily refunding the money of which they have now no need. Sir Steuart Bayley's speech was an earnest argument:—

"The Hon'ble Sir Steuart Bayley also wished to join in the general chorus of congratulation in the success of the Budget the Hon'ble the Finance Member had laid before them, and he hoped the Hon'ble Member would not take it ill if he (the speaker) introduced the rift in the lute by referring to the contributions which were taken from the Provincial Governments. It was scarcely necessary that he should remind the Council why those contributions were taken. It was supposed that it would be difficult to make both ends meet. Under these circumstances local Governments were asked to contribute and they did; the share of the Bengal Government amounting to ten lakhs. This year they had extreme difficulties to contend with in Bengal. There had been scarcity in some parts, the excise revenue had diminished, and they had been compelled to refuse even small requests—in fact, they had been actually starving the administration: in other words, they had nothing to spend on any fresh developments. It was no doubt right, when the Government of India were in a grave and critical crisis, that local Governments should be called on to assist. But now that the gloomy forecast had been dispelled, and they had a surplus of 2½ millions, ought not Provincial Governments to expect a refund of their contributions? Had the state of things which existed now been known a year ago, he felt sure it would never have occurred to his hon'ble friend the Finance Minister to have asked for these contributions as it would have cut the basis upon which the Provincial contracts were founded. That being so, was there any reason—these circumstances having been removed—why the money taken from Provincial Governments should not be restored, and sent back once more to the status quo ante? The loss of ten lakhs had put the Bengal Government to great inconvenience, as among other results it did not permit them to increase the number of moonsiffs, of which complaint had just been made by the Hon'ble Mr. Evans, to improve the police, and to contribute towards works of public utility. He therefore asked his hon'ble friend of Finance Minister if he would not be able to restore the contribution."

Sir David Barbour, however, disposed of this appeal rather curtly. He said:—

"From the remarks of his friend the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal it would seem that all that was necessary for the prospects of Bengal as regards the prevention of famine, the improvement of courts, &c., was to get back the ten lakhs. He would, however, take the opportunity to point out that the ten lakhs were not taken yearly, but once for all, and if distributed, the contribution would not amount to one pice per head of population, which would not add very materially to the happiness or prosperity of the country."

The debate was valuable for some valuable reflections made by Raja Durga Charan Law upon the mis-called Insurance Fund. The Viceroy's concluding speech was a most able defence of the financial policy of his Government. The opening remarks of his Lordship on the Bill now passed the House of Lords for the reconstitution of the Legislative Councils, ought to remove those misapprehensions which prevail in some quarters as to his Lordship's part in the framing of Lord Cross's Bill. His Lordship said :—

"I venture, however, to express my hope that too much credence will not be attached to the wholly unauthorized rumours, which are circulated from time to time, in regard to the attitude of the present Government of India towards this most important constitutional question. For the opinions expressed by us in the correspondence which the Secretary of State has thought proper to lay before Parliament, we accept the fullest responsibility. For other opinions, confidently attributed to us, but not so far as I am aware, disclosed in any statement of our views, official or unofficial, which has been given to the public, we disclaim all responsibility. I will only add that I earnestly trust that even those who would themselves desire to see a scheme more ambitious and far-reaching than that of the Secretary of State adopted by the Government of India and by her Majesty's Government, will not, for that reason, allow themselves to be led to disparage unjustly the measure which has lately been passed by the House of Lords—a measure which I honestly believe marks one of the greatest advances which has been made for many years past in the direction of a liberal reform of our institutions."

THE INFLUENZA IN PATNA.

Patna is regularly besieged, and Influenza has created quite a panic among the people here. The patient is attacked with strong fever, cough and cold, attended with insufferable pain all over the body, which makes him quite prostrate. Up to this time the victims have been left with only a bad shivering after some days, and no more serious consequences have resulted. The prostration, however, remains for some time after. Luckily, the European camp, with very few exceptions, has escaped its ravages up to this time.

Moulvi A. K. M. Abdus Subhan, Deputy Magistrate, Babu Prokash Chandra Roy, Excise Deputy Collector, Moulvi Hashmat Husain, Sub-Deputy Collector, the Collectorate Sheristadar, the Treasury Accountant, and almost half the Amla of the Collectorate are found absent. It was amusing to notice the Collector going round the other day from room to room, through silent apartments, inspecting a Sherista without Sheristadar and other principal subordinates of the Department.

Parties in litigation and their witnesses are also not regular in attendance. A number of Pleaders and Mooktears are suffering, and the work is practically at a stand-still. Baboos Gobind Chunder Mitter, B. L., and Shama Churn Banerjee, Pleaders, and Moulvi Zaheeruddin, Government Prosecutor, are all ailing. The Civil Court amla are also down with fever, almost all of them.

Mr. A. S. Phillips, the Headmaster of the Patna Collegiate School, Babu Shivanath Sinha, the 2nd master, Moulvi Mahomed Ibrahim, Head Moulvi, and some other teachers of the Institution are also down with the epidemic.

Dr. Asder Ali, the Assistant Surgeon in medical charge of the school, found as many as 45 boys under its influence, on one day only, and he had to recommend their leave in a body. I hear the distribution of prizes to the boys of the School, which was to come off about the end of this month, has had in consequence to be postponed sine die.

Neither age nor condition escapes. The venerable Nawab Syud Velayet Ali Khan, C.I.E., and the young Syud Sharfuddin Saheb, Barrister-at-law, are both victims.

Musst. Mahamdi Jan is building a big mosque in the city, and a very large number of laborers and masons work there daily. Some 50 of these men have fallen ill, one after the other; 25 of these are reported to have got ill one day. About 18 men employed at a printing establishment at Bankipore have also fallen ill similarly. In fact, every household contains at least half a dozen sick patients—if not more—at a time.

The hands of the Doctors and Hakeems are quite full in consequence. Hundreds of fresh cases crowd upon them daily. Besides, there is a very heavy influx of work at the two charitable dispensaries in the city and at Bankipore.

The great Shikaree Raja of Maksoodpore in Gya, Rameshar Pershad Narain Singh, who caught alive, sometime ago, four big man-eating tigers and killed two others, which had caused quite a havoc for some years together in a number of villages in the borders of the Hazaribagh District, and which the energetic vigilance and expensive attempts of the authorities, and the regular European shikar parties organized by them could not suppress any way—and two of which man-eating tigers are still to be seen in the Calcutta Zoological Gardens—came up to Bankipore for a short stay to see the outgoing Commissioner, Mr. Boxwell, off and to welcome the new hero Mr. Steven. It is said that even he "the great" has been victimised and laid prostrate by the influenza, though in a mild form. As if by way of compensation, some of the men of his establishment here are suffering greatly. May God have mercy upon the people.

Bankipore, 27th March.

THE HON'BLE DR. MAHENDRA LAL SIRCAR'S ADDRESS. THE INDIAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE CULTIVATION OF SCIENCE.

MY LORD—I have been asked by His Honor, the Lieutenant-Governor, as President of the Association, to lay before Your Excellency, a brief sketch of the history of the Institution. I wish I could approach Your Excellency with something worthy of the representative of the most intellectual nation on the face of the Earth, something that might be legitimately expected from a country, once the mother of civilization and now under the sympathetic care of that nation. But, my Lord, it has not yet been given to my unfortunate country to have made that necessary progress. It would seem, my Lord, that in this part of the world while Nature in her lower aspects, nature inanimate and irrational, has delighted to assume forms of the most stupendous magnitude and of the most gorgeous description, Nature in her highest aspect, nature rational and spiritual, as if under some fatal, irrevocable decree, seems content with mere existence, too unwilling or too idle to take advantage of endowments capable of infinite progression. Indeed, my Lord, it is a sad but positive fact that everything human moves here with extraordinary and annoying slowness. A most convincing proof of this is afforded by the history of this Institution, the first of its kind in all India, established with the professed object of cultivating science in all its branches. It is now twenty years that the desirability of a national Institution for the Cultivation of the Sciences by the natives of India was urged upon my countrymen at the very time when similar appeals were being made for the teaching of science in the schools of Great Britain. It took six years of persistent agitation to secure a subscription of about 50,000 rupees for the establishment of an institution the importance of which to the country under its peculiar circumstances should have commanded 50 lacs of rupees. The project was fortunate enough to attract the favorable attention of the then Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Richard Temple, and his advocacy gave a powerful impetus towards its realization. For in a short time the subscriptions rose to 80,000, and the Association was established and formally opened in that dilapidated building that is before Your Excellency.

For about eight years that building served as lecture hall, laboratory, office, library and everything besides. The audience at the lectures increasing, the lecture hall was found insufficient. In spite of strong opposition based upon want of funds, it was resolved to build a suitable lecture hall, and a subscription list was opened, and events justified the expectations of the well-wishers of the Association. Liberal donations came in and there was no necessity to touch the funded capital. The foundation stone of the Lecture hall was laid by the then Viceroy, Lord Ripon. It took two years to complete the hall, and it was formally opened by the same Viceroy on the 12th March, 1884.

But while lectures could be safely delivered in the new Lecture Hall, the old building became more and more unsafe for the instruments and the office, so much so that it was thought necessary to remove as many of the instruments to the lecture hall as we could do consistently with keeping it free for the delivery of lectures. When this state of things came to the knowledge of the Maharaja of Vizianagram, His Highness offered Rs. 25,000 towards the cost of the building, but as the plan of the building then made out was an ambitious one, and the estimate of the cost then was at least three times that amount, the Committee could not recommend the Association to take immediate steps to commence the building. The urgency has now however become so great, that there is no other alternative than to begin at once. The plan had to be modified so as to bring the estimate of the cost down to Rs. 50,000. The Honorary Secretary put forth an appeal in aid of the Laboratory and Professorship Funds, which he circulated with the twelfth Annual Report, the outcome of which is that four gentlemen, three of whom are members, have come forward in response to the appeal, the amount subscribed being Rs. 2,520. Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee and Babu Peary Mohan Roy have each subscribed Rs. 1,000, Babu Sib Chunder Dev Rs. 20, and Moulavi Mahomed Yusuf Khan Bahadur Rs. 500. (To these I have now great pleasure to add the name of His Highness the Maharaja of Bettiah who has just subscribed Rs. 4,000.) In the hope that further contributions will be forthcoming both from members and from the general public, the Committee of Management recommended to the Association at their last annual meeting to commence the building at once with the Maharaja of Vizianagram's Rs. 25,000, the floating balance in the Bank, and the amount already subscribed, trusting Providence for the rest.

My Lord, our trust in Providence has not been a vain one. We have not had to wait a moment too long for the fulfilment of the words pregnant with prophecy for all time, "Providence helps those who endeavour to help themselves." The Maharaja, who had so generously subscribed half the cost of the laboratory, prompted by the same generosity and that enlightened liberality which knows no distinction between mine and thine, qualities which so eminently characterize His Highness, sympathizing with our necessity and our difficulty, and seeing the importance of our undertaking not only to Bengal but to all India, lost no time in relieving us of our anxiety by announcing that he bears the entire cost of the laboratory. Your Excellency, therefore, lays the foundation-stone of a structure which will not have to depend for its completion upon the grudging subscriptions of many, but which will be begun and completed through the beneficence of a single individual.

My Lord, I wish I could here rest and cease from troubling and tormenting the public for further subscriptions. But I do not see, my Lord, how I can do so when we have other and equally pressing necessities. A suitable building for a laboratory had indeed become a first necessity, but the building secured, other necessities, logically and independently of my will, are springing up, and they must be attended to, or all our previous labors will end in nothing. The building is not all that we want. We must have scientific instruments and apparatus to locate in it. Hitherto, my Lord, through the munificence of a single individual again, Babu Kali Kisen Tagore, still unknown to fame and the Government, though well known to the needy and the deserving, and though, to quote the words of Lord Ripon, "a member of a family eminent among the families of India for their public spirit,"—through the munificence of this gentleman, my Lord, we have been able to go on with our lectures for the diffusion of scientific knowledge amongst the people of this country. But the instruments, which his magnificent donation of 25,000 for that single purpose enabled us to purchase, are now over a decade old, and besides, since that time, new and improved forms of old instruments, many new instruments of precision, and many instruments illustrating the latest discoveries, have been invented which we must have, in order, at least, to keep pace with the progress made in more favored countries. But even if we have a building filled with all the scientific instruments and apparatus in the world, including models of those big instruments which have been applied for the purposes of life, we shall not have all that we want. A building and instruments are but the preliminary requisites. We must have the main requisite. We must have men who will have leisure to continually and patiently work with them, and then, but not till then, we shall have a laboratory which will fulfil its legitimate function, that of discovering and appropriating the treasures of truth from the laboratory of the Universe.

Aristotle is credited with the sentiment that he would prefer search after Truth to Truth itself, so great is the pleasure attendant upon the search, and so powerful a means is it of strengthening the faculties of the mind. Lessing goes far beyond Aristotle, for he would prefer the search, though it were with the condition of perpetual error. My Lord, it may be the height of presumption to question the wisdom of Aristotle and of Lessing, but even at that risk I cannot help observing that if the search had invariably proved a barren one, unrewarded by the discovery of a single truth, if the search were a mere groping in the dark, it would be absolutely devoid of all pleasure, it would be in every sense vexation of spirit, and could never contribute to discipline or enlargement of the faculties. The search serves as a powerful educational agency only because it brings the mind into contact with the eternal verities, the living facts and phenomena of nature; it proves a source of exquisite enjoyment only because of the gradual revelation by it of truth, direct or collateral, and because, in consequence, of the expectation of further revelation, in the course of the search.

My Lord, I knew a lad of 14 or 15, when I was of the same age myself, a lad, not at all remarkable for intelligence, but who had what is called some thirst for knowledge, a little enthusiasm in the pursuit of knowledge, who would feel an unspeakable pleasure in the possession of knowledge, and, who, in exact correspondence with the pleasure he himself felt, had an ardent desire to make others share with him that pleasure. I remember an anecdote of this lad, my Lord, which will bear to be related even before your Lordship's presence. With the characteristics of mind just mentioned, he was naturally fond of reading scientific books. One day while reading Milner's Tour through Creation he came across the discovery of Sir William Herschell that the sun was no fixed body in space, but with his planets and their satellites, was in motion and probably around some larger sun. The grandeur of this fragment of truth so overpowered him that he went out of his study, and for some time paced the long street on which his house was situated, regardless of the state of dishabille in which he was. From that day his thirst for knowledge increased with each drink that he could take at the pure fountain of truth. He fully realized that truth was stranger, more beautiful and sublimer by far than fiction, and he resolved to taste nothing but truth preferring to keep his mind blank rather than fill it with vain and idle fancies. Born in a country where the intellectual atmosphere is anything but favorable for scientific culture, and where even European men of science find it no easy thing to persevere in their favorite pursuits, that lad, my Lord, met with impediment at every step, but he has not forgotten his love. He knows fully and feels keenly that he has not been able to do anything for his old love. All that he has been able to do, my Lord, is to appear, as he does now, before your august presence, with indeed the weight and infirmities of age on his shoulders, and with unrelenting Time dragging him down the vale of tears, but with not an iota of his ardour abated,—in this state, my Lord, and after having, in a manner, wasted the best energies of his life he appears before you to-day, and supplicates Your Excellency to do for his countrymen what he has been almost vainly endeavouring to do, namely, to remove the impediments that stand in the way of the Cultivation of Science in this country.

My Lord, it is not for the pleasures of science alone that I am asking Your Excellency to add your powerful voice to my feeble voice urging and inviting my countrymen to cultivate science in all its branches. The applications of Science are now so numerous and have indeed become so intimately blended with every phase of individual and social existence that a knowledge of science has become indispensable. For as one of the profoundest thinkers of the age has put it, "to the question, what knowledge is of most worth?—the uniform reply is—Science. This is the verdict on all the counts. For direct self-preservation, or the maintenance of life and health, the all-important knowledge is—Science. For that indirect self-preservation which we call gaining a livelihood, the knowledge of greatest value is—Science. For the discharge of parental functions, the proper guidance is to be found only in—Science. For that interpretation of national life, past and present, without which the citizen cannot rightly regulate his conduct, the indispensable key is—Science. Alike for the most perfect production and highest enjoyment of art in all its forms, the needful preparation is still—Science. And for purposes of discipline—intellectual, moral, religious—the most efficient study is, once more—Science. Necessary and eternal as are its truths, all science concerns all mankind for all time."

Such, my Lord, according to Herbert Spencer, is a comprehensive summary of the advantages of science, which is but a short name for positive knowledge acquired by the human intellect by coming in direct contact with the works of God. By the necessity of our constitution the acquisition of this knowledge is a gradual process. It was no display of modesty on the part of Newton, but it was the enunciation of a fact of human nature as universal as gravitation itself, when he said that what he had achieved was only by patient and continued application. Yes, my Lord, this is the only, because it is the natural, road to our knowledge of Nature. There is no other, certainly no easier, royal road. This is what our educated youth do not seem to have yet fully realized. They do not seem to me, I wish I were wrong, they do not seem to me to believe in the cumulative effect of small things. They do not seem to realize in its full significance the fact that Nature effects her greatest wonders by the integration of infinitesimals. And they will never have this conviction brought home to them unless they themselves set to work with all the humility of a child and with all the earnestness of a devotee. This is what I entreat Your Excellency to impress upon them. And I am confident, my countrymen will yet achieve things in the field of science, no way inferior to what are being achieved in countries of the West. My Lord, it is not partiality, but genuine conviction, which prompts me to say that it is not intelligence, but a proper direction of that intelligence, that is the chief needful in this country.

My Lord, I begin with lamenting the annoying slowness with which everything human goes on here in India. The reason of this must have been obvious from what I have just said. It is because we want to do everything too quickly, it is because we do not want to do things by slow but sure natural means and methods, but by impossible, supernatural, that is, non-existent agencies,—in a word, it is because in all our undertakings we ignore the true relationship between cause and effect, that we lag so much behind, and in most cases miserably and altogether fail. My Lord, I told you in the beginning that it is now twenty years that the project of this Institution was put forth just at the time when men of science were making similar appeals in England. What mighty advances in the field of science have been made in England in these twenty years, whereas we here are just going to lay the foundation-stone of the laboratory of the only scientific Institution in all India. If my countrymen had fully realized the importance of the Institution, if they had but spent a thought as to the amount of money that is absolutely necessary to fully equip it and set it agoing, we should certainly have done better things than we have done. Is it too late to rectify this error? Are there not noblemen and princes, blessed with abundance of wealth, who are willing to follow the enlightened example of the Maharaja of Vizianagram, and found Professorships, as he has founded the Laboratory? Yes, there are, and they have but to will it, and scientific with its necessary accompaniment, technical education, will be a fait accompli even in this country in no time.

PROPOSALS IN CONNECTION WITH THE GRANT FOR FAMINE RELIEF AND INSURANCE.

[Being Sec. III. of Part I of the Financial Statement for 1890-91.]

14. It will be seen from what I have just said, that the estimates for next year would have shown a very considerable surplus but for the heavy and special demands that have fallen on them in connection with the Army. These special demands come to no less than Rs. 1,361,300, exclusive of a provision of Rs. 892,300 on account of Special Defences. It is reasonably certain that there will be special demands of a somewhat similar nature in 1891-92, but it is not probable that they will be so heavy as in the coming year. Nor are the finances of 1891-92 exposed to any special dangers, so far as can now be seen, other than those vicissitudes which must always attend Indian finance. On the other hand, we may look forward during 1890-91 to the normal growth of revenue. There are, therefore, strong grounds for holding that in 1891-92 we shall at least find ourselves in a position of comparative ease, with a surplus in hand, moderate in amount, but sufficient to allow of some improvement in financial conditions.

15. In view of this comparatively favourable prospect the Government of India has decided to anticipate the future to some extent and to take immediate steps for the partial restoration of the Famine Grant. This can be done by measures which I shall now explain; but in the first place I propose to refer briefly to the nature of the Famine Grant and its history.

The policy of strengthening the finances in connection with Famine was originally adopted in order to protect the country against the financial effects of Famine. It was calculated that Famine would cost, either directly in expenditure intended to relieve distress, or indirectly through loss of revenue, no less than Rs. 15,000,000 every ten years, and it was therefore decided that in ordinary years the Government should take measures for providing a surplus of Rs. 1,500,000. This surplus would be used either to reduce debt directly by buying up and cancelling public obligations, or to indirectly reduce debt by diminishing borrowing.

16. It has been sometimes assumed that the object of this policy was the provision of funds for the actual relief in time of famine of persons who were in distress, and it was argued that when the money so provided was no longer available, the people could not be relieved in case of famine, and must perish. This was not the case. Whether a surplus exists or not the Government recognises its obligations in case of famine, and the actual amount of cash in the treasury is regulated from time to time by considerations which are quite independent of the absorption or maintenance of the Famine Grant. The objects which the Famine Grant is intended to secure are purely financial. So long as it is maintained we have in ordinary years a surplus of Rs. 1,500,000, and this surplus of Rs. 1,500,000 in ordinary years will, it may reasonably be hoped, balance the deficits which must occur from time to time in a country of which the financial conditions are so uncertain. The policy of maintaining a surplus in ordinary years was devised with special reference to the injurious effect on the finances which is produced by famine, but in practice it is an insurance against temporary financial disaster of any kind, because to strengthen the finances by creating a surplus has precisely the same effect whatever may be the object of those who take measures to strengthen them. In any case the finances are strengthened and are able to better meet any special demands on them.

17. The misapprehension as to the nature and effects of the Famine Grant seems to have arisen, to some extent, from the manner in which the policy was carried out in years subsequent to its first adoption. The Famine surplus was intended, in the first instance, to operate in the direction of reducing debt. At a subsequent period it was decided to use one half of it for the construction of Railways and Canals which would protect the country from famine. I think this was, under the circumstances of the case, a wise and prudent measure, but it was a slight departure from the objects of the original policy. These were, as I have said, purely financial. In so far as the Protective Canals and Railways constructed from the Famine Grant returned a fair profit, or lessened the cost of relieving famine, in so far the original purpose of strengthening the finances was maintained. In so far as they failed to return this profit the original purpose was departed from. On the other hand it was an important consideration that the construction of these Railways and Canals might have the effect of mitigating famine to the extent of preserving human life, which would otherwise have been lost.

18. The Government of India was willing in past years to go further in the direction of using the Famine Grant for the construction of Protective Works, than was actually done, and would have appropriated it to meet any loss that might arise on Protective Railways constructed by means of borrowed money; in 1886 the Secretary of State did actually agree that the interest charge on the Indian Midland and the Bengal-Nagpur Railways should be a charge against the Famine Grant. These Railways were held to be of importance for the protection of the country against famine, and it was only on the understanding I have stated that their construction was sanctioned. The decision of the Secretary of State is contained in a Despatch which is published as an Appendix to this Statement. This matter has somewhat fallen out of sight in recent years, because shortly after the decision of the Secretary of State was given, the financial difficulties of the Government became so great that the Famine Grant was practically abolished for the time, and there was no special reason for calling attention to the fact that a portion of it went to meet the loss on the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways.

19. The Government of India and the Secretary of State have, however, always attached importance to the maintenance of the Grant for Famine Relief and Insurance. If the Indian finances show bare equilibrium in normal years, the deficits of bad years can only be met by borrowing; such borrowing must in time lead to a large growth of debt incurred for non-productive purposes. The provision of what is really a yearly surplus of Rs. 1,500,000 is the most effective means of preventing the growth of debt of this character.

20. The manner in which it is proposed to partially restore the Famine Grant at once will now be explained.

We receive this year a special contribution of Rs. 490,000 from Local Governments. This transaction is carried out by debiting the amount to the balances of Local Governments and crediting it to the Government of India. It is practically the same thing to all parties whether the transaction is carried out this month or next month. The credit is therefore postponed till next month, and the effect on the finances is to diminish our surplus of this year by Rs. 490,000 and to increase that of next year by an equal amount.

After this change is made there will be a surplus of Rs. 2,243,200 in 1889-90 and of Rs. 794,900 in 1890-91. In both these years a certain amount of expenditure is already shown under the Grant for Famine Relief and Insurance, partly on account of the construction of Protective Canals and partly for relief of distress. Of the surplus of 1889-90, a sum of Rs. 433,500 will be utilised to raise the total Famine Grant to Rs. 600,000; of the surplus of 1890-91, a sum of Rs. 524,500 will be utilised to raise the Famine Grant of that year to a like amount. The surplus of the Revised Estimate will then stand at Rs. 1,809,700 and the surplus of the Budget Estimate of 1890-91 will be Rs. 270,400.

The amount provided to meet the net charge on account of the Indian Midland Railway and the Bengal-Nagpur Railway is Rs. 458,100 in 1889-90, and Rs. 432,800 in 1890-91.

The final result then of the policy which the Government of India has decided to adopt is that in the current year we have provided in all Rs. 1,058,100 (Rs. 600,000 plus Rs. 458,100) on account of the Famine Grant, that in the coming year we have provided Rs. 1,032,800 (Rs. 600,000 plus Rs. 432,800), on the same account, and that we have nevertheless a surplus of Rs. 1,809,700 in 1889-90 and of Rs. 270,400 in 1890-91; these surpluses are available for the reduction of borrowing and will in practice be used for that purpose.

The sums provided under the Grant for Famine Relief and Insurance plus the sums that go to meet the net charge on the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways, together with the surpluses of the current and coming years, amount to Rs. 4,171,000 in the aggregate, so that, practically, the Famine Grant has been more than restored for the years 1889-90 and 1890-91, as we have in the two years a sum of Rs. 4,171,000 available for the purposes for which the policy of the yearly grant of Rs. 1,500,000 for Famine Relief and Insurance was adopted.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Rheumatism and Gout.—These purifying and soothing remedies deserve the earnest attention of all persons liable to gout, sciatica, or other painful affections of the muscles, nerves, or joints. The Ointment should be applied after the affected parts have been patiently fomented with warm water, when the ointment should be diligently rubbed upon the adjacent skin, unless the friction causes pain. Holloway's Pills should be simultaneously taken to diminish pain, reduce inflammation, and purify the blood. This treatment abates the violence, and lessens the frequency of gout, rheumatism, and all spasmodic diseases which spring from hereditary predisposition, or from any accidental weakness of constitution. The Ointment checks the local malady, while the Pills restore vital power.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are overweighed with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree.—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE SAGE AND THE NYMPH.

A TALE FROM THE SANSKRIT.

"Woman, forbear," the Hermit cried,
"Nor what thou understandest not,
With impious vanity deride,
Or with the soil of censure blot.
Thou canst not, steep'd in sordid care,
Thy daughter's aspiration share :
Since to this world, thy feelings cling ;
Hers soar to heaven on daring wing.
Two souls are yours, and thus disjoin'd,
Are never more to be combined.
For who would gems to pebbles wed,
Or precious gold, to priceles lead ;
Or charnel lights from funeral pyres
Commix with pure ethereal fires.
Let her pursue her chosen way,
And from the brief and clouded day
Of fleeting life, for ever free
Her spirit one with God shall be."

This said, he turned impatiently,
Towards his cell, nor sought reply ;
When to his robe, her hand the maid
Put forth, and his departure stayed ;
He paused to listen to her suit—
But long with eye declined, and mute
She bent—at last, with faltering tone,
She timidly her wish made known.

"Most righteous Sir ! though firm the will
To scorn this world for final bliss ;
Too well I feel, I want the skill,
To track a path so grave as this.
And much I wish, some saintly guide,
Would point my course to wander forth.
But much I fear"—and then she sighed,
And cast her lovely eyes to earth.

With guileless heart, and prompt believing
Unconscious of the world's deceiving,
Nor all exempt from saintly pride,
Markanda said, "Behold your guide—
Or rather, let me say, a friend.
The same our hope, the same our end.
And we will travel on our road
Together to that blest abode
With emulous zeal, till all be past,
And Brahm reward our toils at last."

The maiden murmured soft her thanks ;
Whilst bolder from the menial ranks

The praises of the Sage arise.
The matron dried her tearful eyes,
And owned his graciousness would leave
Her bosom lighter cause to grieve,
Entrusting to his pious prayers,
The only object of her cares.—

By his experience directed,
The damsels busily collected
The leaf, the grass, the pliant cane,
To rear a fence from sun and rain ;
And deck with many a simple flower,
Deep in the grove, a graceful bower,
Where the fair Devotee might dwell
Short distance from the Hermit's cell.
This done—with many a fond embrace
They leave her, and their steps retrace.

Now many a tranquil week had flown
Since youthful Lila, left alone,
Beneath Markanda's care had given,
Or seem'd to give, her heart to Heaven.
At dawn 'twas her's to tread the glade,
And from the venerable shade
Cull sticks and leaves, to feed the flame
That rose to the immortal name.
Again at noon, the sacred rite
To tend, and once again ere night
Descending from the western mountain,
Enwrapp'd in shade, wood, vale, and fountain,
And many an interval between
She heard, attentive and serene,
Markanda learnedly dilate
On man and nature, time and fate.
How destiny controuls our deeds ;
How still from evil, ill proceeds ;
How good from virtue : how illusion
Beguiles mankind with deep delusion ;
And weaves fantastic chains that bind
The struggling and immortal mind
In ignorance ; till knowledge burst
The bonds, and to the source, whence first
The spirit sprang, it wings its way,
Never again to mix with clay.

On themes thus grave and lofty, long
The Sage, as with inspired tongue,
Declaim'd, and still the Maiden near,
Delighted lent a willing ear.
But at the last, the sooth to say,
His pious fervour felt decay :
New feelings o'er his bosom stole,
And strange distractions shook his soul.
He strove ashamed, but strove in vain,
By meditation to restrain

His erring mind—his musings brought His Pupil ever to his thought.
 No peace his restless spirit knew,
 Save when the Nymph was in his view.
 He hailed her coming, as the light
 Returning to his longing sight :
 He marked her going, as the sun
 Returning when his course is run ;
 And counted with impatient pain,
 The moments till she dawned again.
 In vain he bent his studious looks
 As wont upon the sacred books.
 Before his eyes the page display'd,
 No particle of sense convey'd.
 Rebellious to his pious will,
 One form alone pursued him still ;
 One only image still possess'd
 Despot all his troubled breast.
 'Twas she—his Pupil ; she alone
 His very being made her own,
 And still triumphant in the strife,
 Enchain'd him to the world and life.
 Then came tormenting doubts and fears ;
 His days retired, his lapsing years,
 His sober mood, his sacred duty,
 Were all unmeet for youth and beauty.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

WE have much pleasure in publishing the following little piece after Hood's famous song :—

THE SONG OF THE QUILL.

Write—write—write
 Till the brain begins to swim
 Write—write—write
 Till the eyes are heavy and dim !
 Pen, and paper, and ink
 Ink, and paper, and pen
 Till worn upon my desk I sink
 O the cruelty of men !

JYOTISH C. BANERJEE.

The writer, a young Bengali student, deserves credit, all the more for not wriggling himself out to any length.

It has been decided to hold the World's Fair of 1892 at Chicago, and to build an approximate Tower of Babel for the purpose. It is proposed to house the Exhibition in the highest structure the world has ever seen. There will be a central tower of steel 1,100 ft. high, [supporting a roof 3,000 ft. in diameter, carried upon cables] without a single column. The area of the main floor will cover 162 acres, which is twice that of the Paris Exhibition. The tower will be taken up several hundreds of feet above the height of M. Eiffel's.

ONE member Mr. Cartwright charged another member Mr. Rykert of the Canadian Parliament, with trafficking in his personal influence with the Government. Evidence was produced suggesting that Mr. Rykert was richer by 90,000 dollars by securing timber lands for a friend. A Committee will investigate the matter.

THE British Democracy is developing filibustering. On Sunday, March 9, the Socialists and Radicals of London held a meeting in Hyde Park to denounce the treatment of Russian political prisoners. Mr. John Burns spoke violently, declaring that if it were possible to raise an expedition to go to Russia and take the life of the Czar, he would be the first to join it.

THE Hon'ble Mr. Justice Norris, who only yesterday misdirected the law, has, we find, in place of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Trevelyan on leave, been appointed President of the Board for examination of pleaders and muktears and President of the Faculty of Law of the Calcutta University. The Board and the Faculty have proved themselves typical corporations.

Hope gives the following hopeful news, without a word of comment :—

"Babu Hem Chander Banerji, the poet Vakil, succeeds Babu Annada Charan Banerji as Senior Government Pleader of the Appellate Side of the High Court, on the retirement of the latter from the beginning of this month.

Here is Serjeant Hotham over again though in chapkan and turban, without the compliment of a private dinner—even a phaldr at Sir, Romesh's floor. (Vide Twiss's Life of Lord Chancellor Eldon, vol. I, p. 94, Woolrych's Lives of Eminent Serjeants-at-Law, vol. II., p. 646, and Reis & Rayyet of the 15th March 1890, p. 126.) The retiring gentleman has been so little known to the public, professionally or otherwise, these many years that we do not wonder that our contemporary gives him a wrong name.

BOTH Messrs. Handley and Leith, applicants for Mr. Marsden's place, have been provided for. The first is already officiating as Chief Magistrate, the second is Gazetted as Deputy Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs in place of Mr. Kilby granted furlough for one year, seven months and fifteen days from the 9th proximo. The poor Syud, though an Honourable man, is alone left in the lurch. He would have been satisfied with the mere title, without acting as Chief Magistrate or presuming to punish the British-born. But even this modest ambition of an experienced officer, whose assistance has been repeatedly sought in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, is not to be satisfied.

MR. C. B. Garrett, District and Sessions Judge, 24-Pergunnahs, goes on leave for two months from the 16th instant. The officiating Additional Judge Mr. C. A. Wilkins, of the District, will, during the period, act both as the principal and the Additional Judge. If he can keep clear the files of the two Courts, that will shew that the Additional is a mere incubus on the taxpayer.

MR. T. Jones, the Third Judge of the Court of Small Causes, has obtained three months' leave from 1st May next. When he is away, Mr. K. M. Chatterjee, the Fourth, will act for the Third Judge, Baboo Jodoonath Roy, from Sealda, acting in Mr. Chatterjee's place.

MR. M. Macauliffe, Divisional and Sessions Judge, 1st grade, finds the Punjab too hot for him. He changes place with Mr. F. J. G. Campbell, District and Sessions Judge, of the same grade, in the Lower Provinces of Bengal.

THE Honorary Assistant Surgeons to the Viceroy have been granted the privilege of private entrée to Government House. The private entrance to the Durbar is getting inconveniently crowded.

THE National Indian Association has drawn up a list of Indians in England. Three years ago, the number in the United Kingdom was 160. Now it is 207, exclusive of some half a score or so of Parsee and Hindoo ladies. Of the 207—63 are from Bombay, 53 from Bengal, 31 from the Punjab, 20 from the N.-W. Provinces, 13 from Madras, 10 from the Nizam's dominions, 5 from the Central Provinces, 5 from Kattywar, 4 from Burma, and 3 from Baroda. According to nationalities, 45 are Parsees, 54 Mahomedans, while more than half of the total are Hindoos.

DR. Gildemeister, the eminent Orientalist professor at the Bonn University, is dead. He was the first to publish a list of the entire field of Sanskrit Literature.

"MAHOMET," a new play by M. de Bornier, was announced for the Français. The Sultan remonstrated. He was assured that Mahomet was treated in the play with the utmost respect. His Majesty still objecting, the play has been withdrawn.

THE Lisbon City Council has been dissolved. The reasons are—the vast growth in the size and population of the capital, its importance as a seaport, and its strategic value as a defensive position, whether by sea or land, and as the centre of Portugal's communication with her colonies. The most pressing reason is stated to be that there has been of late a large increase in the municipal expenditure with the prospect of inevitable increase of rates and taxes, the inhabitants of the capital being already overburdened with imposts of sorts.

Here, in our capital, the rule seems different. The suburbs have been added, the port has been extended and the owners of residential houses and bustis have been heavily burdened with rates and their collection.

Notice was given on March 11 to the President of the Council to withdraw from office. He answered the notice by ordering out of the Chamber the Government Agent, and, on refusal, putting him out with his own hands. But, on arrival of larger numbers of Government officials, the President and his colleagues thought differently and withdrew, after embracing all the firemen and the other permanent employes of the municipality.

PRINCE Albert Victor of Wales, after a tour in India of over four months of pleasure and instruction, left this country by the mail steamer on Friday week.

THERE is scarcity in Kumaon and Garhwal. Pilgrims to Badrinath and Kedarnath had better keep out of that way.

THE survey of the Grand Chord line has been completed, and plans and estimates are under consideration by Government.

THE Chinese Amban His Excellency Sheng Tai bade adieu to the British metropolis in the East last Saturday, and left a memento of his visit in donations to several charities of the town.

IN Bombay the owners have agreed to suspend the working of the spinning-mills for eight days a month for three months and the weaving departments for four days. Lancashire wants a law enforcing four days holidays in Indian mills.

A BILL has been prepared for the reorganization of the Dutch army. It creates nine new battalions and makes military service universal and compulsory, lasting fifteen years—five in the army, five in the reserve and five in the territorial army Landwehr.

A SYDNEY paper says that no less than 89 millions of acres out of 1,885,537,120 acres of the five colonies forming the Australian continent, have been alienated from the Crown, namely, New South Wales, 42,385,244 acres; Victoria, 22,493,913; Queensland, 10,927,057; South Australia 10,780,738 and Western Australia 2,270,676 acres.

IN continuation of the news given by us on the 22nd February, we have to record that both complainant and accused in the libel case the Raja of Faridkote v. the Editor of the Delhi Punch took the matter up to the Punjab Chief Court, without success in either case. So the sentence of fine of Rs. 1,000 by the Magistrate against the Editor remains in tact. The Divisional Judge who has thus upheld the original sentence also rejected the Raja's application for revising the judgment of the Magistrate and enhancing the sentence. The Raja has reason to be satisfied with this termination. Much as he has been wronged by the offending journal, we do not think he cares to see the miserable penman rot in jail, to the sorrow and distress of his wife and children. We prefer to think he allowed the application to the Chief Court to be made in his behalf simply by way of preventing the disturbance of the Magisterial order. That point he has gained. We have no idea of the resources of the Delhi Punch man, but a mulct of Rs. 1,000 and the costs of such a litigation up to the Chief Court, would be ruinous to most vernacular journalists. We shall not be surprised to hear this Delhiwala shut up shop.

The more so, as he has not yet come to the end of his troubles. What about the Raja's son's complaint against the same paper?

FOR purposes of Act V. of 1864 and the toll limits, in supersession of Notifications Nos. 121 and 286, of 23rd March and 2nd August 1886, respectively, Tolly's Nullah is now made to extend from a line drawn across the nullah twenty-five feet west of the Hastings Bridge to its junction with Biddeaharee River at Samookpota.

THE yearly examination of candidates for the fourth grade of Accountants, Public Works Department, will be held at the Civil Engineering College, Seebpore, on the 2nd and 3rd June next.

FROM and after the 1st May 1890, the value for which a single letter or parcel can be insured during transit by post will be limited to Rs. (1,000) one thousand.

THE Hon'ble Lieutenant Sir Alexander Wilson, Kt., succeeds Thomas deceased as Captain of the Calcutta Light Horse. Such is the curt announcement in the Gazette. Verily, dead volunteers are treated by Government like dogs. Poor Thomas! was he such a dreadful Heathen as to be devoid of the least reputable attribute? Had he not religion enough for a Christian name?

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

BEFORE returning to England, the Queen visits Emperor William and Empress Frederick at Darmstadt. On his way home from Berlin, the Prince of Wales visited President Carnot in Paris.

THE American cyclone assumed appalling proportions. The town of Bowling Green in Kentucky is in ruins, and every building of note in the town of Metropolis dismantled. There were heavy floods in the Mississippi and the low lands are doomed. Tornadoes and torrential rains in various towns in the Western Alleghany Mountains, have caused much damage and many deaths. The Desha country, in Arkansas, is flooded to a depth of fifteen feet. Three thousand people are said to be famishing on housetops.

THE retired German Chancellor left Berlin on the 29th March. There was a grand demonstration. The route to the railway station was thronged, and the vast crowd cheered Prince Bismarck incessantly. A Guard of Honor accompanied his carriage, the streets being lined with troops. At the station, there were in attendance members of the Cabinet, other State officials and members of the Corps Diplomatique. The station too was heaped with mountains of bouquets. An ovation awaited him at Friedrichsruhe. There was a brilliant torchlight procession.

THE Labour Conference has closed at Berlin. It recommends arbitration Courts to decide all labour disputes; periodical international congresses for interchange of views and experiences towards an international labour law; limitation of labour for women and children; stoppage of work on Sundays, leaving to each State to frame laws accordingly.

THERE is a peasant rising, attended with much bloodshed, at Riazan, a province in the heart of European Russia, next to Moscow. The agitation is spreading to Poland and Finland.

ON the closing day of last month, a Nihilist—an aristocratic naval officer—deputed to kill the Czar, laid violent hands on himself. Many students have been arrested, and there is renewed rioting at Kieff and Kharkoff.

The Czar seems to have wearied of the attempts at his life and has begun to think kindly of the attempters. His Majesty and the Czarina paid a visit to the military prisons of St. Petersburg. They spoke to some of the prisoners sympathetically, enquiring into the causes of their arrest. Their Majesties liberated sixty, including Madame Tchaborikora, and reduced the sentences of others.

The meaning of all this humanity of the Lord of the Cossacks is that the Czar feels that severity has failed in procuring him safety or freedom from constant anxiety: hence the present departure.

THE Russian Budget of 1889 gives a surplus of thirteen and a half million roubles.

EMIN Pasha has at last discovered the buttery side of his bread. The chivalrous knight of philanthropy has dwindled to a place hunter. He does not, of course, return to Europe. He has taken service under Germany for thousand pounds a year, and leaves Bagamayo in a fortnight with German officers and a large caravan for Victoria Nyanza to oust British and to establish German trade.

ENGLAND has at last decided to come to the rescue of the depreciated silver and to move for bimetalism. Mr. Samuel Smith will move, in the House of Commons, on the 18th instant, for a conference of the chief commercial nations to consider the question of establishing the bimetallic system. Mr. Playfair too has given notice of an amendment urging that it is not desirable that England as chief creditor should enter into a conference for the formation of a bimetallic league enabling debts contracted in gold to be repayable in silver.

ON the Indian Councils Bill, passed by the Upper House, Mr. Bradlaugh will move, in the Lower, an amendment regretting that no recognition of the elective principle is made in the Bill. Mr. Maclean will oppose the elective principle as unsuited to the people of India and opposed to British interests. A prolonged debate is expected. We only hope the Bill will not be shelved or withdrawn.

LORD Harris, the new cricketing Governor of Bombay, left Aden on the 2nd instant in the Indian Marine steamer Tinassim.

A MILITARY balloon ascending at Berlin collapsed in the forest of Posen, killing a soldier and injuring the Captain in charge.

SIR Tanjore Madhav Row either despairs of the moderation of the Congressists or is alarmed at their demands. He has ceased to be of that body, having withdrawn his name from the Madras Standing Committee. This is another symptom of the beginning of the end. For a' that and a' that, so long as any speculators, be they the veriest Tailors of Tooley Street, can supply funds, there will no lacking or slacking of agitators and agitation, here and elsewhere, within and without Parliament, in the name of "whole India" and its "down-trodden millions."

THE heat has been unusual this year. The snow fall on the Himalayas has been scanty over a very large area. During the whole of January the snowy range north of Simla was very lightly covered. The Assistant Commissioner, Kulu, reported at the close of the month that the season so far had been the driest and mildest on record and that foot passengers could still cross the passes of from 10,000 to 11,000 feet in height. According to the Deputy Commissioner, Kohat, there was a good fall of snow in Thal on the 17th January, but it was succeeded by rain, and only the Sufed Koh and the highest ranges remained white. The prolongation of the warm period—due to absence of rain on the plains and of snow on the hills—continued in February. According to official report, the meteorology of the week ending Friday, the 28th March, has been chiefly noteworthy for the very dry weather which has prevailed over the whole province of Bengal, and consequently the high and steadily increasing temperature. The temperature has been largely in excess during both day and night. At Cuttack, Burdwan, and Darjeeling maximum temperature has been from 35° to 45° above the normal, and at all the representative stations the maximum temperature has been from 1° to 4° above. The only station where there has been defect during the day is Gya, but there the relatively highest night temperatures have been reported. The rainfall has been very scanty, four of the divisions, namely, South-West, Bengal, Behar and Chota Nagpore being entirely rainless, while in Orissa only the fall has exceeded a tenth of an inch.

The season is abnormally unhealthy in Calcutta. There were 1,194 deaths in January against 1,311 in the preceding month, giving annual rates of 33.0 and 36.3 respectively per 1,000 of the population. The monthly total exceeds all the corresponding figures of the past decade excepting 1881, 1883 and 1885, and also surpasses the decennial average by 54. There were 135 deaths from cholera against 122 in the preceding month. The number exceeds all the corresponding figures of the last 10 years excepting 1883, 1886 and 1889, and also exceeds the average of the decennium by 30. From small-pox there were 41 deaths against 6 in the preceding month. The number exceeds the decennial average by 35. During the week ending 29th March, the total number of deaths was 327 against 290 and 262 in the preceding two weeks and higher than the corresponding week of last year by 154. There were 18 deaths from cholera, against 30 and 22 in the two preceding weeks. There were 81 deaths from small-pox against 57 in the previous week.

A new distressing element is supplied by Influenza. Almost all homes and establishments have been invaded. Natives seem to have been specially marked, chief among them, schoolboys, domestic servants, runners and coolies. The attendance at the schools shows a considerable falling off, nearly 40 per cent of the students being laid up. The epidemic has also spread to the suburbs. Dr. Mahendranath Mazumdar, the leading physician of Baranagar, informs us of the occurrence of many cases of influenza in the North Suburban Town.

THE noble example of the Maharaja of Vizianagram in offering to bear the entire cost—Rs. 50,000—of the new laboratory of Dr. Sircar's Science Association, has not been entirely lost on the local chiefs. The Maharaja of Bettiah has raised his subscription from Rs. 4,000 to Rs. 10,000.

LED by Mr. Justice Mahmood, the Full Bench of the N.-W. P. High Court has held that

"according to the Benares School of Hindoo Law no adoption can be legally made by a widow without the express permission of her husband; that where she makes an adoption without such permission the doctrine of factum valet as understood in the Hindoo Law or in other systems of jurisprudence cannot cover the case, because it affects the very essence of the competency to take a child in adoption; that therefore such adoptions, though actually made, are wholly illegal and invalid, null and void, under the Benares School of Hindoo Law prevalent in the territories within the jurisdiction of this (N.-W. P. High) Court."

We make this quotation from an editorial note in the Pioneer, not having seen the judgment. That is said to extend to 45 printed pages. No wonder that, under the circumstance, the other Judges sitting with him in the case could only say "ditto to Mr. Burke."

In the absence of the judgment, it is more than ever difficult to hazard an opinion, but our Brahmanic instinct tells us that Syud Mahmood Bahadoor is right and entitled to the gratitude of all good Hindus. We are particularly glad that he has not been terrified by the bugbear of Factum valet. There is no such nonsense in Hindu Law in its integrity. It is a figment of European imagination nurtured on Roman Jurisprudence, having been foisted on us by British judges. It was time to emancipate the Law from this illicit connection. It is true that something like the doctrine has been set up by the Bengali jurists, but they are quite singular in this and receive no countenance from any other part of India.

THE earthen oil tract in Upper Burma is being regularly demarcated under the superintendence of Dr. Fritz Noetling of the Geological Survey. It will be parcelled out into one square mile blocks, which will be sold publicly to the highest bidder. Messrs. Finlay, Fleming & Co., the lessees of the oil wells under the king, have already secured a couple of square miles at Yenangyoung, and Sir Lepel Griffin has obtained for his company four miles. There are other plots in the market, and by the beginning of June when Dr. Noetling will have completed the demarcation, there will be many more in the field.

Dr. Noetling, who is a German scientific man brought out for the Geological Department, has not only done excellent professional service in Upper Burma, but going into the country in the troublous times following the Annexation, he has had an adventurous career. While the land was at the mercy of guerilla bands of patriots and brigands, he had not to complain of absence of incident. He was in an atmosphere of ugly rumours and surprises. Exposed to attack on all sides, he must have had many a hair-breadth escape, in a situation where he owed the preservation of life only to his dexterous arm, his fleet feet, and, last not least, his alert mind. All the romance of daring that he may have cherished in his young German under-graduate days at his German University must have been satiated. As he was sent to rusticate in the malarious jungle, presumably to purge him of his proclivity to society and chivalric devotion to woman, and is fated not to be at head-quarters with his chief again, for fear of a relapse to the old viciousness, he is decidedly lucky in this windfall of compensation. His chivalry itself might be satisfied in a country where the fair sex is not jealously guarded, as in Gangetic India and other parts of Asia, and charms all comers, from lascars up to Princes.

THE last hypnotic—the last new thing—is Chloralamide—a combination of chloral and formamide. The hypnotising dose is from 20 to 60 grains. It takes five hours to dissolve 20 grains in two ounces of water.

ANTIPYRIN is being specialised. It has been found successful in the treatment of nocturnal incontinence of urine. The Birmingham Medical Review reports two cases. It was tried on a child 4½ years of age. He would pass water in bed several times during the night. Belladonna and the bromides did him no good. From May 20th to 27th, 1889, he was given twenty-two grains of antipyrin, one-half at 6 P. M. and the other half at 8. During this time, the child did not wet the bed at all. The treatment was repeated off and on for some time, and the child was ultimately cured. Another child, 8 years of age, under similar circumstances, was subjected to the same treatment and pronounced cured. The dose was half a drachm, half at 6 P. M. and the rest at 9 P. M.

CHLOROFORM has run out its hour of popularity. It has begun to be at a discount. The late Commission at Hyderabad are not calculated to regain its losing credit. Dr. Roger Williams finds that in ten years at St. Bartholomew's this drug was administered 12,368 times with ten fatal results. During an identical period, when ether still held sway, there were only three deaths out of 14,581 instances. Dr. Williams has long been aware of the greater safety of ether and believes that professional opinion is driving to the same conclusion. Mr. Woodhouse Braine, the most eminent practical expert in anaesthetics in London, has discarded chloroform in practice. He has opened an attack in the Lancet on the Report of the Hyderabad Commission. He disputes the Commission's conclusions that death from chloroform is always prefaced by some change or sign of danger in the patient's breathing, and that there is not a single death from chloroform recorded in which it was proved that the respiration alone was attended to throughout the inhalation. The Commission's advice is that the patient should be placed on his back. Mr. Braine's experience of 30 years, however, is that, for several reasons, it is better that the patient should lie on his side.

COFFEE—good or bad—is a destructor of microbes. Dr. Lüderitz has found from several experiments that the organisms all died in a longer or shorter period. In one series of experiments anthrax bacilli were destroyed in three hours, anthrax spores in four weeks, cholera bacilli in four hours, and the streptococcus of erysipelas in one day. Death is due not to the caffeine the coffee contains, but to the empyreumatic oils developed by roasting.

NOTWITHSTANDING the maritime progress of Europe since the discovery of the Mariner's compass and the familiarity of her nations with the sea, it is only within the last few years that the depths of the ocean have been ascertained by actual measurement. The heights to which the raging seas rise seem to be a subject of simpler inquiry. Waves being an overt manifestation, one would suppose their altitudes to the utmost have early been determined and must by this be well-known to mariners. Not so, however. The inquiry is beset with peculiar and indeed obvious difficulty. It is easy, enough to measure the height of waves in ordinary rough weather. But then the knowledge is not of much interest or importance. It is the height of the water during storm and hurricane that is more to the sailor's or seafarer's purpose, and that is not easy of ascertainment. Passengers during these convulsions are in too imminent danger to have left any disposition for scientific pursuits. And the commander and officers on board themselves are under too severe a trial how to weather through the siege of Æolus to have time or opportunity for adding to the sum of their knowledge. As the most formidable heights are reached far out in the open sea, it is out of the question to measure them from the shore. In olden times, since the hardy Portuguese navigator christened the southernmost promontory of the Old World the "Cape of Storms," the southernmost coast of Africa was believed to be most exposed to rough usage from wind and water and the most terrific waves. Since then, that unenviable precedence has been transferred to the Southern Pacific.

Of late years, the South Atlantic had again recovered its old prestige, through the situation of greatest disturbance was shifted from the extremity of Africa to that of America. It was found, by actual measurement, that storm waves near Cape Horn rose sometimes to the height of 40 feet—the highest rise known anywhere. Fresh light has, however, recently been thrown on the subject by the experiences of some vessels during the storms of January last in the North Atlantic. The Caledonian liner of 4,000 tons, belonging to the Cunard line and the Allan liner, Sardinia, of equal calibre, encountered waves of grander proportions and altitude. On the 17th January, the fires of both steamers were extinguished during the height of the storm by the water pouring down the funnel. It is estimated that, from the depth to the crest, these waves must have been quite 50 feet in height.

HERE, from the "Newspaper Press Directory," are the latest statistics of journalism in the United Kingdom. There are in London 478 newspapers; in the Provinces 1,290; in Wales, 89; Scotland, 194; Ireland, 160; British Isles, 23; or a total of 2,234. The magazines, including the Quarterly Reviews, number 1,752, 430 of which are religious.

These figures are sufficiently startling. They evidence a high advancement not simply in wealth, but also in culture. Education must be common enough to create such an enormous demand. And what an extraordinary stimulus to all the various arts and interests of life must be imparted by the Press with its innumerable sentinels, watchful and informing! And yet for what good? So far as the progress of the soul is concerned, all this multiplication of letter-press is beside the purpose.

For all those trophied arts
And triumphs that beneath thee sprang,
Healed not a passion or a pang
Entailed on human hearts!

The last figures are not a little remarkable in this connection. Great as are the number and energy of the oral expounders of the gospel of the several denominations, of various quality and degree, from bishops, archdeacons, canons, prebendaries, deans, and so forth, of Established Opulence, through the struggling preachers of Dissent, down to Moravian and Mormon Brothers and other non-descript spouters and ranters and canters—these are all cast into the shade by the enterprise and activity of the interpreters in black and white. The amount of brain or muscular exertion expended in the production of sermons and exhortations and explanations and mystifications and hymns and lamentations, is prodigious. Day after day, the Press "piles up the agony" of trash. For, surely, if the general character of the productions were superior, Great Britain would have long ere this been a veritable Eden of Innocence. Just imagine the proportions of the provision for making the British people righteous! Over and above the exhortations of, and confessions to, the priests, and the mantras delivered directly in the ears of the faithful, there are as many as four hundred and thirty periodicals in this behalf!

These figures lead one almost to despair of the destiny of our race. What hope can we indulge ourselves in when, notwithstanding all this amplitude of arrangements for protection of morals, we send forth O'Haras and Goldsboroughs?

THE cause of education in Baranagar could not have a more generous friend than it has found in Kumar Dowlut Chunder Roy. The Committee of the Baranagar Victoria School, it will be remembered, undertook to build a house for their School. A Government grant of Rs. 8,500 was sanctioned on the usual condition of the Committee paying an equal sum. The total cost was estimated at about Rs. 17,000, or thereabouts. The building has been completed and now when on the expiry of the official year, the Committee must show to Government that they have discharged the whole of their portion of the liability on pain of forfeiting the Government grant, they find that, notwithstanding all their exertions, they have only succeeded in raising subscriptions of Rs. 6,500. Thus there was a deficit of Rs. 2,000 when March was drawing to a close and the time was at hand when the Committee must settle their accounts with Government or the Government grant must lapse. It was a critical moment, and the Committee having exhausted their efforts to raise money were at a loss. In their despair they applied to Kumar Dowlut Chunder, their patron, for advice. For aid they could scarcely ask, as he had already given a handsome donation of Rs. 1,000. Kumar Dowlut Chunder at once understood the situation, and nobly paid a further sum of Rs. 2,000 to enable the Committee to fully meet their debt of honor. It is such acts of generosity that truly give our aristocracy their claim to public homage. We have no doubt the Government will take note of the liberality of this scion of one of our old Houses. His liberality in the present instance has averted an awkward contretemps. The Government would have found themselves in no less a disagreeable predicament than the Committee. The Kumari's gift, munificent as it is, is worth infinitely more than its money value.

ON the 27th March, the Calcutta Corporation passed its Budget for the year 1890-91, without altering the rates. Mr. William Swinhoe, an elected Commissioner for the amalgamated area, objected to the Budget as submitted. He took initial exception on the following grounds:—

"First, the budget had been passed without proper previous intimation being given. Second, the budget was an incorrect statement of the account of receipts and expenditure, as the balances of last year were not brought forward. Third, the accounts were improper, as the working expenses at the debit balances exceeded the total year's income. Fourth, that the budget was illegal, as it was against the true intent of the law."

The Chairman explained that, under the law, the Budget as originally framed was referred to the General Committee who had considered, modified, and reported upon, it for final passing by the Commissioners in meeting, and that it was now open to Mr. Swinhoe to speak to any item or items of the Budget and ask the meeting to modify it or them. Mr. Swinhoe simply protested that the Budget could not be discussed in its then shape but the Chairman ruled him out of order. Mr. Swinhoe would not take his colleagues into his confidence and threatened an appeal to Government. True to his threat, he immediately applied to the Lieutenant-Governor to supersede the Corporation under the power reserved in Sec. 38 of the Municipal Act and "to direct that the yearly expenditure to be incurred by the Calcutta Municipal Corporation, so far as concerns the added area, shall be framed and regulated according to the provisions of the law." We live in easy times. Formerly, it required all the influence of a Judge of the High Court to disgrace the municipality, now an attorney of that Court feels himself competent to put in motion the dreadful section of suppression or supersession. But it is one thing to wish and another to realise. Mr. Swinhoe has no locus standi. His application is premature. He wants the Budget as the law requires the Commissioners—to "devote to the improvement of the area newly added to Calcutta by this (Municipal) Act not less than three lakhs of rupees annually from the receipts of the revenue funds described in sections one hundred and two, one hundred and three and one hundred and five. Provided that the instalments of interest and reserve fund payable on any capital sum expended under clauses (3), (4) and (5) of this Section (37) for the improvement of that area shall be taken as part of the three lakhs of rupees." Whether the Budget is prepared accordingly or not, it surely is too early to kick up a row with the Commissioners for having failed in any of their duties fixed by law during a year which had not yet commenced, to say nothing of the end. At any rate, Mr. Swinhoe shews scant consideration for the law or his colleagues on the Board by not allowing the Commissioners an opportunity for considering his views on the Budget itself, in either its form or details.

THE Nawab Bahadur of Moorshedabad, we grieve to record, has been stricken with hemiplegia. The attack came on on Wednesday. He was better next day. We hope he will be spared to Moorshedabad and Bengal. He is a rare soul of goodness whom the country can ill spare. His public spirit is exemplary. His liberality is worthy of an Indian Prince, but while it is free and ready at all emergencies, it is intelligently discriminate and without ostentation. And he is just in his prime.

OUR present issue is unusually medical. But in presence of more than one epidemic disease, we need scarcely apologise. Over and above many medical notes of a general though interesting kind culled from various sources, we offer a summary of the weather and of the health of the country. As for the Influenza, besides giving our own news, we have much pleasure in laying before the public the observations of a distinguished man of science and physician, the Honourable Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1890.

THE VICEROY ON THE PARLIAMENTARY BILL FOR THE REFORM OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATURES.

THE Viceroy's speech at the Budget debate was meant for a wider audience. It is the fashion to complain of the gulf that separates the Government and the people under such a rule as ours. The ways of bureaucracy are ridiculed as mysterious. Indeed, much of the exclusiveness of the Government of India is inevitable from its constitution, and we are glad at the prospect there is now of a reform in that constitution calculated to remove much of its present exclusiveness. The Viceroy commended Lord Cross's Bill to the acceptance of the people of India. His Lordship thoroughly took them into his confidence, and told them what part he had taken in the preparation of that Bill. He could not disclose official information which the Home authorities have not thought it expedient to make public, but what he said was sufficient to show the groundlessness of the rumours which have been current as to his Lordship's attitude towards what he called the most important constitutional question. For this open avowal of his policy, the country cannot be sufficiently thankful to his Lordship. Indeed, those who have carefully marked his Lordship's public utterances could not have failed to observe that Lord Lansdowne has always been anxious to enlighten public opinion whenever he had an opportunity of doing so. Such opportunities are, of course, rare in the very circumstances of such high official position, but whenever the Viceroy had any, he has fully utilised them to vouchsafe information, and to correct errors.

It will be in the remembrance of the reader how this time last year, Lord Lansdowne, in his speech on the Budget, announced the policy which has since been embodied in Lord Cross's Bill. His Lordship's Government has been quite at one with that of Lord Dufferin in regard to the expediency of giving the right of interpellation to the Legislative Councils and of discussing the Budget. As to the extension of those Councils and the mode of constituting them, there would now appear to be the same unanimity. Lord Lansdowne rejoices at the proposal in Lord Cross's Bill of strengthening their constitution, while he disclaims all responsibility for the opinions which rumour has ascribed to him with respect to election. After this candid avowal, there should be no more misapprehensions on the point.

The Viceroy is evidently very earnest on this subject of constitutional reform. He was in hopes of the proposed changes being made law last year. Lord Lansdowne contemplates the prospect of having to carry out those changes with great satisfaction, and nothing will please him so much as the early passing of Lord Cross's Bill. His Lordship said that "the Secretary of State was fully prepared to introduce the measure during the Parliamentary Session of 1889. Hon'ble members are, however, aware of the difficulties which attend Imperial legislation and cannot have been surprised even if they were disappointed to find that the attempt to pass a Councils Bill during the Session of 1889 was abandoned." His Lordship is full of earnest trust that it may be law before the present Session terminates. His Lordship deprecated opposition to the Bill because it was not sufficiently comprehensive. He admitted that there might be those who would desire a scheme more ambitious and far-reaching, but, nevertheless, he advised these men to be satisfied with what they have got and not to disparage unjustly a measure which, His Lordship honestly believed, "marked one of the greatest advances made for many years past in the direction of a liberal reform of our institutions."

Holloway's Pills.—Weakening weather.—The sultry summer days strain the nerves of the feeble and decrepit, and disease may eventuate unless some restorative, such as these purifying Pills, be found to correct the disordering tendency. Holloway's medicine gives potency to the nervous system, which is the source of all vital movements, and presides over every action which maintains the growth and well-being of the body. No one can overestimate the necessity of keeping the nerves well strung, or the ease with which these Pills accomplish that end. They are the most unfailing antidotes to indigestion, irregular circulation, palpitation, sick headache, and costiveness, and have therefore attained the largest sale and highest reputation.

Here is advice from the Viceroy himself, given in a manner and in terms which ought to make it prevail. But the Agitator is abroad and he cannot see his occupation gone. So the country—that is, the malcontent zone thereof—is girding up its loins for another series of sham meetings and memorials on the subject of election. Already, the cry of a "down-trodden" India has been started. Everything will be done as the wires are pulled, while the greatest actors are gone to make what mischief they can at home. They are fighting only for a shadow. It is not Election or Nomination but Stronger Councils that we really want. And when we are at last to have such Councils, to say we won't have them unless they are constituted by Election, is not only foolish but dangerous. We know what success will attend the agitation, but it may just lose us the Bill in the House of Commons. Not indeed by defeating the ministry, of which there is now little fear, but by wearying the Government by factious opposition and Irish tactics, and leading them to add the Bill to the number of victims in the Massacre of the Innocents. But what care the Orator and his manager? It will be an additional feather to their cap. And the agitator's calling is safe. In fact, the death of the Bill will be new life to the Congress.

THE HOLIDAY QUESTION.

We trust the Government will be firm on the holiday question. The Chamber of Commerce is determined to have the Durgapuja shorn of its hallowed associations. And the Chamber wields vast influence. The European mercantile community are large employers of native labor. A dead-set against these holidays made by men of such power must, in any case, be an embarrassing complication. The controversy has reached a critical stage, and the whole native community in Bengal is in alarm.

At its last annual meeting, the Chamber of Commerce resolved to give itself no rest until the holidays were reduced to four days. The Presidential speech was chiefly directed against the holidays. All other topics were thrown into the background in the magnitude of importance attached to this. Indeed, Sir Alexander Wilson's attitude towards the subject was alarming, and the best tact and influence of our official chiefs will be called in requisition towards a satisfactory solution of the problem.

The Chamber has advanced the point so far as to procure a re-opening of the question. Sir Stuart Bayley has told the Chamber that its demand for reduced holidays had not the support of the entire mercantile body. The Exchange Banks not only made no such demand, but opposed it. In view of this division in their own house, they could scarcely complain of the decision adopted by the Government. To this, Sir Alexander Wilson, in his speech at the Annual meeting of the Chamber, replied that there was no schism of the kind in the mercantile community, and that the Exchange Banks were at one with the Chamber in this movement. Surprise will no doubt be felt by the Government and the public at this announcement. There has been an open schism between the Exchange Banks and the Chamber of Commerce, and if there is a coalition now, it must be of recent occurrence. Apparently, the Banks have given way to the potent influence of the Chamber. The question now asked is, Will the same influence conquer the Government also?

There could not be a greater disaster to the country than the abolition of these time-honored holidays. The greatest religious and social festival of the country is threatened. The holidays being gone, the thin end of the wedge will have been introduced, and the Durga Puja must prepare itself for a process of slow decay. It may live shrunk into insignificance, but it will not be the Durga Puja that is so dear to the Hindoo mind. The Chamber quotes the authority of a Hindu scholar, and argues that four days are all necessary for the ritual part of the festival. The Native Chamber of Commerce has given an effective reply to this assertion. Hindu scholars are not necessarily strong in Hindu practical theology and worship, and the European Chamber's man either does not know or has disingenuously supported his clients. We have no wish to import any element of bitterness into the controversy. We only appeal to the European community, official and non-official, to save the country from the threatened encroachment upon its grandest institution. Commerce has flourished well enough in the past, without interfering with religious usages of the people. Merchant princes have come and gone without complaining of the suspension of business during these holidays. They have not only never grudged their men these days but have themselves enjoyed them, sometimes by freely mixing in the native amusements of the season. How different are their successors! What isolation is daily becoming more and more marked between the two communities! The merchants talk of increased competition in these days, but are the old traditions and the religious feelings of the people of no weight in the scale? The question should not be allowed to be reopened. Time and again has it been considered, and the decision at last and deliberately arrived at should be final. There may be a coalition patched up between the Exchange Banks and the Chamber, but is the deep sentiment of a whole nation to count for nothing? It will be a distinct abuse of power if the Government gives in to the superior influence of the mercantile community.

The holidays, apart from their religious aspect, have a great social and moral use. Man is not such a machine as a clock or a watch. Temporary respite from work is essential for both the bodily health and the health of the mind. The tendency of these days of life at high pressure is to reduce men to the condition of machinery. The big folks have their long furloughs, their run to the hills, their sea trips, and what not. But the drudges and galley-slaves in subordinate employ must go on toiling and moiling without rest, as if they were not of the same flesh and blood. Why should not the Chamber look with composure on these holidays as respite given to enable these drudges to renew their used up energies?

THE INFLUENZA IN CALCUTTA.

Science has its advantages as well as its disadvantages, and singularly enough the disadvantages are very often the outcome of the advantages. Rapidity of locomotion is an advantage of modern science, but this rapid locomotion means very often rapid spread of infectious diseases. The present epidemic of Influenza is an illustration in point. There is not the least doubt that the recent rapid spread of the Influenza in Europe, and from Europe to America and India, giving it the character more of a pandemic than of a simple epidemic, is due to the rapidity of transport brought about by steam.

The disease resembles so much ordinary acute catarrhal fever that it is very difficult to say when the first case or cases occurred in Calcutta. The first telegram received of the Bombay epidemic was dated the 25th February, from which it appears that cases must have been occurring there before the middle of the month. From this I am inclined to conclude that cases must have appeared in Calcutta during the last week of February at the latest. The first case that came under my observation was in my own family and that was in the last day of the first week of March. The second case occurred a few days after. Then about a week after nearly all the other members were down with the fever almost simultaneously, the intervals between the cases being one day in some, two or three in others. The onset is apparently so sudden that the names "lightning catarrh" in English and La Grippe in French have been given to it. But it is not always, it is very seldom, that it is really sudden in its appearance. In not a small number of cases, if well observed, a sort of malaise, consisting of feverishness, lassitude, loss of appetite, pains, would be found to precede the violent symptoms which are the exaggeration of the preceding. So far as I can judge the disease seems to be spreading by infection; and the stage of incubation would seem to last from a few hours to at least two weeks. Some constitutions are so susceptible as to be affected in the course of an hour or two of their coming within the influence, and others so strongly resistant as altogether to repel the morbid cause, or to require its persistent action for days to succumb ultimately.

The predominant symptoms are fever and prostration. In the present epidemic the catarrhal symptoms of the nose do not seem to me to offer very characteristic phenomena. Violent headache and muscular pains (not arthritic as in Dengue) rank next to fever and prostration. Cough due to tracheal and bronchial inflammation comes next in the order of frequency. Sometimes in place of inflammation down the trachea and bronchi, there is inflammation of the throat and larynx and of their glands. In a great number of cases there is a flush of redness of the face down to the thorax. In these the nervous prostration with alarming drowsiness and delirium is very often present. In a few cases there are gastric troubles in the shape of nausea and bilious vomiting. Diarrhœa is very rare. Burning of the eyes, hands and feet, are met with in these gastric or bilious forms, and in some general burning of the body is a very distressing symptom. Some people complain as if fire was issuing from their mouths, noses, eyes, and ears. The sequelæ are, in the order of their frequency, debility, cough, loss of appetite, vertigo. Otitis media is reported to be a frequent symptom and sequela of the disease in Europe. I noticed it in only one instance, out of more than hundred that I have observed. Relapses are not frequent, but do occur from infringement of dietetic and other hygienic rules.

With regard to treatment I may observe there is hardly any necessary. I have watched the gravest cases with alarming cerebral symptoms, left them without medicine, and they have made as good recoveries as those treated with drugs. The disease generally terminates in spontaneous recovery in from three to ten days. We may require Rhus Tox. for the pains, Belladonna for the cerebral symptoms, Chamomilla for the bilious vomitings and burnings, Arsenicum for the bronchial affections. Gelsemium may be required when, with strong fever and drowsiness, there is absence of thirst. Aconitum has not been of much use unless there were restlessness and insatiable thirst. In such cases Arsenicum sometimes acts better than Aconitum.

The disease does not seem to have spared age, sex, or nationality. Male and female, old, young, children, and even infants at the breast have been attacked. I do not know how far our European brethren have suffered, but other nationalities seem fully under its influence. The percentage of population attacked is certainly over fifty. There is scarcely a house that has not had the unwelcome visitor, and in many houses almost all the members had to pay due homage to it.

Observations do not seem to have been made as to how far the lower animals have been affected by the epidemic influence. I have heard of only one instance, and that of a cat which had the chief symptoms of the influenza, namely, fever and the pains in the body. I doubt not but that if we were more observant we would find that other animals are suffering from the epidemic visitation, though certainly in a much less degree than man.

NOTES OF READING FROM NOTE-BOOKS.

Lucknow, Sunday, the 22nd February, 1863.

The bitterest want here is the want of books. The city was better provided when the country was under native Government. The Princes, as a rule, were educated men and the court and aristocracy affected letters. It was a well-appointed court and a well-furnished metropolis. The Rulers patronised not only music, song and dance, fiddlers and buffoons, talking parrots, singing nightingales, and fighting cocks, wrestlers, conjurors, palmists, astrologers and prophets, but also encouraged painters, poets, philosophers and learned men in general. No kind of liberal art or culture appealed to them in vain. Mr. Beechy was painter to the Court. A regular observatory was maintained. The Royal Library was the largest collection of Mahomedan literature of any city in India. How different is it all since the fall of Wajid Ali Shah! The British Capital of Oudh no doubt boasts a sort of public Library, but it is not only not worth mentioning in the same breath with the right royal institutions gone before, but a thing of absolute wretchedness and insignificance, a poor thing, full of "Circulating" trash to the taste of ladies and gentlemen. There is no doubt a small residue of wheat, but even that is not available to the canaille. The Baboo has no business to command, although he is perfectly welcome to pay. There is no depending on the institution. The rules are allowed to be broken by an unimportant speculative Honorary Secretary, who, expecting favors from the great, is anxious to avoid the least appearance of offence, and the result is that the Library presents an array of empty shelves which give rather the idea of an upholstery store than a literary institution. The fact is that the contents of the furniture—the letter-press stitched and bound in cloth or leather—move about for years together with the lords of the Commission, from Commissioners of sorts down to Deputies, Assistants, and Extra Assistants.

Found this morning among the few books of my friend Issur, a volume of the Household Words for 1857, and Campbell's Rhetoric. Read several portions of both. For the first time to-day, I perused Dickens' famous protest in Household Words against the article in the July number of the Edinburgh Review 1857 on the "Licence of Modern Novelists." Even at this distance of time, I can in some measure appreciate the sensation which the great Novelist's Defence of his Circumlocution Office in Little Dorrit created. The article is wickedly headed "Curious Misprint in the Edinburgh Review." It is as Mr. Dickens at the outset says it will be, an earnest but temperate remonstrance against the reviewer's charges, and as a defence perfectly successful. It is one of the most dignified vindications ever penned.

The other book is Dr. Campbell's Philosophy of Rhetoric. It is a Calcutta edition, and consequently there are numerous errors of the press, some of them very annoying, such as "vicinity" for "vivacity." It is amusing to hear a man like Campbell discoursing on Rhetoric, whose composition is not only not elegant, but absolutely defies the commonest rules of writing. He repeats only the old inconsistency between precept and example. The precept, for all that, is generally correct enough, if not always correctly argued, but the example is frightful.

Campbell's partiality for the word "hath" instead of "has" is a disagreeable peculiarity. He will never use the current word "has." It is curious a philosopher of Rhetoric did not perceive the absurdity of the Biblical pretence. Where the style assumes a high religious tone, the use of "hath" is not only proper, but imparts dignity to the expression, but to always substitute "hath" for "has" is the sheerest of affectations.

A good exhaustive Philosophy of Rhetoric, taking cognizance of the revolution in English taste which has taken place since the rise of the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews and Blackwood's Magazine,—is yet a desideratum.

It is remarkable that most of the text writers, including standard authorities themselves, break their own laws. Blair, long the Oracle of Belles Lettres in England and still much in request there—in India I believe his is about the only Code known—is an indifferent writer, who in the same breath commits the faults he warns his readers against.

There is an article in the old Critical Review about the beginning of the century, in which Blair's systematic breach of the laws he teaches is mercilessly exposed. The writer shows, by means of copious quotations from the Doctor's Lectures on Rhetoric and Belles Lettres, that the Lycurgus of taste could not move a step without sinning against his own Code. I may here observe in passing that the Critical Review is a very rare work in India. The only tolerably complete set I saw was in the Wellington Square Dutt family collection. The Metcalfe Hall Library set is imperfect, and particularly wants the volume containing Blair's exposure. Yet it is noteworthy that it is to outsiders that England is indebted for systematic treatment of her language and literature. Who are her arbiters of taste? Not her khas sons. There is no Academy of Immortals in England. The Royal Society was started to improve "natural knowledge" and has maintained that character generally, and the Royal Society of Literature, although it numbers some of the best men in the land and has published a body of worthy Transactions, has somehow not been well managed enough to be able to assume anything like the position of literary dictator to the nation. Individuals, therefore, take the place of organization. But they are not Englishmen who are the lawgivers in taste, at least the codifiers and text-writers. Two of the race denounced by Swift and Johnson and derided by Sydney Smith himself—two Scotchmen, in fact—have analysed for Englishmen their literature and laid down its principles. Making all necessary deductions, there are two valuable books—Campbell's Philosophy of Rhetoric and Kaimes's Elements of Criticism, of which Scotland may well be proud. What an irony of Fate that minds nurtured with the food of horses in England should, under Divine Providence, be ordained to instruct the proud South Britons in the philosophy of the refined arts of literature and the technical rules of composition in their mother-tongue! Sentiment apart, the real pity is that both Kaimes and Campbell are behind the age.

THE EXCHANGE QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Observing the frequent remarks in newspapers on metallic questions, about the great, and continual loss, which both the Indian Government, and the public in general suffer, in making remittances to Europe, I—though a man of a very humble education and station—respectfully beg leave to say a few words on this important subject, humbly trusting, that this, if not entirely wrong or altogether unreasonable, will be allowed a place in your very impartial and famous journal.

2. Formerly a sovereign could be had in Calcutta at Rs. 10 to 11, the Government exchange being then 15 $\frac{1}{4}$ or 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{1}{4}$. This gold coin subsequently began to rise in value, so that it cannot now be procured at less than Rs. 14-12, owing, as is well known, to the very depreciated value of silver. This circumstance has increased the price in Indian Rupees of gold, causing the downfall of the exchange from 15 $\frac{1}{4}$ $\frac{1}{2}$ to 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{1}{4}$ and consequently a great and ever-increasing loss. The only remedy that could possibly be adopted by Government lies, I believe, in the increase of the weight of Rupees, if it could be done, without a greater loss to the state. The loss on this head, might, it is surmised, be prevented to a great extent, by allowing a proportionate increase to be made in the copper coins—Pices for a heavier Rupee.

3. Another remedy for the existing evil might be devised, were it practicable for the Indian Government to obtain the permission of Home Government to coin shillings, which, whatever may be the intrinsic value of silver, are invariably accepted in England as twentieth parts of a £ sterling: and to forward them in kind to that country, in payment of debts, pensions, interests on Government loans, &c., fixing their value here, so that they may after bearing the freight, &c., reach England as equal to those in circulation there.

4. Unless either of the above remedies can be adopted by the Indian Government, there may, in my humble opinion, be no prospect of the loss arising from exchange, being put a stop to in future.

5. Soliciting pardon for blunders in this.

AN OBSERVER.

The 20th March, 1890.

THE CORRESPONDENCE ON THE INDIAN COUNCILS BILL.

A Parliamentary paper was issued on Saturday (Mar. 1.) giving extracts from the correspondence which has passed relating to the numbers and functions of the several Councils in India. It begins with an extract from a minute of Lord Dufferin's, dated Nov. 6, 1888, in which he says:—

"For my own part, I think that a yearly financial discussion in the Viceroy's Legislative Council would prove a very useful and desirable arrangement, and a very convenient preliminary to the subsequent debate which takes place on Indian finances in the House of Commons later in the year. I do not by this mean that votes should be taken in regard to the various items of the Budget, or that the heads of expenditure should be submitted in detail to the examination of the Council, but simply that an opportunity should be given for a full, free, and thorough criticism and examination of the financial policy of the Government. Some such change as this would, I believe, prove as beneficial to the Indian Administration as it would be in accordance with the wishes of the European and Native mercantile world of India. At present the Government is exposed to every kind of misapprehension and misrepresentation in regard to its figures and its statement of their results. Were the matter to be gone into thoroughly and exhaustively on the occasion I suggest by independent critics, who, however anxious to detect a blot or to prove the Government in the wrong, would be at all events masters of their subject and cognisant of the technicalities and intricacies of Indian finance, the result would be far more advantageous to the financial reputation of the Indian Government as well as more conducive to the improvement of our financial system than are the present perfunctory Indian financial debates in the House of Commons and the imperfect exposition of Indian finance in some of the English newspapers.

"The second change in the procedure of the Supreme Legislative Council which I am inclined to recommend is that, under proper restrictions to be laid down by the Viceroy, its members should be permitted to ask questions in reference to current matters of domestic as distinguished from those of imperial interest that may have attracted public attention. One of the great dangers of the present situation is the facility with which that section of the press which is bent upon holding up English rule to the hatred and contempt of the people can go on day after day attributing to the Government intentions of inaugurating some obnoxious policy, until they have worked up large sections of the community into a state of excitement and alarm; or else of inventing or exaggerating facts, upon which they subsequently comment in a most malicious manner, with the view of producing a disquieting effect upon the public mind, and infusing into it a spirit of disloyalty and discontent. Under existing circumstances the Government of India has no means of controlling or neutralising the effect of these mischievous practices. It has no adequate medium through which it can explain its policy, correct a wrong impression, or controvert a false statement, and, though up to the present time the consequences of the evils I have indicated may not have become very serious or widespread, they contain the germs of incalculable danger. Consequently it would prove as great an advantage to the Administration as it would frequently be a satisfaction to the members of the Council and the public at large, if reasonable opportunities were afforded of communicating to those interested the exact facts in regard to any questionable matter."

This is enclosed in a Despatch to the Secretary of State from the Viceroy in Council (May 25, 1889) asking the Secretary of State to consider what steps should be taken to give effect to the above. It points out that the terms of sec. 19 of the Indian Councils Act prevent the Council from entering upon any other business than that immediately connected with the work of legislation, and, by an extract from Sir C. Wood's despatch of Aug. 9, 1861, shows that this was an intention deliberately adopted by the framers of the Act. The despatch proceeds—

"We are anxious to explain in reference to this question that in our opinion the Budget should be submitted to the Legislative Council for discussion and criticism only, and that no power should be given to make a motion regarding it, still less to withhold supplies; and we would therefore allow no motion to be made or resolution taken with regard to any Budget, except so far as it depended on legislation, in which case members would be entitled to their usual rights. We would certainly not make the financial arrangements of the Government dependent on the passing of an Appropriation Bill. The advantages to be derived from the public discussion of the Budget would, in our opinion, be found in the exposure of unpopular features, in the opportunity afforded for explanation, and in the suggestions which would be obtained for future guidance; but it would be impossible, under our system of Government, to reconstruct a Budget because it did not meet the approval of the Legislative Council, and it would be unwise to encourage divisions, which would only serve to emphasise the existence of a permanent Government majority.

"We have not excluded from our consideration the fact that an opportunity for the discussion of the Budget might be provided, either by bringing on a Budget debate in connection with any measure directly or indirectly raising financial issues, in the same way as such a debate was allowed this year in connection with the introduction of the Patwari Bill, or even by making it our practice to introduce in every session of the Council some financial measure which might afterwards be dropped, but the introduction of which would afford an occasion for a financial discussion. This expedient, which in fact approaches to an evasion of the statute, is not one to which it would in our opinion be desirable to resort. We consider, moreover, that the exercise of the right which we propose to confer upon the Legislative Council should be secured to it by law, and should not depend upon facilities which it would be in the discretion of the Government for the time being to afford or to withhold.

"In regard to the second proposed modification, it follows, from the argument which we have already advanced, that the right of interpellation could not, in our opinion, be admitted without an alteration of the law. We desire to add that, while Lord Dufferin considered that questions should be restricted to 'current matters of domestic as distinguished from those of Imperial interest,' we are of opinion that there will be an advantage in conceding a large measure of liberty in this respect. It appears to us that occasions may frequently present themselves in which it would be extremely desirable, in the interests of the Government of India, that questions should be addressed to it even upon matters which it would, prima facie, be necessary to enumerate among those excluded from public discussion, if any class or classes of subjects were to be so excluded.

"In connection with the matter of interpellation, we also desire to say that, having considered the safeguards under which the right, if conceded to members of the Council, should be exercised, we think that for the present it will be sufficient to provide that due notice should be given to the Secretary of the Council of any question which a member may desire to ask; and that the President, after communication with the Department of the Government concerned, should be empowered, without giving reasons, to declare that such a question must not be put. We think that the length of the notice to be given, and all other details, should be reserved to be embodied in regulations to be framed by the Governor-General in Council and capable of alteration from time to time.

"We desire, in conclusion, to express our decided opinion that, if the two changes of procedure which we have described are admitted in the case of the Legislative Council of the Government of India, it will be desirable to extend them (perhaps with some further reservations as to the Budget) to the Provincial Legislative Councils."

This despatch is followed by one from the Secretary of State, dated Aug. 1, 1889, as follows:—

"My Lord Marquess,—I have considered in Council the statement made by your Excellency in the course of remarks addressed to your Council when assembled for the purpose of making laws and regulations, on March 29 last, that it is the opinion of the Government of India—

"(a) That the opportunities accorded to the Council for passing under review the financial situation of the country should occur with regularity, and independently of the necessity of financial legislation in any particular year; and

"(b) That members of the Council ought to have, under proper safeguards, the right of addressing questions to the Government upon matters of public interest.

"I fully concur with your Government that it ought always to be possible to obtain for the public the benefits which are certainly derived from the discussions of the Budget, and which I have no doubt will be derived from the reasonable exercise by members of the Council of the right of interpellation. Subject, therefore, to any observations which your Excellency's Government may in the meantime offer for my consideration, I propose to make, at a suitable opportunity, an application to Parliament for such an extension of the powers of the Governor-General's Council (when assembled for legislative purposes), and of the Provincial Councils also, as will authorise the discussion of the Budget independently of any proposed legislation, and as will also give members the right, under certain restrictions, of addressing questions to the Government—and I propose further to take the same opportunity of asking for powers to increase the number of additional members of the several Councils. I think the time has come when it is desirable that public opinion should be more largely and variously represented. And this may, in my opinion, be best effected by a simple extension of the existing system, such as will, by increasing the number of nominations to the Councils, extend the circle of selection, so as to secure, so far as circumstances admit, due representation of considerable sections of the community and of administrative knowledge and experience in the principal departments of the various Governments.

"I enclose, for your Excellency's consideration, twelve copies of a draft Bill which has been prepared with the object of carrying these proposals into effect, and of dealing with certain cognate subjects which have been brought under my notice by your Excellency in Council.

I have, &c.,
(Signed) Cross."

The draft Bill was enclosed. Then follow the remarks thereon of the Viceroy in Council, contained in a Despatch, dated Dec. 24, 1889, stating that the Government of Madras approved the Bill; the Lieutenant-Governor of the N.-West Provinces and Chief Commissioner of Oude also accepted, suggesting a verbal amendment with the view of making it clear that the privilege of asking Governors should not be confined to the discussion of the Budget. The Bombay Government were divided, the Governor approving, with a slight amendment, while other members of the Government objected to its main provisions, and deprecated the enlargement of the Council, the discussion of the Budget, and the interpellation clause. They also suggested that the maximum of additional members should be 14 instead of 20, and urged that there should be power to nominate Native Chiefs of States under the political control of the Local Government. They also took this objection to sec. 3:—"That it would enable the Governor-General in Council in concert with the local Councils to entirely defeat the legislation of his own Council intended for all India." The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal considered the maximum number of additional members fixed by the draft Bill to be too low, and recommended extension to 30. He further desired that the nature of the restrictions to be imposed on the discussion of the Budget and upon the asking of questions, if it could not be indicated in the Bill, should at least be clearly explained in bringing it before Parliament, so that there might be no ground for misunderstanding or recrimination in the future. He gave an illustration of the inconvenience which might possibly arise from the discussion of the Provincial Budget touching upon questions of Imperial finance, which it would be difficult for the Local Government adequately to deal with, and expressed his apprehension that such a discussion might possibly lead to "a hostile resolution." He therefore suggested that an alteration in the existing system of provincial contracts should be made which could admit of dividing the annual financial statement into two parts, one of which, dealing only with the receipts and expenditure fixed by contract, should not be laid before the Council at all, while the other, dealing with those items of revenue which are entirely within the control of the Local Government, should be submitted for discussion. As regards the right of asking questions, he suggested that it should be clearly made known beforehand that the right would be confined to a single question and answer, and that matters still under discussion with superior authority, or which had recently been under such discussion, should not be the subject of interpellation save with the previous consent of the superior authority.

The Despatch of the Viceroy in Council proceeded:—"The majority of us are of opinion that there should be no increase in the number of members composing the Governor-General's Council, and that its enlargement to the extent proposed will have the effect of adding to expenditure without increasing efficiency, or satisfying the demands of those who advocate the creation of a much larger Council. As regards local Councils, we are unanimously opposed to the reduction of the minimum number of councillors below eight, as recommended by the Government of Bombay. Some of us would prefer to adopt for general application to all provinces a larger maximum than any of those provided for in the Bill, upon the understanding that it should be worked up to by degrees. We are, however, unanimously of opinion that an increase up to the numbers specified in the draft may safely be accepted.

"Referring to the second section of the Bill, we do not think it possible or desirable that rules as to the discussion of the Financial Statement or the right of interpellation, which in the nature of things must vary from time to time, should, as suggested by the Bombay Government, be embodied in the Act. It would, however, be desirable, in order to avoid misapprehension, to add to the section a proviso that it shall not be competent for any member of Council to propose any resolution, or divide the Council, in respect of any matter arising out of any financial discussion, or the answer to any question permitted by the Act or the rules made under it. Such a proviso would obviate the apprehension suggested by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal regarding the discussion of the Budget."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which delights our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE SAGE AND THE NYMPH.

A TALE FROM THE SANSKRIT.

By H. H. WILSON.

Should human feelings still remain,
Derision on his suit might wait :
Should her high hopes the Maid retain,
What could he meet, but scorn or hate ?

At length, despairing to restore
The calm that long had been his guest ;
Whilst shame his features purpled o'er,
He told the conflicts of his breast.

" Daughter ! I long in solitude,
Mistaken deem'd that I was wise ;
And loved, in proud and churlish mood,
My fellow mortals to despise.

" But I am punish'd—and 'tis just—
I own myself as weak as they ;
The strength in which I placed my trust
In flight from all allurements lay :

" The charm is broken—thou hast wrought
A change in feelings idly cherish'd.
I blush to speak my every thought
Of final liberation, perish'd.

" My hopes are earthly, and like all
Of earth, I know that they are vain :
Yet must it be—to earth I fall,
Never to heaven to rise again.

" Thou art my heaven—from me as far,
As that to which I late aspired :
As unattainable, as are
The glories former dreams inspired :

" For in thy heart, it cannot be,
The passion such as mine should prey :
I cannot deem thou feel'st for me,
The love that wears my life away.

" Then leave me, Maiden—to the hearth
Domestic, be thy steps retraced ;
Believe me, thou wast form'd for earth,
And human bliss to give and taste.

" For there is bliss beneath the sun :
Too late I learn the lesson now.
The lonely course that I have run,
Was never meant for such as thou.

" The fitter task is thine to plight
Thy hand and faith where love has bound thee—
To give and to receive delight,
A husband and thy children round thee.

" For me, I quit this once loved spot,
To sojourn to each sacred shrine ;
To wear away my cheerless lot,
In penance, and in tasks divine.

" And when I feel the hour is nigh,
That Yama speaks his dread decree ;
I'll drag me here, at last to die,
Beneath this fond remember'd tree,

" Where foolish phantasy I nursed,
A sorrow I will part with never—
Where I beheld thy graces first—
And where I left thee—and for ever.

" And haply then, a sorrowing band,
Of thee and thine, my leafy pyre
May heap, and e'en that gentle hand,
May trembling light my funeral fire.

" And thus thy tenderness shall pay,
Some kind requital of my love :
Release me from these bonds of clay,
And waft me to the realms above."

He ceased, and over his features spread
The ashy paleness of the dead ;
And a convulsive quivering came Across his agitated frame :
But soon subdued, he briefly pray'd
His parting blessing on the Maid ;
And turn'd, as from her to depart,
With drooping brow, and broken heart.

But Lila cried :—" Markanda—hold !
Is this the guidance thou hast vow'd :
And can thy purpose, stern and cold,
Consign me to the heartless crowd ?

" To bitter gibes, that still from men
The change of resolution meets :
No, never will I tread again,
Yon busy city's thronging streets.

" Unless indeed thou guide me thither,
And seek yon haunt of man with me ;
Or any other realm—for whither,
Thou goest, I will go with thee—

" But let us home—a mother's tears
Of joy, shall hail my penance done.
Not less her rapture, when she hears,
That with her Daughter, comes a Son."

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE days of the expensive Indian yellow, made by some peasants in the Monghyr district who keep the secret, seem to be numbered. A Swiss chemist, M. Grœbe, has been able to produce its principal element, euxanthone.

AT an auction sale at Lyme Regis, an oak table was, after a brisk bidding, knocked down to a London antiquary for 142*l*. It formed the property of one Hanbury Miers who certified that it was owned by Cromwell. The value of the article was further enhanced by the allegation that it was upon this table that Cromwell appended his signature to the death warrant of Charles I. A bloody, infernal, butcher table which ought to be burned by the hands of the common hangman, which all respectable people ought to shun, and which can be treasured up as a relic only by sans culottes, caitiffs, Jacobins, Reds, Communists, Fenians, Nihilists, and Irreconcilables of every grade and nation!

THOMAS Hope, a merchant of New York, recently dead, has bequeathed the residue of his estate, valued at upwards of 400,000 dollars, to the town of Langholm, Scotland, for a hospital for the aged and the infirm. Hope was a native of Langholm, and left it when a boy seventy years ago, revisiting it only twice during this long term. He was never married.

Who will say there is nothing in a name? Hope is a famous name for acquisitiveness, and when Thomas is prefixed, the double-barrelled name is simply irresistible.

GRATTAN Geary vs. Symons has ended in double disgrace of the defendant. After the cross-examination of the complainant, the defendant professed to be satisfied with Mr. Geary's denial of sympathy with the Fenians and withdrew the imputation. But the Magistrate was not satisfied with the withdrawal, he took time to consider the matter, and, after a night's cogitation, fined Symons Rs. 300 with the alternative of three months' imprisonment. The Magistrate justly held that the accusation was clearly defamatory, especially for the time and place selected for it, and there was no justification and defence.

ONE Chunnu was tried for and convicted of theft by the Lucknow City Magistrate Mr. Bower, and while being sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, the accused flung a shoe at the Magistrate, which, however, did not strike him. For this attempted offence against judicial dignity, Chunnu will, by order of the Deputy Commissioner, be further incarcerated for three years including three months' solitary confinement. What if the attempt succeeded? Nothing short of hanging and drawing and quartering would have appeased the injured susceptibilities of the British Indian bench!

THE Land Acquisition Act, which is made to play such pranks, has come under the scrutiny of the Privy Council. We read:—

"The Maharajah of Darbhanga v. the Chairman of the Darbhanga Municipality.—This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Bengal of Jan. 24, 1888, reversing a decree of the district judge of Mozuffepore. Mr. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson were counsel for the appellant; Mr. Robinson, Q.C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne for the respondent. The appellant was until 1879 a minor under the care of the Court of Wards, the manager of the estate being Colonel J. Burn. Among his property was a piece of land on the banks of the river Bhagmati, in the town of Darbhanga. In 1874 a declaration was made by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal under the Land Acquisition Act X. of 1870 that a certain portion of this land was required to be taken by the Government, at the expense of the Darbhanga Municipality, for the purpose of constructing a public bathing ghat or landing place. The appellant's manager (Colonel Burn), with the permission of the Court of Wards, presented the plot of land in question to the town at the nominal compensation of one rupee. The land was taken possession of by the municipality, and a small bathing ghat was constructed upon it; but the bulk of it was used by the municipality as a market, to the great loss and detriment, as was alleged, of the appellant, who had an old and well-established market close by. In these circumstances the Maharajah brought, in 1886, the present suit to recover possession of the land. The district judge held that the guardian, Colonel Burn, had no power to give away the appellant's property, and that the transaction, though the forms of the Land Acquisition Act were used, was really a gift. He therefore held that the whole transaction was illusory and void, and he declared the Maharajah entitled to possession of the land, with costs. The High Court, on appeal, reversed that decision, holding that the proceedings were, both in substance and in form, proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, and all that was done by the guardian was to accept nominal compensation when he had a right to insist on substantial compensation; that the municipality were in due legal possession of the land, and were justified in using it for any purpose for which the Statute authorised its use, although not the purpose for which it was professedly taken. From this last decree the present appeal was instituted. At the close of the arguments on both sides, their lordships intimated that they would not require Mr. Cowie to reply, but that they would deliver their judgment at another sitting."

Under the Act, anything is a public purpose whenever the Government wills it. And how lightly is it employed!

IN the introductory note attached to the Index to Reports of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular Representatives abroad on trade and subjects of general interest (with appendix) 1886-88, commercial No. 27 (1889), it is stated that prior to the year 1886 it was the practice of the Foreign Office to publish the reports of Her Majesty's diplomatic and consular representatives abroad on trade, finance and subjects of general interest, in Blue Books at various intervals, when a sufficient number had been received to make a fair-sized volume. These Blue Books were published only during the Session of Parliament, or shortly after its close. This system, however, was open to two serious objections. In the first place, a person requiring a particular report on a specific subject found himself compelled to purchase a volume containing a quantity of extraneous matter possibly of no interest to him, and at a cost consequently in excess of the value of what he really required. A still graver objection lay in the fact that while one report might be printed and ready for publication, it had to wait till others were received in a sufficient number to make up a Blue Book. Considerable delay was thus at times occasioned, and the value of the earlier papers proportionately diminished. Lord Rosebery, when Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, readily recognising the force of these objections which were then strongly urged, took effectual steps to remedy them by ordering a separate publication of all reports both during the Session of Parliament and in the recess. This arrangement met with the unanimous approval of the public and the press, and the reports were henceforward issued at a price well within the reach of all classes.

The series thus established are divided into two categories, "Annual" and "Miscellaneous." In the former, are comprised reports on trade, finance and agriculture, which are annually required, from Her Majesty's mission and consulates abroad. In the latter, are included reports on subjects of general economic interest which are either specially called for by the Secretary of State or voluntarily submitted for publication by their authors. These series have their consecutive numbers which run on from year to year. From the summer of 1886 down to the end of 1888, 445 reports of the annual and 110 of the miscellaneous series have been issued in the separate form, and it is to the salient feature of these 555 reports that the body of the present work is designed to facilitate reference.

MR. H. Lee is Gazetted Chairman of the Commissioners of Calcutta, with effect from the date on which he may take charge from the Hon'ble Sir Henry Leland Harrison, K.T. Mr. Lee has already been acting the Chairman under direction of Sir Henry Harrison. Mr. Lee's appointment as Chairman reduces, during the continuance of the present period of election of the Corporation, the number of Commissioners by one. He was nominated by Government a member in place of a Government Commissioner Dr. O'Brien resigned. The present translation to the head of the Corporation, leaves no vacancy arising from death, resignation or disqualification which can be filled under Sec. 33 of the Municipal Act.

The Commissioners meet specially next Monday, to sanction—under Sec. 43 of the Act—the salary of the new Chairman. The Act has limited the minimum to Rs. 2,500 a month. It is left to the Commissioners to raise it to Rs. 3,000 or to grant in addition house-rent, with approval of the Local Government. The law requires, "All resolutions passed by the Commissioners under this section shall be subject to the approval of the Local Government." Is it competent to the Local Government not to approve the allowance of only Rs. 2,500 sanctioned by the Commissioners for a Chairman?

THIS has gone almost the entire round of the press:—

"Since the death of Mr. Browning, says the Pall Mall Gazette, there has been no more favourite topic of literary discussion than who could or should succeed Lord Tennyson. Some are for Mr. Swinburne, some for Mr. William Morris, some for Mr. Alfred Austin, some for Mr.

Lewis Morris, and so forth. At last, however, a word has been said bearing indirectly on the subject by one who speaks in such matters with the authority of a future Prime Minister. This is Mr. Gladstone who discoursing on 'British Poetry of the Nineteenth Century' in the Speaker awards the palm to Tennyson, and then says:—'Pressing round or upon him, or walking in the same path, we have had many true poets, some of extraordinary and many of very considerable powers. Among those claiming the first of these descriptions I have mentioned Mr. Browning; and the merest justice requires me to add at least the name of Mr. Swinburne. Beyond this, it would be vain in a paper like this either further to enumerate or to classify, or to refer particularly to those legions of the middling and the bad, who constitute, as it were, the camp-followers of the genuine poetic army.' Presumably, therefore, if it ever fell to Mr. Gladstone's lot to nominate a Poet Laureate, his choice would fall upon Mr. Swinburne—a choice which, in view of all the abuse Mr. Swinburne has lavished on 'Gladstone's name,' would be a characteristic instance of great name's magnanimity."

Another curiosity of criticism! Strange that the G. O. M. should show such a decided preference for the head of the Fleshly School of all others—a libertine writer whose genius is so often hid under a mass of empty sounding verbiage. Mr. Gladstone too is prone to redundancy and wordiness, still he never degenerates into mere sound and fury. But then, Mr. Swinburne, though a Pantheist in his poetry and probably an agnostic in creed, is a Greek in art. That is no doubt a strong bond of sympathy between the two. Still one would have thought that the Bard of the Life and Death of Jason would be more after the heart of the most enthusiastic student of Homer and the Heroic Age, of not only all men in the British Islands but of all statesmen of the day.

THE famous fracas at the Calcutta Fire-temple in which Badshaw—we beg his pardon, Padshah—the poor wandering Parsee—was cudgelled like a thief, for his unhappy practical jest, by the Mehtas, bids fair to give our metropolis another Zoroastrian place of worship. The present temple belongs to the family of old and amiable Mr. Manickjee Rustonjee, once of so much importance in the town. If we remember rightly, it was at the time said that the presence of the smoking Parsee and the disturbance in the sacred precincts had detracted from the purity of the place. Be that what it may, we can easily understand the disinclination of the Mehtas to join in divine service or other ceremonies at a place with unpleasant associations for them, even though assured of immunity from future molestation there. But to start a new fire-temple is no joke. It is not a question of purse only. To procure the elements of the necessary sanctity is a most arduous affair. Mr. Mehta senior, father of Mr. R. D. Mehta, at last resolved upon the attempt, and has succeeded. We give the account from the Advocate of India :—

"Towards the latter part of last year, Mr. Dhunjeebhoy Byramjee Mehta, a leading Parsee merchant of Calcutta, opened communications with Dr. Hoshung Jamasp Dastoor, the High Priest of the Parsees in the Deccan, requesting the learned Doctor to give him facilities for opening a new Fire Temple for his own private use at Calcutta. Under the instructions of the Dastoor a party of Mobeds, headed by Dastoor Nusserwanji Byramji Meherjirana, left Poona for Calcutta on the 1st of December last, taking with them a small portion of the eternal holy fire, and other things necessary for the new Fire Temple. The Parsee Scriptures ordain that the sacred fire must be carried to its destination from the chief Fire Temple by priests, who, during the journey, must not touch any one who is not himself a Mobed. Nor must they touch wood, nor eat food prepared by a lay man. In the face of such strict ordinances travelling by rail was out of the question. The party, therefore, undertook to perform the journey on foot—a distance of some fifteen hundred miles. They left Poona on the 1st of December last, and, in order, to avoid passing over wooden bridges which are to be found at various stages of the journey, they were obliged to make long détours by the banks of rivers. They travelled without any serious difficulty until they came to the pontoon bridge which spans the Hooghly between Howrah and Calcutta. Here a difficulty arose. The bridge is made of wood. How should the pious Mobeds pass over to the other side? In their embarrassment they turned to Bombay for guidance. A telegram was sent by them to the High Priest, and that dignitary declared that it would be lawful for the priests to walk over if they first took the precaution of wearing iron soles to their shoes, and if they crossed when no other person was on the bridge at the time. The latter of these injunctions necessitated a special application to the Government of Bengal, which, after due consideration, kindly arranged that the deputation should be allowed to cross the bridge on the conditions deemed necessary by the dastours. The entire journey from Bombay to Calcutta occupied three months."

Now that the Holy Fire has come, the temple will, we believe, be soon ready. There is something truly touching in this patient steadfast faith of our Parsee brethren. Their reverence for the symbol of divinity ought to come home to us Hindus. It is Agni the Eternal—the fire brought down from Heaven by Prometheus and maintained by the Aryan Brahmins and Avestic Priests from a time when both Parsees and Hindus were one people in Central Asia.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE Czar had been suffering from nervousness and fever. His Majesty has had a relapse and is again suffering severely from influenza. To add to the distress, a number of explosives were detected at Gatchina, where it was intended to pass the Easter.

The agitation in Finland is spreading. The Universities have been closed. The students have mobbed the Prefect of Police. At Riazan, they have flogged the District Chief, Mordinoft, and stoned the police. The student excesses are coupled with the announcement that the Education Minister has resigned. The Czar has abandoned the idea of going to Copenhagen, but may visit his Polish estate in summer.

In Russian Asia, there seems a tendency to shift the centre of policy from Tashkend to Samarcand. The Governor of the new Trans-Caspian Province has orders to establish direct international relations with independent Asiatic States, including Afghanistan. General Kuropatkin succeeds General Komaroff as Commandant of Russian troops in the Trans-Caspian district. The Bear is coming.

Meanwhile, as some compensation, the English have stolen a march on the Russian in Persia, and have obtained the tobacco monopoly.

EMPEROR William has made a fresh start in Army Reform. A decree allows sons of middle class families to attain to officers' ranks and increases the pay of the Army officers. It sternly discounts the growing luxury and extravagance of officers. The officers have taken the mandate to heart and some of them have applied for permission to retire.

The populace have, however, barricaded the streets and a development of the situation may be expected.

ON the authority of Germany's greatest living historian, Heinrich von Sybel, in his newly published work, Vanity Fair relates what it calls an amusing story of Field-Marshal von Wrangel and Prince Bismarck:—

"In 1864, during the war against Denmark, Wrangel was at the head of operations. There was some fear that the Western Powers might object to the German troops entering Jutland; in consequence of which a telegram was sent to the Field-Marshal, bidding him advance no further, who thereupon waded back to the Emperor William that 'these diplomatists, who spoil the most successful operations, deserved the gallows.' Bismarck took care to ignore Wrangel's presence whenever he met him on later occasions, which could not fail to annoy him. One day, however, they met at dinner, having both been invited to the King's table. It was a peculiarity of Wrangel that he always called everybody 'du,' or 'thou'; and, turning to Bismarck, who was seated next to him, he said: 'My son, canst thou not forget?' 'No,' was the curt reply. After a short pause, Wrangel began again, 'My son, canst thou not forgive?' 'With all my heart,' answered Bismarck, and the two remained friends till Wrangel's death."

Some people have queer ideas of the amusing. We are dull enough to regard that as rather an instructive anecdote. It is characteristic of the men and creditable to both. Old Wrangel appears the better man because the more humble and determined to make up. Bismarck is more human, because so proud. He would have been a fiend not to forgive. Although haughty, to be sure, he is sound at core.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Army and Navy Gazette says that the Council of the Royal Colonial Institute has acquired, from his son, the original pencil and water-colour drawings of William Westall, A.R.A., landscape painter to the expedition of discovery and survey of the coasts of Australia, commanded by Captain Flinders of the Investigator, in the years 1801-3. Although the collection consists of not more than 107 drawings, some of them are only rough sketches. There are, however, many completed water-colour paintings, comprising views of various places on the south-east and north coasts from King George's Sound to the Gulf of Carpentaria, and drawings of the natives and the flora and fauna of the country, as well as a few sketches of South African scenery.

He then tells what he characterises an amusing story told with regard to one of the pictures:—

"The artist had spread a large canvas on the rocks at King George's Sound to dry, when a couple of middies belonging to the Investigator came up. Wishing to play a practical joke on the painter, they drove a flock of sheep over his canvas, thus spoiling it. One of these middies afterwards became famous as Sir John Franklin, the Arctic navigator."

Amusing, again! Fiddlesticks! It is true North-European wit, not understood of the South. Even lower animals are sometimes conscious of having done wrong or caused loss. Here your gentlemen sailors are quite innocent of any mischief-making to speak of. Their exuberant humour broke forth in practical joking! Verily, they jested themselves down to Vandals and asses. This Flinders approved himself a true descendant of the unlovely and unloved Vikings and obtuse Northmen adventurers. As for poor Franklin, he almost deserved his fate—over-powered possibly by some practical humourists of the Eskimo race. The most surprising part of the whole thing is that, after all the progress of near a century, an Englishman should relate the act of barbarism as an innocent example of the spirit of the gentlemen of the British Navy, with the sanction of so high-classed a journal like the Army and Navy Gazette, conducted as it is by a veteran man of letters whose own humanity towards the Indians is still gratefully remembered, who indeed at a critical time had the courage to expose the "fun" of his countrymen in India at the expense of the poor natives, and, in consequence, brought upon himself no end of obloquy.

WE read—

"The King of Siam formerly had a real Amazonian guard of 400 members. This guard consisted of the most beautiful and the strongest young women in his kingdom. Every recruit had to be at least thirteen years old and of almost perfect physical development. After serving twelve years she was retired to the reserve corps. An active guards-woman was a personal life-guard of his Siamese Majesty. A reserve guardswoman, however, had merely the duty of watching the royal palaces and the Crown estates. Every recruit, before she was admitted to the Amazonian guard, took the oath of chastity, for the King of Siam allowed only women of the strictest virtue in his personal military service. The Amazonian corps wore most elaborate uniforms. A fine white gold-embroidered woollen skirt hung down to the knees. Over this each wore a light coat of mail. The arms were bare. The head was covered with a golden helmet."

"Generally, however, the Amazons carried muskets. The corps consisted of four companies of 100 Amazons each, commanded by female captains."

This is a far more respectable corps than the King of Dahomey's Invincibles, of pure savagery bred.

DISCIPLINE was well maintained, however these formidable vestals were a well-behaved set. On an average, there was one case for punishment per year. But they were sensitive and apt to take fire. After all, they were only women and, of course, quarrelsome. They had learnt the use of weapons more dangerous than tongues or hands, fingers and nails. Hence there were frequent duels.

"Duels were frequent among the Amazons. Before a duel could be fought the permission to fight it had to be obtained from the Commander-in-Chief. Swords were usually chosen as the weapons, and the meeting took place in the presence of the whole company to which the challenger belonged. An Amazon who fell in a duel was buried with extraordinary pomp, and the priest in his funeral oration usually recommended her to a high place in heaven in consideration of her bravery on the field of honour. The victorious duellist was congratulated by her comrades. She was obliged, however, to retire from her company for two months, which she passed in fasting and praying. Then she was reinstated with high honours in the active service."

This discovery has some anthropological value. After all, whether in Asia or in Africa, this degradation of the sex is a survival of primitive barbarism. The Mongolian races of the hills on the East of India Proper and in Ultragangetic India, many of whom still depend upon female labour, are the natural soil for such an institution as female warriors and dashing guardswomen.

IN this age of rank doubt, disbelief and destruction of every worshipful object, when the scriptures of every race are at a discount, and the arithmetic of Moses and Vyasa is scrutinised with the eye of a professional auditor, what hope is there for less venerable objects—lesser idols! What havoc has been made with our dearest possessions! One after one, we have been compelled to give up to the critical Herod for massacre all our lares and penates. First, we were deprived of our dear wolf and her foster twins, the immortal founders of Rome—immortal in despite of all the Niebuhrs and Lewises. Then the people's historian Shakespeare was poolpoohed. Then the Patriot Tell and his orange was demolished. Nor was quarter extended to the famous Newtonian orange. The process of Iconoclasm continued, and every year has swelled the hecatomb.

Another dainty little possession of ours is just now under attack and may as well be reckoned hors de combat, though not a few valiant knights have stepped forward to the rescue. Not the least touching incident in the ruthless war of the Indian Mutiny of 1857, was that which has since been enshrined in the memory with the name of "Highland Jessie." It is a story of a Scotch soldier's wife, one of the besieged at the Lucknow Residency, whose keen instinct for her national music, when nobody else in that hour of anxiety, turmoil, and hard work, as well as noise, within and without, of besiegers and besieged, discerned that anything was in the air, first caught from afar the faint but to her unmistakable strains of bagpiping, and announced to the desponding garrison the invaluable news that relief was certain, for the Highlanders were approaching. That incident was soon enough sung in verse and set to music, and became one of the fond beliefs of the British. But it was no more true than the countless stories of unheard-of atrocity which were sent to England to inflame the good people at Home and led to the counter-atrocities which stained the British triumph.

The subject has come up for discussion in the Home press, and notwithstanding the advocacy of Mr. Archibald Forbes, the story has been thoroughly discredited. The woman is said to have been the wife of a soldier of the 78th Highlanders. How could she have been in the Residency and heard the band of the same relieving Highlanders? And then Havelock had to fight every inch of ground from a great way off Lucknow, and in the city the fighting was too desperate, the small relieving column being hemmed in by a multitudinous enemy, to allow of the luxury of music.

Besides the writers in the British press, a gentleman from Rajputana gives in the Statesman of yesterday conclusive evidence, as follows:—

"SIR,—I see a great deal lately in your papers about Jessie and the Bagpipes at the Relief of Lucknow. I will just tell you what several of the garrison (relatives and intimate friends who belonged to that glorious band) told me. When the song first came out, owing to recent circumstances, it took wonderfully; every body was singing it. I was a firm believer in the truth of the incident, till some of the above mentioned members of the garrison burst out laughing when I spoke admiringly of the incident and song. They said there was no Jessie among the 32nd in the garrison, and if there had been, no sound of the bagpipes could reach her, owing to the noise, and confusion all round. Havelock's little force did not march to Lucknow with bagpipes playing and drums beating, but every foot of ground they had to contest hard; for the nearer they came, the fight was severer, and Jessie, if there was such a lass, could have heard no music amid the roaring of the guns and the shouts of the enemy. I am sorry the incident is not true, for the song and air set to it are very pretty, and quite suited to the occasion for which they were composed.

AJMERE."

That ought to end the controversy. We assume the letter to be authenticated, as its contents bear on them evident marks of authenticity. The writer should now permit the editor to publish his name.

THE weather in Calcutta continues unseasonable. There is heat, but dust-storms are nowhere. There is no rain, and the east wind makes body and soul ache.

THE Influenza still rules. There is no sign of abatement, on the contrary, three deaths are reported in Calcutta, and two in Simla.

LORD Harris is come and has been received and sworn as Governor of Bombay. Lord Reay returns home to-day. He will be always gratefully remembered in India for the Herculean labor of cleansing the Bombay Administration of its Crawford and Crawfordism.

THE retiring Mr. F. B. Peacock, C.S., has had all the honors that sycophancy and personal friendship could procure. There was an evening entertainment at the Town Hall on Thursday. As a Native demonstration, it was a dead failure, the dozen composing the Entertainment Committee, without head or tail, representing Native Bengal. But what more could be expected of a hole and corner business got up between a Jugdanand and an ex-convict banker. The relations of this latter worthy with the officials are so well-known that those of the latter who attended simply compromised themselves. Next night, at the same place, his Service brethren complimented Mr. Peacock with, and over, a dinner. Sir Stewart Bayley, as one of the Service, was present on both the occasions. But a toast even in the Town Hall could not lighten the heavy heart brooding over the Chief Commissionership that was never offered. The dear "governor" at home—how unlike the father and the son—will, we dare say, be able to procure the returned Prodigal a cheap knighthood.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1890.

SIR DAVID BARBOUR'S BUDGET.

THERE never was a better opportunity for affording some relief from taxation than the present. Sir David Barbour's Budget for 1890-91 is as satisfactory as possible. There has been a marked improvement in the Revenue under all the principal heads. The chief improvement has taken place under Opium.

In last year's Budget, the selling price of the Bengal drug was taken at Rs. 1,070 a chest, while the actual price obtained has been Rs. 1,136. This has brought an increase of about 29 lacs of rupees in Opium Revenue, while, owing to a short crop, there has been a saving of expenditure of more than 70 lacs of rupees. Altogether, the improvement under Opium comes to nearly a crore. It is true Sir David Barbour does not count upon the continuance of a good selling price, and speaks of the improvement obtained in the estimates, both of revenue and expenditure, as of a character not likely to be maintained. Nevertheless, the difference between his forecasts and the actuals is sufficient to give point to the argument of those who say that good times have come when the people should be given some relief from the burdens of taxation. The difference looks like a big discrepancy calling for fuller explanation than what has been offered. It has at any rate not passed without comment. The Civil and Military Gazette speaks of it in the strongest terms:—

"It is a great misfortune that there is no 'opposition' financial authority in India—such as the ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer at Home—to expose the injustice of a system which by the simple device of under-estimating the probable revenue of the year leads the public and the press generally to acquiesce year after year in taxation which would otherwise assuredly be called into question. The income tax and the enhanced salt tax, are imposts which press unduly upon the poorer sections subject to them respectively. Many of our readers feel the first; and for the second it is enough to state that the consumption of salt is still less than it was in the year before the imposition of the enhanced duty; whereas the use of salt as a necessary of life ought to accurately reflect the natural increase of population. We hold, therefore, that no system of finance is praiseworthy which Budgets for a surplus without even discussing the advisability of removing or lowering these obnoxious imposts."

There is great force in our Lahore contemporary's contention. As to the charge of underestimating the probable revenue of a year, it involves, indeed, a serious reflection upon the Government, but the fact that Budget forecasts are systematically found to be considerably discrepant from the actuals that occur, lends great colour to the charge. The single discrepancy under Opium to which we have referred and which the public come to know of for the first time from the Finance Minister's late Budget statement, is sufficient to support such undoubtedly harsh criticisms.

But this is not all. The Budget statement furnishes other corroborative matter. The improvement has not been confined to Opium alone. Sir David Barbour says himself that "there has been a very satisfactory increase of revenue" under Land Revenue, Salt, Excise, Stamps, Provincial Rates, Customs, Assessed Taxes, Forests, Registration, and Tributes from Native States. And what is this very satisfactory increase of revenue equivalent to? Does it not mean that Sir David Barbour's last year's Estimates have been all very considerably exceeded under all the Principal Heads of Revenue? If there was no intentional underestimation, it was something about as bad. The effect in either case is the same, so far as the taxpayer is concerned. Wilful or accidental, the revenue was shown at a low pitch enough to discourage hopes of reduced taxation.

The Lahore journal has at any rate made an useful contribution to the discussion of the Budget. It is perfectly right, as it says that the character of the discussion would be far more practical and effective if there were an "opposition" financial authority in India such as the ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer at Home. Indeed, as it is, the discussion is a farce. To deal with a labyrinth of figures such as the Budget is to any purpose—figures all settled behind one's back, and which one is expected to criticise without any due preparation, is wellnigh an impossibility. It is thus that we find that the tone of the remarks of Hon'ble members, even when a few of them muster courage to call in question any of the financial measures of the year, or to suggest some alterations like the giving up of any source of revenue, is rather apologetic and supplicatory than possessed of the strength which comes from thorough knowledge and mastery of a financial expert.

We have for the last two years read hopeful signs in the Viceroy's Budget speeches with regard to the discontinuance of the Income-tax. But we must confess to a growing sense of misgiving on the point. Lord Lansdowne speaks with characteristic straightforwardness, but if in view of such an unusually prosperous Budget as the present, his Lordship has not been able to grant relief to, at all events, the lowest classes of the payers of this hateful impost, the case for its utter abolition must be hopeless indeed. The restoration of the Famine Grant is considered by his Lordship's Government as an object of prior importance. Both the Finance Minister and the Viceroy vindicate this course in the most earnest terms of approval, and it is not for us to traverse the views of such responsible men. But there have been so many changes of the Government policy with regard to this subject, that we do not know that the urgency of the revival of the Grant outweighed the benefit that would have been the direct and immediate effect of a revision of the Income Tax. A Famine Grant is essentially of the nature of a Reserve Fund, and as was ably argued by Raja Durga Charan Law, it were as well that the name were changed. It is to all intents and purposes a Reserve Fund, and if it were called by that name, it would remove a world of misapprehension and difficulty. Taking it then in the light of a reserve fund, is it too much to say that the Government should have shown better regard for the circumstances of their subject people by postponing the revival of this fund till after the oppressions incidental to some of their sources of revenue were mitigated? We regret Raja Durga Charan Law, who last year had made a strong appeal for the repeal of the Income Tax, has so thoroughly changed his views since as to say that "it is too early yet to speak of any remission of taxation. There will be time enough next year to think of it, if the position of affairs continue to be prosperous." If a year of such substantial surplus is not time fit for remission, such remission could only come in the Greek Kalends. The year is not only a prosperous year in itself, but it contains good promise for the future. We need not go beyond Sir David Barbour's speech for proof of this. The Finance Member says:—"The large improvement in Revenue which is shown under the Principal Heads of Civil Revenue (excluding Opium) is of a permanent nature or, in other words, we can safely reckon on obtaining the same increase in future years. If there is any falling off under some heads, it will be balanced by increase under other heads." After this, and going so far as the Raja did in his correct exposition of the Famine Grant, to stop short of the legitimate conclusion must be a source of real regret to the people. If it is not time to speak of reduction of taxation, we do not know what that time is.

The secret of the Government of India's preference for the Famine Relief Fund is not far to seek. It is now indeed an open secret. The Government on the spot only echo with loudness the whisper of the Home authorities, and these act under pressure from the unspeakable Bradlaugh. There is great virtue in a Parliamentary mouthpiece.

PUNJAB LITERATURE.

A RATHER nondescript pamphlet has reached us from the Land of the Five Waters under the name of the Punjab Magazine for January 1890. It is No. 26, but we never saw it before and can only judge from what we see. It has a second title, namely, "The organ of the Punjab Association." Were it not for these last two circumstances, one might well doubt the periodicity of the publication. For it is certainly not a work of the ordinary magazine class or calibre. It is true there is the Indian Magazine in London of the National Indian Association in Aid of Social Progress in India, of which the Punjab Magazine is an offshoot, as the Punjab Association is but a daughter---indeed an acknowledged branch---of the London society. But the example of good Miss Manning is scarcely safe authority for departing from the time-honored traditions of the English language and British society. Besides, an Indian Magazine on English soil stands on an exceptional footing. It is unmistakable---it cannot deceive; certainly people would look into it before having anything to do with it. The true analogy between the two cases would have been if, instead of "Indian," the Society in question had called their work the "English Magazine" or the "London Monthly." Indeed, the designations of both the Punjab society and its organ are misnomers. The "Punjab Association" taken by itself betokens a serious business combination, even a political organization. The full style which we come across at the head of the Rules given as the last article of the magazine, namely, "The Punjab Association in Aid of Social Progress and Education in India," trailing as it is, no doubt modifies the impression. But what an unhappy choice is that! what a long, straggling, unwieldy affair! It is condemned by the very authors fighting shy of it and practically restricting themselves to the handy abbreviation. Our complaint is that a loose, unconsolidated fraternity of dilettante philanthropists had no business, at the very dawn of Civilization on the Frontier, to appropriate to themselves a name which should, in modesty as well as justice, have been reserved for serious workers for the amelioration of the political institutions and administrative machinery of the country. For themselves, they might well have been content with a word of three or at most four syllables, instead of aspiring to the dignity of the most full-mouthed and high-sounding polysyllable in the connection known to the not overcopious English tongue. Then, whatever name they fancied for themselves, they might at least, in giving a name to their organ, have spared the interests of literature. Would it not have served their purpose tolerably as well had they called it simply the "Journal" of their Society? If their ambition would not be satisfied with anything short of the highest, the word "Transactions" was still open to them. That would have gratified all the aspirations of the Lions, young and old, of the Punjab, without trenching either on the dignity or the convenience of letters. As it is, the name compromises important interests, without well lending itself to their ends. As the word is understood, a magazine is not the proper appellation for the organ of a committee of educationists and reformers. Although respectably got up---well printed on good paper---the fasciculus before us is not a magazine proper. It has not even the common business attributes of one. Though numbered and dated, there is no intimation anywhere of its regular periodicity. We know not whether it is a monthly, a quarterly, or a half yearly publication. This number is dated January 1890; we received it towards the end of the first quarter---on the 20th March. There is no knowing when the next issue will come out. Its connection with the society whose organ it professes to be, seems an artificial, forced connection---at best of the slightest. Beyond the single circumstance of the Rules of the society appearing in it, there is no other---not the slightest sign of association with the Punjab Association.

Of the 55 pages of this number, 6 are taken up with the Rules of the Association and another 6 with social and educational notes of the flimsiest newspaper character. The remainder is consumed between the opening paper and a brief article of five pages—as a sort of longboat at the end of the flagship—introduced apparently to keep up appearance, and avoid the reproach of a single-article magazine. Such a strained mode of satisfying public expectation cannot serve the purpose, because it never deceives. The conductors might perhaps have given their chief article of 37 pages by instalments in two issues, though it is usually hazardous to break the continuity of an essay, and nobody who can help submits to such treatment of the brats of his brain. The Notes are probably indispensable to reconcile to the taxation involved the unlearned supporters of the movement, to whom the Greek Drama is worse than Greek—absolute gibberish. At any rate, the Rules might have been circulated as a fly sheet and their space utilised for some interesting reading. It is almost an imposition on the readers to fill up a magazine with the Rules of an institution or such other “shop.”

The minor article is a review of the Life of Dr. Anandbai Joshee by Mrs. Caroline Healey Dall, published at Boston. We have not seen this work and we confess to a prejudice against the author. She is the widow of our late useful and amiable townsman, the Rev. C. H. A. Dall. She can scarcely be an amiable creature: she certainly never struck us a good wife. Mr. Dall revived the American Unitarian Mission in Calcutta when it had been forgotten for an age after the final retirement of the philanthropic scholar, William Adam, who was one of the leading pioneers of Indian improvement. He found it more than uphill work—a desperate adventure. But Mr. Dall with his American energy and persistence and his Asiatic self-sacrifice, succeeded as far as was possible with his scanty means. He got up a subscription here, got together a small congregation with whom he held regular divine service, made friends of the people, attended their meetings, delivered lectures, issued tracts, started a temperance movement, preached Unitarianism, and even “annexed” Ram Mohun Roy, until he was himself annexed by the greater Keshub Chunder Sen, as Ram Mohun Roy himself had “annexed” his own predecessor the ingenious William Adam. Meanwhile, his society in Boston withdrew their grant, while his handful of a congregation was dispersed by death or departure or sickness or individual losses. Any other man would have bowed to the inevitable. Not so Mr. Dall. He worked for gain, going to the length of learning stenography for the purpose. He reported for the press and opened a class for teaching short-hand, and not only supported himself but maintained his several institutions. Then he went to England and to America, much like a showman, to exhibit a couple of reformed Unitarian Indians, and created some interest in his work in Great Britain and the United States. Thus he was enabled to keep up a number of useful benevolent institutions, principally schools for boys and girls, not the least remarkable of which was a genuine ragged school for the reclamation of the little street Arabs of the City of Palaces. During all the thirty odd years of the husband's noble exile, the Christian wife did not once give him the solace of her company on the voyage, nor cared to join him in this country. She enjoyed her remittances and the single blessedness of a “grass-widow” at home, though we dare say she indited decent responses to his affectionate despatches. When at last the goodman—in both senses—went to his last home, the widow, we need hardly say, did not bury herself alive in grief, as a Christian Sutter, with her husband's relics. She, however,—now of something more than a “grass-widow”—for the first time conceived it time enough and becoming to see the scene of his earthly labours. But she came down like the Assyrian in Byron's Hebrew Melodies, to seize his money and goods, which seizure she effected with a thoroughness that starved the institutions of her late husband into nothingness and extinguished his work. We regard it a piece of impertinence in such a woman to set herself up for biographer of any true Hindu woman like Anand Bai. The reviewer, we must say, has, out of scanty materials, given a touching account of the good and intrepid Mahratta girl.

The piece de resistance—the centre of attraction—is Dr. W. H. Rattigan's paper of 37 pages on “The Greek Tragic Poets as Moral Teachers.” It was originally a Lecture delivered to the students of the Lahore Government College. We are glad to find the leading members of European society in the Punjab take such a lively interest in the elevation of the people. The times have long since passed away in Bengal when a man of Dr. Rattigan's position, whose fortune was made and fame established, would think of coming down, prepared “with toil of sprite,” to amuse and instruct a lot of blackboys and young men. Besides the condescension, the act involved pains-taking. The subject was a learned one requiring cautious handling in the interest of one's reputation. DeQuincy long since exploded the classical pretensions of educated British society, and on the Continent the acquirements of English University men only raise a smile. The truth is that, though Latin and Greek from the staple of Liberal Education, the study, that of Greek in special, is not kept up, until the despised “crib” is in request as with the unlearned to whom the learned tongues are ever the “unknown tongues.” With the British exiles in India—torn from academic surroundings, influences and associations, condemned to work among and for aliens who never heard of Homer or Troy, whose Greece is almost confounded with Arabia, whose Alexander the Greek is a myth of the Persian imagination, and whose Rome is the Ottoman Stamboul, and retiring for recreation to a local European society which does not recall the studies of college—matters are even worse. Few such would care to go to the risk of appearing before the public to hold forth at any length on a classical theme. For, truth to say, even with the help of translations and expositions and histories now abounding, the undertaking is not without hazard, unless a man is equipped with genuine first-hand acquaintance with his subject. Armed with this knowledge, Dr. Rattigan has had no such fear. He is not only a scholar but shows uncommon familiarity with the leading productions of the Tragic Muse of old Greece. Yet his essay could not have been prepared without considerable work. The popular treatment of learned topics demands considerable consideration and special tact. Those only who have done it know what it is to bring recondite matters down to the level of ordinary comprehension. It is scarcely less difficult to make the ideas of Greek poets interesting to Hindu, Mussulman and Sikh youth than to bring philosophy from the clouds. Think, then, of the tedious process of determining the passages in the original suitable to the purpose in hand and then selecting from among several versions in different translators the most accurate as well as most forcible, and sometimes going to the length of translating himself. The mere drudgery of copying has not been small. Of course, it was, much of it, a labour of love, in more senses than one. So far as it implies a loving kindness for them, the students of Lahore ought to be grateful to their instructor. And now that the Lecture is available to the world, the Indian public may well reciprocate that honorable sentiment, if only pour encourager les autres.

There was, besides, a literary hazard of a more serious kind than any individual compromise in the attempt. We refer to the danger, by weak or inadequate treatment, of prejudicing the audience against the ancient foreign authors dealt with. That was by no means an imaginary fear. It is one of the hardest things in literature to recommend to any purpose any writings to those who are unacquainted with their language. It is specially difficult by translation to induce true, that is, cordial appreciation. The difficulty is intensified to the verge of impracticability where you have to cause an admiring acceptance of a literature whose spirit and methods and the mechanism of its tongue are so foreign to those of your audience's literature and tongue as well as to those of your own literature and particularly your own language, in which your exposition is conveyed---just the case with Dr. Rattigan and his hearers at Lahore. To our mind, there is---there can be---no translation of literature as literature. Accordingly, such a task as Dr. Rattigan took in hand was eminently risky on the side indicated. It is specially vain by means of a hissing, partially monosyllabic language like the English, to give an adequate idea of the grand instrument of thought employed by the ancient Greeks---even to suggest anything like the impression of the pomp of the grandest Tragedy in the world. Of course, Dr. Rattigan could not achieve the impossible. He has done the utmost with his linguistic medium. It was in the nature of things scarcely open to do more. He might easily have done less, without perhaps much obloquy.

It would have been a cruelty to the Lahore youth, and might have done incalculable harm to the cause of education and letters in Northern India, if the Lecture had given a mean idea of Greek literature. That danger the Lecturer managed to escape. His paper is calculated to produce a tolerably high impression of his subject-matter, as far as the case admits of. He showed judgment in utterly discarding prose as medium for reproducing the thoughts of his originals. Prose, always a weak vehicle for conveying the sentiment of Poesy, is an impertinence in respect of such masterpieces of literature as the tragedies of Æschylus, Sophocles and Euripides.

The nature of the literature whose ethics he took to familiarise his Indian hearers with, is fairly indicated by the continual use he makes, often no doubt involuntarily, of the term "sublime" or "sublimity." The oft-recurring grandeur of Æschylus leaves his expositor no choice but over and over again to stumble on that single expression. No other Greek, not Homer excepted, makes such a demand.

After what we have said, it goes without saying that the paper is an able performance. It is a well-written scholarly contribution to the literature of the subject in the English language. In diction usually terse and occasionally noble, he not only takes up the study of the Greek tragedies from a new point of view, with here and there a brief reference to Eastern literatures, but also gives a striking rapid view of the three acknowledged masters of the serious Greek Drama, in their relations to one another, and to their respective times, fixing their proper place in the history of their national literature and altogether in the Greek evolution. There is some discriminate criticism too interspersed, as the defence of Euripides' Iphigenia. It was bold to enter the lists against Aristotle on a question of human nature among the Greeks, but the knight comes from the fray with flying colours. After all, on such a question a Poet is the greater authority than the Philosopher, even though he is the greatest of all philosophers.

English literature is singularly barren on the subject, though doubtless much has been done within the present generation to remove the reproach. The Indian student who has no access to essays scattered in the different periodicals and Transactions, will gain a clearer idea of the chief plays of the Greek Tragic Theatre from this Lahore popular Lecture than from, say, either Dr. Major's Guide or Mr. Darley's work on the Grecian Drama. Dr. Rattigan naturally has derived more assistance from Continental sources than British. It would be easy to pick holes in his presentation of a recondite subject. In a popular discourse delivered to Asiatic youth, he necessarily passes over many facts, some of which might be used against himself. But on the whole, he shows a deeper insight into the subject and gives more of rational criticism than most of the old translators and commentators. Lastly, he has earned the thanks of us all by collecting all the choice moral sentiments of the best Greek poetry. In this too he has shown sound sense. It would not have done, for instance, to familiarise the young Asiatic with Euripides the misogynist. The ethics culled by him are unexceptionable, and some of the thoughts of the old Greeks are of peculiar interest to the Indian youth of the period.

CELEBRATION OF THE 135TH ANNIVERSARY OF HAHNEMANN'S BIRTHDAY.

On Thursday, the 10th April, at 8 P. M., a meeting of the Hahnemann Anniversary Society, in commemoration of 135th Anniversary of the Birthday of Hahnemann, was held at the Albert Hall, College Square.

The President, the Hon'ble Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, on taking the chair, before proceeding to the business proper of the meeting, begged to place before it a Resolution which he was confident would be carried unanimously. Gentlemen will remember, he said, that at the last anniversary meeting he had the sad duty to announce the serious illness of Babu Rajinder Dutt, who was one of their Vice-Presidents, how mournfully that illness terminated, and how it has deprived them, all Calcutta, and Homœopathy of a friend whose like it will not be their lot to meet here on earth again. It was therefore out of simple gratitude that he begged to propose "That this meeting expresses its deepest sorrow at the death of Baboo Rajinder Dutt who, though not the very first practitioner of Homœopathy in India, was the very first through whose zealous and powerful advocacy, untiring philanthropic exertions, and brilliant cures, Homœopathy gained a stable footing in Calcutta and thence spread throughout the country. By his death Calcutta has lost a most kind-hearted healer of sickness and a public benefactor, Bengal a worthy son, and Homœopathy a staunch and enthusiastic advocate and a most successful practitioner."

The proposition was seconded by Baboo Ramakshay Chatterjee, and carried unanimously.

The proceedings of the last meeting were then read and confirmed.

Then at the call of the President, Babu Grish Chunder Dutt read a paper on the Life of Hahnemann, and on the Reform, destructive and constructive, which he effected in Medicine. A vote of thanks to the writer of the paper having been duly proposed, seconded and carried, the President brought the proceedings to a close by remarking that in future years these anniversaries of Hahnemann's birthday should be celebrated not by simply dwelling on the generalities of his doctrine, for already all that could and need be said about the ignorance and opposition of the dominant profession, about the unscientific character of Old Medicine, and about the scientific character of the New System, has been exhausted. These anniversaries should be celebrated by doing something by way of continuation of the work begun by the great Master, and he (Dr. Sircar) could not think that they could do better than bring to these anniversary meetings at least one new proving and one re-proving. Their country was a rich store-house of remedial agents, and if they only followed in the path pointed out by Hahnemann they could add immensely to the Materia Medica Pura. Those who practised Homœopathy must have become convinced that for a large majority of diseases they have not got the appropriate remedy, and that the drugs already in their possession require to be more thoroughly proved than they have been, in the light of modern advanced knowledge of the structures and functions of animal organisms. There was necessity therefore not only of provings of new drugs, but of re-provings of the old ones. He therefore hoped that they shall be able to inaugurate this new era for Homœopathy in India at the next anniversary.

THE DOORGA POOJA HOLIDAYS

Calcutta 4th November, 1889.

From---Pundit Mohesh Chunder Nyaratna.

To---The Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo, No. 884-89, I enclose herewith, in a tabular form, a list of Hindu holidays for the year 1890. I may add that in drawing up the list I have consulted the learned professors of the Sanskrit College. The Hindu holidays are mostly festivals connected with religion in which worship or ceremonies with a religious sanction are indissolubly associated with festivities. It sometimes happens that a day of worship with or without festivity, is followed by a day of festivity with no worship, but with only certain observances with a religious sanction. A few of the holidays are days of fasting followed by no festivity. In my list I have included no day in which there is no worship, with or without festivity, or ceremony with religious sanction, with or without festivity.

A List of Hindu holidays for the year 1890.

Holiday.	Month and dates.	Days of the week.	REMARKS.
Saraswati Puja	25th & 26th January.	Saturday & Sunday.	This is a festival observed by all Hindus except those belonging to the lowest castes.
Siva Ratri ...	17th & 18th February	Monday & Tuesday.	The first day is a day of fast. The fast is kept by only a few.

Kartick Puja	14th & 15th Nov.	Friday and Saturday.	A moderately popular festival.
Jagat Dhatri Puja.	20th & 21st Nov.	Thursday & Friday.	An important festival.

14th November 1889.

From---Pundit M. C. Nayratna.

To---The Secretary to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

In reply to your letter of the 12th instant, No. 914-89. I beg to say that the Doorga Puja in 1890 will really commence on the 19th October. On this day the worship is to consist of Bodhana and Amantrana, i. e., of rites for awakening the Devi from her sleep, Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Some occupations tend to the development of certain diseases, and those who toil as miners are peculiarly liable to rheumatism, lumbago, and other allied complaints. In the gold-fields and copper mines Holloway's remedies have been largely patronized by the workers to their very great advantage, and they can be confidently recommended as invaluable remedies for inward congestions, spasms and cramps in the bowels, and all those conditions of the lungs and liver to which those who work underground or in impure atmospheres are so peculiarly liable. For cuts, bruises, sprains and stiffened joints, the action of Holloway's Ointment is eminently healing and soothing, and a supply should always be at hand in case of need.

for the season being one for sleep to the gods and goddesses according to Hindu belief, and for invitation to her. This ceremony, like that of awakening and Inviting, is performed by the priest in the morning of the 20th October and continues to the 22nd. On the 23rd there is to be Bisarjana, i. e., the parting ceremony with the Devi. This ceremony, like that of awakening and inviting, is performed by the priest in the morning. There is, however, the ceremony of throwing the idol into rivers or tanks in the afternoon, with attendant processions, and the exchange of greetings among relatives and friends in the evening. The strictly worship days for others besides priests in 1890 will thus be the 20th, the 21st and 22nd October. The strictly worship day in the Lukhi Pooja will be the 27th October.

In conclusion, I think it proper to observe that among the people the festivities, &c., attendant on Poojas are matters of greater interest than the Poojas (strictly religious worship) themselves. From the same point of view I consider that the day following the day of worship on the occasion of Kali Pooja, instead of Pooja day itself, should be holiday when only a day's holiday is given on this occasion. The Pooja takes place at night and the attendant festivities and processions take place for the most part the following day.

The enclosure if your letter is returned herewith.

THE NEW GERMAN CHANCELLOR.

In a telegram, dated March 19, the Berlin correspondent of the Times sends the following account of Prince Bismarck's successor:—

Both yesterday and to-day General von Caprivi had special interviews with the Emperor, and his appointment as partial successor to the offices now held by Prince Bismarck will probably be published to-morrow simultaneously with the announcement of the present Chancellor's complete retirement from affairs. I say "partial successor" because General von Caprivi will only succeed to the two-fold function of Minister-President of the Prussian Cabinet and Chancellor of the German Empire, leaving the post of Prussian Minister for Foreign Affairs to some one else. But his non-acceptance of the latter office has little intrinsic importance, seeing that the Prussian Minister for Foreign Affairs proper has only to deal with the relations of the Monarchy to the other Federal States of the Empire, while the relations of the Empire to all non-German countries will remain in the hands of the new Chancellor.

General George von Caprivi de Caprera de Montecucculi, to give him his full title, is now in his 59th year, having been born at Berlin on February 24, 1831. His father, descended from an illustrious Italian stock, was a high legal functionary in the service of the Prussian State. Entering a general regiment in his 18th year, he won rapid promotion and served with distinction in the campaigns of 1864 and 1866. In 1870 he acted as Chief of the Staff to the 10th Corps, of which he is now the commander, and reaped fresh laurels in all the battles on the Loire. Swiftly ascending the other steps of the military ladder, he was appointed in 1883 to the command of the 30th Division at Metz; and next year, passing at a single bound from the army to the navy, he succeeded to Herr von Stosch, on the latter's retirement from the head of the Admiralty.

In a short time naval men by profession were amazed at the mastery of their art and the perception of their interests which were displayed by a mere lands-man and soldier like von Caprivi, and his administration conclusively proved at least that there was a man with a rare power of adapting himself to new modes and lines of activity, a faculty which will render less strange and less dangerous his impending transition from soldiering to diplomacy and statesmanship. Soon after the present Emperor's accession, on the death of Count Monts, he reorganised the navy; the command of the Imperial fleet being vested in Admiral von Der Goltz, while something like a ministry of marine was created under Rear-Admiral von Heussen; and it was on this occasion that General von Caprivi, sharing in the redistribution of military commands, returned to his first love, and was rewarded for his loyalty thereto, no less than for his naval services, with the 10th or Hanoverian Army Corps, which is one of the finest in the whole army.

During the manœuvres of last autumn, when the Hanoverians and Westphalians met in mimic warfare, with smokeless powder and other innovations on their trial, the Emperor had opportunity enough anew to study the character of General von Caprivi, and this general's character and ability to serve him in a political capacity must have fairly convinced his Majesty, otherwise he would never have asked him to assume the enormous burden of responsibility which Prince Bismarck has now laid down. It was not without grave scruples and self-distrust that General von Caprivi listened to the flattering proposals of the Emperor; but his Majesty, as it is said, finally decided to have a soldier for his new Chancellor, thinking, as he does, with Frederick the Great, that a general must be the surest conductor of a foreign policy, as knowing best how far he can go with the army behind him.

But, though a soldier of the first order, General von Caprivi, in the opinion of all who know him, is very much more than a soldier; and if personal appearance is to count for anything, he must be a man of great force of character and will, combining in a high degree the suaviter in modo with the fortiter in re, blending sagacity with patience, resolution with good humour, and German thoroughness with Southern fire. The new German Chancellor looks a typical Teuton of the hugest and most impressive type. He might very well pass for a brother, or even a double, of Prince Bismarck himself the personal likeness between the two men being most remarkable. In point, indeed, of stature and breadth of shoulders General von Caprivi even has the advantage of the man he is going to succeed, but otherwise he is characterised by the same massive jaw, heavy gray moustache and bushy eyebrows, thick neck, solid square head, shrewd, penetrating glance, and general air of blood and iron, tempered with the polished suavity of a 19th century statesman.

A difference in the character of the two men might by some be discerned in their walk, for, while Prince Bismarck treads sharply and heavily, like a trooper, the gait of General von Caprivi has something in it of deliberation and leisurely elegance, while not lacking either in force or emphasis. He is a good enough speaker but a brief one, and when at the head of the Admiralty he never tailed, from his place on the Federal Council bench in the Reichstag, to put his case clearly and well. Indeed, it may be said that it was his tenure of office at the Admiralty which enabled him to become acquainted with the internal machinery of the Imperial Government to a degree which will render his novitiate as Chancellor comparatively easy.

Such, then, is a hasty sketch of the career and character of the man on whom the Emperor is about to place the now discarded mantle of Prince Bismarck.

THE RAMNAD PARTITION SUIT. IN THE SUB-COURT (EAST) OF MADURA.

ORIGINAL SUIT NO. 5 OF 1890.

Srimat Heraniya Garbayagi Ravikula Muthuvizia Regunada Rajah Dinakarasamy alias Ramcsamy Setupati ... Plaintiff.

3. The plaintiff's father was himself undivided from his sons.

4. At the time of their father's death the defendant was a minor, 5 years old, being born on the 3rd November 1868, and the plaintiff, a minor, 2 years old, being born on the 26th of April 1871.

5. The Court of Wards wrongfully took possession of all the estate, moveable and immoveable of the late Zemindar Muthuramalinga Setupati, upon his death and wrongfully continued possession thereof until the 3rd November 1889, on which date the defendant attained majority. On the 4th November 1889, the defendant was wrongfully given by, and wrongfully received from, the said Court of Wards all the estate, moveable and immoveable, of the late Zemindar with the accretions thereto.

6. The said property consisted and still consists

(a) Of an extensive landed estate which pay an annual peishkush to the Government of about Rs. 324,444-3-10 and the net annual revenue of which the plaintiff estimates to be about Rs. 500,000.

(b) Of moveable property of the value of Rs. 70,000 or thereabouts.

(c) Of a further sum of Rs. 330,000 or thereabouts representing the savings by the Court of Wards during its possession and management of the Zemindari which sum was handed over by the Court to, and was received by, the defendant on the 4th November 1889.

(d) Of various devasthanams, chuttrums, choultries and other charitable institutions with their respective endowments, over the incomes of which the plaintiff's family has the right to exercise a hereditary control.

7. In all such property, being joint estate, the plaintiff is entitled to a one-half share under the Hindu Law.

8. The Court of Wards took and kept wrongful possession of the persons of the defendant and the plaintiff from and after the date of their father's death, and the plaintiff was not released from such wrongful control until the said 3rd day of November 1889.

9. The plaintiff attained majority on the 6th of April 1889.

10. In November 1889 the plaintiff made demand upon the defendant for a division of the said estate of their father. Such demand the defendant unlawfully refused and referred the plaintiff to a suit.

11. The cause of action arose on such last recited refusal.

12. The plaintiff appends hereto a true and correct genealogical tree of the joint family.

13. The plaintiff prays

(a) For a declaration that he and the defendant are members of an undivided Hindu family subject to the law of partition.

(b) For a decree giving him one-half of the entire estate of his deceased father and as the said estate stood when the Court of Wards wrongfully handed it over to the defendant.

(c) For interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of decree, and further interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from date of decree till payment.

(d) For mesne profits from the 4th November 1889 with interest thereon at 12 per cent. from date of plaint to date of decree and further interest thereon at 6 per cent. from date of decree till payment.

3. On the 4th day of November 1889 the defendant took wrongful possession from the Court of Wards of the entire joint estate moveable and immoveable, and wrongfully continues at this moment in possession thereof.

4. The plaintiff in November 1889 demanded of the defendant, and the defendant refused the plaintiff, a partition of the said estate.

5. The plaintiff has filed the suit No. 5 of 1890 in this honorable Court for a one-half share of the said estate.

6. Since the date of his aforesaid wrongful possession the defendant has wrongfully received from the Court of Wards, and spent within the space of one month of the receipt thereof, the sum of Rs. 3,30,000 or thereabouts, the said sum being the accumulations of 16 years' management by the said Court and constituting a portion of the moveable property of which the plaintiff claims a one-half share.

7. Of the expenditure of such sum of Rs. 3,30,000 the defendant has not furnished, and refuses to furnish, any account to Plaintiff.

8. The plaintiff has received no portion thereof, and no portion of such expenditure was for purposes binding on the plaintiff's interest in the estate.

9. In addition to such last-named expenditure plaintiff is informed, and believes the same to be true, that the defendant has borrowed 3 lacs or thereabouts from one Ana Luna Ana Roona Ramasami Chetti of Devakotta and Mr. Ranganada Tawker, jeweller and merchant, Madras, for purposes not binding on his share. The plaintiff has received no portion thereof.

10. The defendant has further granted to said Ramasami Chetty the lease of all the villages in Eravusari division for 50 years at an annual rent of Rs. 3,200 whereas the income of the villages in the said division is at least Rs. 10,000 annually, and the said villages paid a rent to plaintiff's father and the Court of Wards of Rs. 6,700 a year. Such alienation is unlawful and prejudicial to plaintiff's interests in the estate.

11. The defendant has also granted a village called Sheloogay in another division to the said Ramasami Chetty by the same document and for the consideration of Rs. 400 by way of rent. The said village of Sheloogay produces an annual income of Rs. 1,000.

12. In the same document, and for the consideration of Rs. 435 2-0 the defendant has included another village named Sithanoor in the division of Selugai. The annual income of said village is about Rs. 1,000.

13. The defendant is supporting an enormous establishment at a great pecuniary cost and has embarked upon a course of reckless expenditure.

14. The aforesaid alienations of the defendant are in derogation of plaintiff's right to a one-half share in the estate. They create burthen upon the said estate which the defendant is not entitled in law to create.

15. The plaintiff submits that the defendant has been and is guilty of acts of waste and extravagation which jeopardize the property in dispute.

16. For the preservation, better custody, and management of the property, moveable and immoveable in dispute, the plaintiff prays that this Court may be pleased, subject to the approval of the District Court, to order the appointment of a receiver pending the determination of the plaintiff's right, unless which is done plaintiff has good grounds for the apprehension that the estate will be very seriously impaired both in value and extent and plaintiff's share therein be very seriously diminished.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE SAGE AND THE NYMPH.

A TALE FROM THE SANSKRIT.

BY H. H. WILSON.

Scarcely believing what he heard,
Breathless, Markanda caught each word,
That fell from Lila's tongue—then flew,
And to his heart the Maiden drew ;
And on her willing lips express'd,
The voiceless feelings of his breast.
Then hand in hand they sought the town,
With sacred rite their love to crown.

Approaching to the populous track,
Whoever passed them, turned him back,
To marvel, what the Seer had led
To town, and so accompanied.
Thus as they tranquil move along,
Around them draws a curious throng,
Who gazing, pointing, whispering, pressing,
Each to the other oft expressing,
In sign or speech, his wonderment,
And gathering numbers as they went,
Fast swarm'd, like clustering bees, around
The Sage abash'd, who wish'd the ground
Would ope, and seasonably swallow,
The rabble who his footsteps follow.

At last the Maid and Sage attain,
The portal of a stately fane,
With bastion vast, and turret high,
And banners fluttering to the sky.
Before the gate a guard appears,
With maces arm'd, and shields and spears,
Who bar, in stern and sturdy mood,
The access of the multitude ;
But courteous yield the gentle pair
A ready leave to enter there.

They pass, and brisk the Damsel treads
Where each broad court successive spreads ;
Where column'd porch, and long arcade,
Diffuse at noon profoundest shade ;
And in the midst, the fountains play
That scatter freshness on the day.
Above, from gilded jalousie,
Was many a bright and laughing eye,
Darting its sparkling looks between
The openings of the glittering screen.
At length they come, where green and bright,
A garden opens to the sight,
And cheerily their way pursue
Through many a sheltering avenue,

Where fall, in bland and frequent shower,
From overhanging branch and bower,
The blossoms, which the zephyrs bear
Abroad in perfume through the air.

And beauteous nymphs are roaming round,
The guardians of the smiling ground :
And as they careless seem to range,
Expressive looks they interchange
With Lila ;—but though questions sly
Lurk in each broad and beaming eye,
They ask her not what brings her here,
With such unwont attendant near :
Her errand needless 'twere to tell,
Their glances shew they know it well ;
And why she brings a willing prize,
The Stranger, to their paradise :
And one fair maid, their path who cross'd,
A wreath to Lila playful toss'd,
Who in like frolic humour cast
The garland o'er the Sage—as fast
To hold him with a flowery band,
A captive in her gentle hand.
Meek as a lamb to slaughter sped,
The wilder'd Hermit bow'd his head,
And silent follow'd, where she led.

Nor far their route extends, for now
Where many an intertwining bough,
With foliage dark, and clustering high,
Inweaves a verdant canopy,
A train of regal port and state,
Appears their nigh approach to wait.

One man alone, whose garb and mien,
Display'd the marks of kingly pride,
Was seated ; and who seem'd his queen,
Sat on a throne the prince beside.—
Around them stood a beauteous troop
Of dames and nymphs—a brighter group
Within Pátála's golden walls
And jewell'd porches, never trod ;
Nor smil'd amidst the gorgeous halls
Of Swarga's king—of gods the god.

Here Lila stopped, and homage paid
With heighten'd charms, and smiling said :—
“ My lord, my lady, see 'tis done ;
My prize is here ; my wager won.”
They bowed approval—from the crowd
Then burst the laugh, and plaudits loud ;
And then the Sage too late perceived
His wisdom fool'd—his hopes deceived.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

A MOSQUE in Paris—is the latest development of toleration—or shall we say indifferentism?—in Christendom. Subscriptions are being raised for the purpose in Algeria, and the French Government will add a handsome contribution. How is Europe changed since Peter the Hermit led her out to war against Islam, in behalf of the integrity of the scene of the birth, mission, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ!

ORATOR Surendra Nath Banerjee has arrived in England and opened the campaign for the conquest of that country. Last Monday, there was a public meeting at Clerkenwell. Sir William Wedderburn introduced the Baboo, and the Baboo, in the language of the telegram, pleaded for the extension of the social and political privileges of the Natives of India, and said that Legislative Councils were shams, the members being the nominees of the Government. They were all, all shams, the only eternal verities being demagogic oratory and agitation. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji too was present and, without sharing the nonsense of the Orator, put in a word recommending the Congress to the meeting. They passed resolutions supporting the Congress programme for elective Indian Councils. There was another meeting on the 16th at Northampton, where Mr. Bradlaugh was the chief speaker, and related his Indian experiences of a week on the Arabian Sea coast. He and Sir William Wedderburn and Baboo Banerjee all spoke of the aims and objects of the Congress, and a resolution was carried.

LISTS of persons liable to serve on Common and Special Juries in the High Court, for the year ensuing from 1st May 1890, have been circulated as appendix to last week's Calcutta Gazette. The total number in the first is 1831 and that in the second 319.

LORD Reay, before he laid down the reins of the Bombay Government, was created a Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India. A tardy acknowledgment of the merits and services of one of the best rulers of India. His successor, more fortunate, commences with a triumph—the elevation of Lady Harris to the Order of the Imperial Crown of India.

BAHUS Ramessur Persad Narain Singh of Maksudpore and Baijnath Singh of Gya have contributed, through Government, Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 12,000, respectively, towards the Gya Branch of the Lady Dufferin Fund. They have, of course, earned “an expression of the Lieutenant-Governor's appreciation of their public spirit and liberality.”

THE Narail Victoria College has been affiliated to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the B.A. standard.

THE Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hossein, C.I.E., has ceased to be of the Native Lunatic Asylum at Dhillenda, the Hon'ble Mahomed Furrukh Shah succeeding him as a visitor of that institution.

MR. R. C. Dutt, Magistrate and Collector, has been posted to Burdwan, his place in Mymensingh being temporarily filled by the Statutory Joint Mr. Baroda Churn Mittra of Jamalpore in the same district. We read that the Zemindars entertained Mr. Dutt out of the District. This appreciation is very satisfactory and creditable to both sides. Mr. Mittra is a young gentleman of splendid parts, and we are glad to see him making impression on his superiors.

A GOOD story of examination at Cambridge in England:—

“A certain professor of some subject connected with medicine, who is also one of the examiners for medical degrees, happens to be a man of exceedingly cadaverous appearance. During the examination the students have to proceed to Addenbrooke's Hospital, and there, in the presence of the examiners, find out the patient's ailments. No part of the examination is more dreaded than this, because diagnosis is naturally a weak point with every medical student. Now a certain student went to the Hospital during his degree examination, and in the passage met the cadaverous professor, whom he had not seen before. ‘My good man,’ said he in a hurried whisper, ‘just tell me what's the matter with you, and here's a sovereign for you.’ Fancy the student's feelings when he afterwards met the Professor in the examination room!”

IT was under direct divine command that Keshub Chunder Sen married, against the plain injunction of the Brahmo marriage law, his daughter Suniti to the Maharaja of Coah Behar. When the outcry was raised that resulted in a schism in the Church, Keshub assured his followers that he had consulted God and that He had ordered him to agree to the marriage. Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, of the Bombay Guardian, has been equally fortunate, though for a different purpose. At a meeting for United Prayer in Shanghai, he said he had an assurance from God that within two years the importation of Indian opium into China will be stopped.

THE most successful student at the last Final Examination of the Rurki Civil Engineering College, is a East-Bengali—Bepin Behary Chatterjee. He stands first in every subject and carries off every prize, such as, the Council of India prize of Rs. 1,000, Thomason's Rs. 250, the Cantley Gold Medel for Mathematics, and prizes for the best engineering design.

OUR staid contemporary, the Englishman, believes in badinage. The following is an example:—

“Harendra Nath Dutt, M.A., is the author of the works on Vedanta philosophy with the wonderful prospectus, of which something was said lately. He writes to us complaining, as we understand, that he should be held responsible for the farrago of nonsense heralding his books. It is suggested, but not clearly stated, that the prospectus was written by ‘the manager, an humble personage.’ But, at the same time, Harendra evidently admires the prospectus, in which he says he can see nothing to laugh at. Let us recall one of its gems:—‘Hurled from its high pinnacle by the cyclic changes of matter, our dearly beloved mother-land’ has become ‘a field for successive strifes,’ and has ‘turned from the paths of pristine innocence, purity and knowledge.’ Doubtless a field that has been hurled from a pinnacle by cyclic changes is capable of many eccentricities, but it is appalling to be told by the gentleman who disclaims the authorship of this passage that it is an unimpeachable specimen of classic style. ‘With regard to the style, I beg to submit that it is the ordinary impassioned style of Jean Paul and De Quincey. It is not the gift of the Director of Public Instruction, but of these eminent writers.’ Shades of John Paul Frederick Richter and his exquisite expositor! ‘Ordinary impassioned’ style! This is what comes of adopting a system of flashy lectures and flimsy text-books in a foreign country. Really the ‘eminent writers’ are highly honoured, and the University has reason to be proud of Harendra, ‘M.A.’ alike for his erudition and his modesty.”

It is no wonder that Baboo Harendra should object to be laughed at (especially when he sees nothing to laugh at in the fact of an M.A. of the Calcutta University comparing such a “farrago of nonsense” as his manager, whoever he may be, lately indulged in at his expense, to the “ordinary impassioned style of Jean Paul and De Quincey”) for the fact remains that, it is bad form for H. E. (Ali Baba's) Bengali Baboo to laugh at any ordinary human absurdity, much less at a “field hurled from a pinnacle!” a C.I.E. or even an M.A. of the Calcutta University. Though, if the truth must be written, a C.I.E. is generally speaking a funnier fellow than a Fellow of the Calcutta University.

But this en passant. Probably the advertisement in question was drawn up in all seriousness for extensive circulation in the Madras Presidency. That unfortunate Presidency continues a source of wonder to all right-thinking and really capable Bengali writers, who are at a discount in the South in proportion to their influence at home, whilst it is the never-failing milch-cow for all sorts and conditions of patriots who can make themselves notorious only through the employment of language which our contemporary rightly calls a “farrago of nonsense.” Verily, Hanuman was a native of Southern India and his descendants evidently still people the benighted Presidency.

THE Legislative Session in Ceylon was wound up with the following parody between an Honourable Member and His Excellency the Governor President:—

“The hon. member said:—‘In connection with the motion for adjournment might I be permitted to say that in the meantime this punkah should be removed? At the present time this punkah is no use, and it would be better if two were put up, so that we might derive some benefit from them.’ In answer to this, the Governor said: ‘For my own part I have no objection to that being done. This one I find sufficient to carry all the sound out of the room; and if we have two, I think you will have to provide us with ear trumpets. I shall be glad to get rid of the punkah, for I hate to see the thing swinging over my head.’”

That's an honest John Bull who has kept himself honourably free From luxury's contagion, weak and vile!
His horror of the everlasting swinging of the huge flapper, backwards and forwards, reminds us of a country-mouse who, on a visit to town, was overpowered by a drop too much and was provided with a bed. But the poor fellow could not get a wink of peace in consequence of a clock, probably of Brummagem American manufacture—which, with its tick-tick-unceasing, proved another murderer of sleep like Macbeth. So, at last, losing all patience, he brought up a stool and got up on it and punished the machinery into silence and then, becoming conscious of what he had done, fled in shame and dismay at dead of night!

THE Ramnad Partition suit has had a hearing on the 22nd March in the Sub-Court, Madura East. Messrs. Norton, Desikachari and Basyachari represented the Plaintiff and the Hon. V. Basyam Iyengar, Rai Bahadur S. Subramania Iyer, Rao Bahadur R. Ramasubhayar and Mr. M. S. Narayanasami Iyer appeared for the defendant. The following issues were agreed to:—

“(1) Whether the Zemindari in suit is partible or impartible? (2) Whether the late Zemindar left a will, and if so what is its effect and whether it is binding on Plaintiff? (3) Whether Siruthettu and other lands were sold for arrears of Peishcush and purchased for the Defendant and if so whether Plaintiff is entitled to a share therein, even if the Zemindari were held impartible? (4) Whether the personal property, savings, &c., are divisible or indivisible? and (5) To what decree is Plaintiff entitled?”

There was also the inevitable application for appointment of a Receiver. It was argued at length by Mr. Norton and the Hon. V. Basyam Iyengar. In the end, on the latter proposing to offer Defendant's half-share in the Zemindari as security and to deposit Rs. 60,000 for mesne profits up to the end of this year and also one lac of Rupees, being half the savings of the charitable endowments attached to the Zemindari, Mr. Norton agreed. An order was accordingly passed by the Court directing the Defendant to secure his half share for two lacs of Rupees and to deposit in Court Rs. 160,000 within a month.

THE Influenza has not yet been taken notice of by our Bards, and we are afraid he is lashing us all the more for our want of proper respect for him, and will not shift his camp without obtaining his due honours. What is Webb about? We don't know if Aliph Cheen is in the land. Captain Hearsey has driven Kipling away to Europe. Ram Sharma to the rescue! A sonnet in season may save a heroï-comic epic in the end.

Meanwhile, we allow our juvenile friend to sing—

THE INFLUENZA.

A CATCH.

Why so pale and wan, sons of Ind?

Prithee, why so pale?

Dread'st thou the Influenza fiend?

And before him quail?

Prithee, why so pale?

Why so lank and lean, Age and Youth?

Prithee, why so lean?

For tears too deep thy “woful ruth”

Surely is, I ween.

Prithee, why so lean?

Fly, fly for life; swift as the roe,

Tears cannot melt him;

If of himself he will not go,

Nothing can make him:

The devil take him.

JYOTISH C. BANERJEA.

We have received from one of the unsavoury slums of unpoetical Wellesley Square a couple of stanzas “To the Bengali year 1297.” They have not only no thought to recommend it, but no metre to pass muster.

Holloway's Pills.—With darkening days and changing temperatures the digestion becomes impaired, the liver disordered, and the mind despondent, unless the cause of the irregularity be expelled from the blood and body by such an alternative as these Pills. They directly attack the source of the evil, thrust out all impurities from the circulation, restore the distempered organs to their natural state, and correct all defective or contaminated secretions. Such an easy means of instituting health, strength, and cheerfulness should be applied by all whose stomachs are weak, whose minds are much harassed, or whose brains are overworked. Holloway's is essentially a blood tempering medicine, whereby its influence reaches the remotest fibre of the frame and effects a universal good.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

PARLIAMENT re-assembled on the 14th after the Easter recess.

The Opposition are girding up for a campaign. Mr. Parnell has given notice of a motion for rejection of Mr. Balfour's Irish Land Bill. As for foreign affairs, poor Portugal has recovered from her patriotic paroxysm, and Germany, notwithstanding the retirement of Bismarck, is as agreeable as ever. Sir James Fergusson assured the House that Portugal would suspend all action in the Shiré region and that he was not aware of any fresh expedition in that quarter. Regarding Emin Pasha's expedition to the Albert Nyassa, Sir James said that it would be strictly confined to German spheres without any prejudice to British interests. The boundary line was fully recognized by Germany and no two Powers ever co-operated more loyally. Replying to an Egyptian question, he said that the prosperity of that country had greatly increased. The occupation, indeed, was an inconvenient duty but had not disturbed relations between England and other Powers. He could say with pride that England had fulfilled her duty in a manner honourable to the country and nation, and he gave the oft-repeated answer that there was no desire to abandon her mission till the object has been attained. Arabi Pasha must pine away in exile with his associates. Their return is not considered advisable. Where was it ever, in similar circumstances?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has already performed wonders, and now he threatens to take the wind out of the sails of the G. O. M. On the 17th instant, Mr. Goschen introduced a highly satisfactory Budget. It is an all-round remission of taxation—a liberality of concession which has been construed by the Gladstonian Liberals as indicating approaching dissolution. The Budget shews a surplus of £3,221,000, of which £1,800,000 is credited to increased consumption of alcohol. The estimated surplus for the next year is given at £3,549,000. £300,000 is set down for new barrack accommodation and £100,000 for equipment of the volunteer Force. Credit is taken for reduction of the National Debt by eight millions, or twenty, three millions in three years. The beer tax is reduced by three pence per barrel. The duty on currants is brought down to five shillings per hundred-weight. Postage to India and the Colonies is reduced to two-pence half penny. We may now look forward to a lesser postage on our mail letters. The duty on gold and silver plate is altogether abolished, but the Hall-marking is retained, India being allowed a special Hall-mark by the local Assay Offices of the standard of rupee fineness. Tea also comes in for a share in the remission of taxation. While in Calcutta, occupiers of their own houses have been driven to madness, Mr. Goschen makes a point of largely lowering the house duty. The tea duty is decreased by two-pence in the pound. The only rise is in the duty on spirits—by six pence per gallon.

Though regretting the impending changes in the Army and Navy, the Duke of Cambridge has no intention—as he said at the Lord Mayor's Easter Banquet—of resigning the Chief Command.

Mr. Gladstone is confined to bed, suffering from a cold.

There were renewed disturbances among the strikers in Vienna. Troops were summoned and several arrests made. Strike riots are now a feature in the manufacturing centres in Austria.

The new German Chancellor has announced a new departure. He of course sticks to the peace policy of Prince Bismarck, but has proposed a change in the constitution of the Prussian Cabinet. He gives the ministers full liberty. He releases them from leading strings. They will no longer be the servants of the Chancellor but will form a consultative assembly, meeting on equal terms and sharing a common responsibility.

He resents the observations concerning himself in Stanley's speeches and is sorry that he could obtain no employment under the British East African Company.

Youth, beauty and gold have not availed a Russian girl in her endeavour to obtain a copy of the new Russian mobilization scheme. For the attempt, she has been cast into prison.

The Afmeer of Bokhara the Noble will be present at St. Petersburg in the autumn at the installation of his son as a Court page. What a destiny for the heir of the king of the theologians of Central Asia!

The Marquis Tseng is dead at Peking. A serious loss to China. One of the most distinguished representatives of Young China, educated in Western languages which he spoke with fluency and wrote with force, this Mandarin of high degree—Marquis as Europe conveniently called him—was a deep diplomatist and a sturdy patriot. He will be long remembered in the world out of China by his contributions to the European Press. A good life of him ought to prove interesting and would have, besides, a professional value in the relations of the Western Powers with the ultra Eastern nations. Will no body attempt it? We mean no catch-penny trash, but a genuine book founded on the journals, memoranda and despatches of the deceased statesman.

Mr. Childers has expressed to a press interviewer his high opinion of the resources of India and the capacity of the Natives. Perhaps our people owe their certificate to the influence of a gentleman of the same ilk who holds office in the Ordnance department in India.

A GREAT English artist died last month at the ripe old age of eighty. Mr. John R. Herbert first tried his hand at portraiture and then passed to romantic history. Elected in 1846 to the Royal Academy of which he had in his earlier years been a student, he was in 1848 invited to decorate the Robing Room and subsequently the principal Committee Room of the Upper Chamber in the new Houses of Parliament, with frescoes of Old Testament scenes. In the latter, he painted his famous Moses descending from the Mount with the Tables of the Law, and the fresco known as "Illustrations of Justice on Earth, and its Developments in Law and Judgment." This last work was so satisfactory that, besides the stipulated price, he received from the appreciation of Parliament a handsome reward. His fame travelled to the Continent, and France, so jealous of British genius, at last elected him in 1869 a foreign member of her Academy of the Fine Arts.

WE see in the official Gazette that the mighty arm of the Land Acquisition Act X of 1870—which is competent to annex whole shires—has been invoked to acquire, at the expense of the Hooghly Municipality, half a cotiah of land—about one hundred and twentieth fraction of an acre—for a well in the village of Bhoothkhana—literally "Devil's Home"—in the fiscal circle of Arsha, in the Hooghly District. This is opening a battery to demolish a mosquito. Is the devil of a Zemindar—or whoever may be the owner—such a stiff customer or such a veritable screw that he cannot be induced to part amicably, for love or money, with a slice of his Pandemonium?

This is a confession of extraordinary want of influence and tact in the local authorities, Municipal, District, and Divisional. But the Secretariat is not a little to blame for consenting forthwith to compromise the dignity and the very popularity of Government, instead of soundly rating the Commissioner and the Magistrate for their incompetence, and requiring them to do their duty—a duty, by the way, of no great difficulty to any officer worth his salt. Apart from the serious aspect of the matter, how ridiculous is it all! Here we have the very reductio ad absurdum of government. Dickens, in his description of the Great Circumlocution Office, has left a scathing satire on the disorganization and mismanagement during the Crimean War, to which so many thousands of British soldiers were sacrificed in the camp. Had the great artist lived to this day, he would have found in India materials for a companion picture of—the Official Microscopic Society. If the motto of the London Office is Not to do it, that of this Society of Calcutta is To overdo it, always omitting the necessary and important to concentrate all energies on the unnecessary and the trivial. Here would have met his eyes the spectacle of dignitaries in Church and State, while maintaining their haughty isolation and their national scorn for other nations, ready to amuse themselves with paper schemes of conversion or reformation of the people, and delighting to honour not only respectable hobby horsemen but also sharp operators—Secretaries of imaginary institutions, Moderators of improvised missions, et hoc genus omne—who may be prepared to humour them in their amiable game of cheap philanthropy. He would have seen officers, instead of patiently working the existing rules, continually fretting that the rules were not better. Here they are the most ambitious law reformers who have no loyalty for law at all. There are magistrates who, leaving their proper work to subordinates, distinguish themselves by sitting on clerks.

THE District Judge of Kurnool referred the following question for the opinion of the Madras High Court:—

"Can a judgment creditor, by the procedure prescribed in Section 272 of the Civil Procedure Code, attach, while in the hands of the Postal authorities, covers containing notes sent to the address of the judgment debtor, by a third party?"

Mr. Justice Shephard has answered the reference thus:—

"The question forming the subject of the reference arises in consequence of a claim to have released from attachment certain letters containing currency notes, on the ground that the right and title of the judgment debtors had ceased before the attachment took place. The letters which are addressed to the judgment debtors, were attached in the hands of the Post Master in the manner indicated by Section 272 of the Civil Procedure Code. A day before the attachment took place, the claimants, being the persons who had sent the letters, had applied to the Post Master General through the Post Master to have the letters returned. The question is, whether, in the circumstances stated by the District Munsif, the letters with their contents were on the 6th April liable to attachment as being the property of the judgment debtors and whether they were held by the Post Master in trust for them or in their behalf. I am of opinion that both questions must be answered in the affirmative. The notes were sent by the claimants to the judgment debtors on account of purchases of indigo made or to be made by the latter on behalf of the former. In the hands of the judgment debtor, the notes would clearly have been part of their general property and subject to attachment by their creditors. The question is whether the ownership in the notes was vested in the judgment debtors or liable to be divested at the date of attachment. According to English law it seems clear that the Post Office holds every letter that is once posted, as agent of the addressee, and that, therefore, where delivery of a thing is requisite to pass the property, it is generally sufficient to deliver it for transmission by the Post Office. Cote Law Reports, ch. 2 page 32. I find nothing in the Act XIV. of 1866 to indicate a different state of law in this country. On the contrary, the illustrations to Secs. 4 and 5 of the Contract Act are in accordance with English Law. I think that the provision in the Act reserving to the Post Master General the liberty of returning the letter to the sender, which is in effect a proviso to the declaration that the sender shall not be entitled to have his letter returned, cannot possibly be construed in the manner suggested by the Vakils for the claimants. Construed as giving any absolute right to the sender the proviso would be inconsistent with the former part of the section. When once the letter has been posted, the property in it becomes vested in the addressee and the sender has no power of reclaiming it without the addressee's consent. The doctrine of stoppage in transitu can have no application, because the parties do not stand in the relation of vendor and purchaser. In my judgment the question referred by the District Munsif must be answered in favour of the judgment debtors."

The Judge seems to hold that the sender not only loses all control over the letter as soon as it is consigned to the post box, but also ceases to have any right in the letter. With its posting, the letter at once becomes the property of the addressee, and in transit, the Post office holds it in trust for the addressee. This view is opposed to ordinary understanding. One would think the property in a letter remains in the sender till it is delivered to the addressee. The liability of the sender for the money enclosed is not discharged before the delivery of the letter with its enclosure to the person entitled to that money. Under the ruling of the Madras High Court, it may be argued that, in case of loss during transit, the addressee must not look to the sender for fresh payment. He must seek from the Post office the satisfaction of his claim against his debtor the sender. Will a remittance of money order for revenue in proper time and due form, under the rules recently sanctioned, save an estate, if the order is lost during transit and the revenue is not deposited in the treasury by that lapse? The Post Office or Government, however, under the law quoted in the judgment, is not "responsible for any loss, or damage which may occur in respect of any thing entrusted to the post-office for conveyance." Who then will bear the loss?

THE other day we read the following case in Syud Ameer Hossein's Court:—

"Solendro Krishna Ghose, a student in the F.A. class, Presidency College, residing in Grey-street, charged a young Hindoo named Taruck Krishna, with causing him grievous hurt by biting off half of his left ear. A number of witnesses were called to speak to the above fact, but on his worship enquiring of inspector Surbauundo Roy, who was in charge of the case, as to where the exhibit (the torn-off portion of the ear) was, he replied that as soon as it dropped from the mouth of the accused, a crow picked it up and flew away with it. The magistrate wittily suggested the prosecution of the crow for destroying evidence. The inspector said he could find no trace of the bird. The facts connected with this case, as was opened by Baboo J. K. Bose, who appeared for the complainant, were that the accused had given some information to the complainant's guardian reflecting on his moral character. This coming to the knowledge of the complainant, he became greatly incensed and meeting the accused on the street last Wednesday, questioned him as to the truth of the information. Defendant flatly denied having given any information, whereupon the complainant asked and even pressed him to accompany him to his guardian's house, but as he refused, main force was tried to compel him to do so. Defendant, in order to extricate himself from the complainant's grasp, bit off his ear. He was, on conviction, sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment."

By Day and Night but this is wondrous strange! Cannibalism surely is a queer development of vegetarian Hinduism under the teaching and influence of Muscular Christianity! Hindu lads have their quarrels, like the juveniles of other races; like them, too, they have even their little wars and negotiations and treaties after the manner of greater Powers. But their wars mostly are simply figurative—mere sound and fury signifying ill will perhaps, but nothing more serious. As a rule, our boys do not go in for fighting in earnest, and they have a wholesome dread of drawing blood. Our people are not yet learned in the art of kissing, and the naughtiest feat of our scapegraces is a bite on the cheek, but the attack never causes a wound. Surely, the manners of the school and the college cannot have completely changed since we were in the status pupillari. What process, then, has of late been in operation at the Presidency College, to lead to such bellicose Babooing, or produce such a bloody Babooing as Master Tarak Krishna Bahadoor?

The Police managed to change the tragedy into a farce. Mr. Lambert should promote this precious Roy for his prompt and unhesitating explanation of the missing piece of human cartilage. We hope it was not utilised in the station cook-room.

To scholars and mathematicians in especial, it will be news indeed that Euclid is still in the flesh and may be seen by mortal eyes. Nay, the Alexandrian geometer has been so far reduced as to be had—if not for the asking, at least for money. Euclid has his price—that is all. Count Potoki, an Austrian noble lately in Calcutta, is the lucky purchaser of the grand old Oriental for the stiff sum of £700 equal to about Rs. 10,000. He will take him with himself over to his native land—not, however, to teach his own sons, nor to fill the chair of mathematics at the great Imperial University, but to—increase and multiply! Surely, the degradation of poor Euclid is complete, when he is put to such base use as breeding, and given no better quarters for the purpose than the stable.

In fact, Euclid turns out to be a—horse!

THE follies of fashion are endless. They are specially rife in its favorite branch of the Turf. Not the least of the vanities of it is in its nomenclature—in the nomenclature of its beasts, in especial. Horses have in all ages received from the favor of its riders the most sounding appellatives. Alexander had his Bucephalus. The Prophet of Islam had his Barak—a name since appropriated to a famous English quadruped—Eclipse. There is meaning and propriety in that name. But what shall we say of giving horses and dogs the greatest names in history—Alexander the Great, Cæsar, Hannibal, Scipio, Marlborough, Napoleon, and so forth? Still there is some analogy here. We see no fun but fatuity rather in a poor animal by the name of an illustrious mathematician or philosopher or bard. It is simply a mark of barbarism to name a horse Euclid or Socrates or Homer or Vyasa or Manu. But Europe goes farther, and does not scruple to call a horse the Pope. It is more than impertinence—it is blasphemy.

WE are amused to see the Army and Navy Gazette puzzled by the name of the latest Anglo-Indian humourist. First our London contemporary writes "Rudyard Kipling"—the inverted commas the Gazette's own—and then if he ventures on "Mr. Rudyard Kipling"—here the quotation marks are our own—adds apologetically, "We are in a phase of quaint names, Rider Haggard, &c." The editor, who besides a weighty presence, is peculiarly lucky in the possession of the grandest possible double-barrelled English name, may well wonder at the vagaries of British nomenclology. But Rider Haggard need not be a pseudonym. At any rate, there was in Bengal, some years back, a gentleman of the surname who retired from the office of Magistrate of Serampore and took an active part in England in the controversy on the Ilbert Bill. The literary Qui Hye—the Gazette ought to know the word—is Rudyard Kipling and no mistake. He is, we believe, a son of the Principal of the Lahore School of Art.

MR. E. W. Hamilton, of the Treasury, has published a most interesting and factful pamphlet on the history of Mr. Goschen's conversion and redemption operations and how they have been carried out, going into their leading incidents and results. The arduousness of the undertaking taxed all the patience and judgment of the department. The difficulty of identifying the holders of stock was enormous and almost insuperable. For instance, the name of Smith* recurred in the books of the Public Debt no less than 5,429 times, that of Brown 2,478 times, and that of Jones 2,190 times, while there were found to be 1,043 Smiths, of whom 524 were John Smiths and 519 William Smiths. Under the circumstances, it seems incredible that not only no mistakes were committed, but no delays occurred. Scarcely a complaint against the Bank was preferred.

A VAST number of notices amounting to 68,800 had to be posted. Of these, 12,700 were returned through the Post Office, either for defect in addressing or in consequence of death of the addressees. These enormous business operations afforded a good opportunity for the display of national character or individual idiosyncrasies. Thus:—

"Some persons were ready to sign any form that was presented to them; others would sign nothing. Not a few rushed at the offers to be paid off in advance and then did not take the trouble to claim their money for months afterwards. Many were reminded by the notices that they were the owners of stock which they had been too careless to claim for many years; while others were made aware for the first time that they had money in the funds, in some instances the stock in question amounting to as much as £1,000 with many back dividends accrued."

We hope Indian officials will take a note of these facts. When even a people so intelligent, so careful of their interests, so businesslike, so wedded to punctuality, fail in their most important private concerns, how much more at fault must be the notoriously listless careless Indians! We do not preach thoughtlessness, sloth, indifference, unpunctuality, or waste. On the contrary, we rejoice at, and are thankful for, the moral effect of our connection with Europeans—the salutary change which British education and administration caused in our people. We only plead for mercy for national failings of a venial kind. Our rulers are righteous over-much. They delight to act up to a standard of perfection which is not only above the people, but which is not to be found anywhere. The wisdom of Shakespeare again asserts itself—

One touch of Nature makes the whole world kin.

Here is official and statistical proof that Britons are no better than Baboos. From the easy persuasion that they are infinitely better, what ills has not India suffered! Little knowledge of India + less of Europe has been the bane of the administration. The people have been passed through impossible drills at the point of the bayonet. Such operations as of late the English Treasury have quietly effected, without any notable hitch, would, in India, under the combined heedlessness and harshness of our officials, have caused incalculable loss, heart-burning, and despair to thousands.

THE Influenza has been specially hard upon the Press. It has had all the effect of a gag in many quarters. Journalism depends for its life on its periodicity, and the Influenza has interfered with its regularity. The Kathiawar Times is stopped until such time as the epidemic allows. Nearer home, our contemporary Hope is laid up with its whole establishment. Last week, there was a delay of some days in the issue. The conductors were evidently struggling bravely with the disease, but the enemy has got the better of them, and this week they confess themselves beaten. Instead of the always lively, cheery Hope, we have received a brief bulletin from the office, beginning with this unwelcome announcement, to wit—

"The Editor of Hope having been taken seriously ill with bronchitis threatening to turn into pneumonia, and all our staff being invalided by the influenza, the undersigned has found it impossible to issue Hope of the 16th instant."

The language of the Manager who signs this Notice is, we are glad, full of hope, and he promises to bring out the paper by next Thursday morning. We devoutly say Amen! Our journalism, though prolific enough in number, is sadly weak in quality, and we can ill spare such a model paper for the million. We may mention that the Manager offers all the compensation possible under the accident—one week's extra matter to readers and one week's advertising free to advertisers.

The condition of the Editor makes us truly anxious. We know too well to our cost what that condition is, having scarcely yet thoroughly recovered from it and its not uncommon development. From bronchitis to pneumonia is but one step. And Oh how imperceptibly easy!

Facilis descensus Averni:

*Sed revocare gradum superasque evadere ad auras,
Hoc opus, hic labor est.*

Before you are prepared to yield that your every-day cold is a nasty thing without a name in honest vernacular, you discover to your consternation that the main pipes of your breathing apparatus are red and sore and ready to give way! Then, if you are fortunate enough to escape with life, you do so on conditions which most people find irksome in the extreme—under a discipline which taxes the patience and obedience to the utmost.

The weather, however, is in his favour, and we pray and trust that there is no real cause for alarm. There is stuff in the man. He is one of our wisest, bravest teachers.

THE Calcutta Corporation has been cast in Rs. 100 fine, for keeping a trenching ground on the Diamond Harbour road to the annoyance of the neighbourhood. It is a legacy of the Suburban Corporation now amalgamated. The whole question of a trenching ground for disposal of the nightsoil of a municipality requires a solution. It is no easy matter—that is if the solution is to be more wholesome than the subject, in its full reality. Prizes ought to be offered to tempt the ingenious to lash their wits for a satisfactory devise. The question is not local but imperial, and Government ought to move in the matter.

HERR Hoper, of the Dresden Institute, a short hand-writer, has calculated the rapidity of speaking at the Reichstag. He thinks that it might be interesting to know that Herr Rickert speaks at the rate of 153 words a minute, Count Bismarck 144, Frhr. von Stumm 148, Dr. Bamberger 129, Herr Singer 121 and Dr. Busing 112. It would be more to the point to know who speaks to the best purpose.

HAJEE Abdool Latiff Baledina, a Bombay merchant, charged with forging bills of exchange for Rs. 50,000 and cheating by impersonation, has been sentenced by Mr. Justice Bayley to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

MR. J. A. H. Louis sued the Calcutta University for Rs. 500, claiming that sum as his proper fee as French examiner in the Entrance and First Arts Examinations for 1889. The University admitted only Rs. 180-2-11 or 12 annas and 1 Re. per each paper examined, the University rate, and tendered the amount in Court. The Small Cause Court Judge Mr. MacEwen held that Mr. Louis had not shewn that he was entitled to a higher rate or fee, on the contrary, Sir Alfred Croft and Messrs. Pedler and Tawney, all University men, for the defence, had deposed to the fairness and reasonableness of the rates, and the Judge accordingly decreed the suit without costs for the amount already paid in.

SIR Henry Harrison has made over charge to Mr. H. Lee. The Commissioners have recorded the following appreciation of the knight's services to them and the town.

"That before the Hon'ble Sir Henry Harrison leaves the Chairmanship of the Corporation of Calcutta, the Commissioners desire to place on record their high appreciation of the services rendered by him to the Corporation of Calcutta during his incumbency. They could not but admire his genial disposition and courteous manners, which, added to his uncommon ability and persuasive eloquence, have in no small degree secured the success attained by him in the discharge of his onerous duties."

Sir Henry presided at the meeting when this resolution was moved and carried. The motion was not contested. One of the Suburban Commissioners opposed it, but only three other Commissioners were found to support him. So far so good. The failure was emphasised by the indiscreet friend. Indeed, Baboo Norendra Nath Sen here introduced by way of an interlude a one act farce. He, the supporter of a forlorn hope, without knowing where he stood, demanded a poll. Though a professional limb—of the nether side—of the law, he showed his ignorance of the Municipality's Act. For, the full number under the law—five—was wanting and the poll was not taken. Such a compliment was Sir Henry's due and he has obtained it. His ability is unquestionable. During the nine long years that he presided over the affairs of the municipality, several improvements have been introduced and effected in the town—the native quarter specially has been better ventilated and enlightened. Much of the reproach of Calcutta as an unhealthy city has been removed. That may be due to the progress of time, still the head of the municipality must have some share of the distinction, whether he himself was instrumental or not in originating the reforms. The late Chairman, undoubtedly brought eloquence into the deliberation of the Board and introduced and allowed a freedom in the debate which satisfied all parties if it sometimes degenerated into rude personalities. He would have made a model Chairman if he could muster half the physical energy of Sir Stuart Hogg. The town would have prospered more quickly and presented a much healthier appearance. Unfortunately, he generally allowed the Heads of Departments to take care of themselves and would not allow the Commissioners to find fault with them. He knew how to deal with the Commissioners or to win them over. He early won their confidence and got them to vote for his house allowance. True, once he landed the Corporation on a rock but he also, with rare pluck and a droitness, got it out of it safe.

MR. Justice Prinsep, as the senior Civilian Judge of the High Court, performed the last rites that remained to be done in India on the death of Sir Louis Jackson in England. Addressing the Advocate-General, he expressed, in half a dozen sentences, the regret of himself and the Court for the demise of one who could exact dignity and gave some dignity to the Court. To prove the deceased Judge's superiority as it were, the living Justice stumbled on the very first sentence. If left to himself, he would have closed the Court for the day. Here we have an inkling of what to expect under the government of Civil Service in the highest court.

MANY as have been the remarkable events and extraordinary political and social changes, in our times, such as the downfall of dynasties and nations and rise of peoples, the abolition of serfdom, the emancipation of slaves, the most startling surprise was reserved by the lone Empire of an archipelago of the Pacific Ocean off the Coast of Asia. The people of that country, in nowise ethnically or otherwise different from their insular or continental neighbours, have outheroded Herod. The most Eastern community of the Farthest East has taken the shine out of the very Western Stars of the West. Japan has gone ahead of goahead America. To say she has proceeded at a rattling pace is nothing: she has run a steeple-chase—nay, taken leaps and bounds across seas and over the heads of cloud-capped mountains—without risk to her neck, without as yet a simple fracture or visible contusion. The slow effects of centuries of institutions and ages of human progression, she has achieved in a trice. Without social preparation, her reformers have ordered a stupendous revolution. And, as yet, all have gone merrily as a marriage bell. History has been thoroughly discredited; the human mind, as it was understood in other parts of the world, has been shamed. At last, faint signs of difficulty seem to loom ahead. The insulted genius of Political Economy threatens to raise the standard of revolt. The giant triumphant over all obstacles is being baffled by an apparently insignificant foe—Dirty Pelf. The Laws of Money will brook no interference.

The writer of an article in the Japan Gazette significantly headed "The Coming Crash," observes that it does not require a very far-seeing person to discern that unless something is done to relieve the scarcity of capital in Japan, a commercial and industrial crisis is not far off. Many circumstances have led to this state of affairs, the chief being the "limitless" floating of new companies. The total of the nominal capital of the Japanese joint stock companies amounts to as much as 300,000,000 dols., while a little over 100,000,000 dols. of capital is in circulation in the country. Of course, calls on shares cannot be met. Nor are the Japanese satisfied with the abnormal spirit of enterprise and speculation so suddenly evoked at home; they have diverted their limited capital for investment abroad. There is now a call for stringent laws for governing the floating of companies, and it is urged that the National Bank and other institutions should be authorised to aid the companies already established, if a great crash was to be avoided. But laws cannot multiply money. Considering that the share capital required is three times the amount of money in circulation, not even the most cordial compliance with the wildest suggestions of these financial publicists will help Japan out of the situation. The hankering after the capital of other countries shown by some Japanese, is more to the purpose. It is urged that Government should raise money in Europe and America and allow transactions in Japanese bonds in the markets of the West.

TERMINATION OF THE GOVERNMENT RAID ON THE SALTPETRE MANUFACTURE.

THE appeal to the Viceroy, of the Saltpetre-washers of Calcutta, has for the present been disposed of to the satisfaction of both the parties. Mr. J. E. O'Connor, the Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, had from the beginning actively interested himself in bringing about a good understanding by taking the petitioners into confidence and explaining to them without reserve the intentions of Government. The washers have taken out licenses in the form A, none of them having expressed any desire to become manufacturers of edible salt. The Register heads that they had at first been required to fill up for the eclat of a great department and which were quite unmeaning as applied to the saltpetre industry carried on at Calcutta and its suburbs, have been withdrawn. In their stead, the Assistant Commissioner of N. I. Salt Revenue, Mr. Ashton, has supplied a much simpler form which, it is believed, the washers will not find very difficult to fill up. The language of many of the heads in this form is not very clear, and in one instance it is directly opposed to a commercial technicality. The Government officials in this country however exercise very large powers. If they do not command the sea by an order in the Gazette, they can compel those placed under them to call a spade a cucumber. Our legislative Acts teem with definitions of words whose connotations as accepted by the world are widely different from those which the legislature associates with them. While settling the Register heads in consultation with the representatives of the washers and in the presence of the Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, Mr. Ashton repeatedly assured the gentlemen that the form was not intended to be a trap. The assurance was scarcely needed, for a trap it cannot well be however plaguy its look may be and however subservient to purposes of eclat. The entries under "additions to stock" and "reductions of stock" both with regard to the crude and the washed article, will afford no check on the quantity of refuse that may be registered. The washers contended that when those entries would not really afford any kind of check on the refuse shewn, the slightest harm would not ensue if the entries under crude saltpetre and washed saltpetre were not insisted upon. Unanswerable as this contention is, Mr. Ashton, true to himself as an official and believing that the very foundations of Britain's grand empire in the East rested on official infallibility or the reputation of such infallibility, wished to get rid of it by the somewhat stale reply that it was the Government (a grandiloquent form of expression implying his own august self) and not the washers that were the judges of the question. In other words, according to Mr. Ashton, the Government might enact a law requiring any class of its subjects to cut three capers at every seventh step before taking the eighth while walking the Queen's highway, without the persons burdened with the obligation being able to point out, however respectfully, that while constantly exposing themselves to the public gaze in such undignified attitude, the Government would derive no advantage by subjecting them to such an obligation. Mr. Ashton's ideas again of moderation and etiquette in official correspondence seem to be susceptible of considerable improvement. Having despatched to one of the washers a tentative Register form devised by himself, he wrote to say that he was willing to consider any suggestion that might be made to him about any change in the heads for obviating any inconvenience that might result from its use. The party addressed heartily thanked Mr. Ashton for his kindness and courtesy and respectfully informed him that he had referred the form to the committee specially organised for corresponding with the Government on the entire question. Such a reference to the committee was too much for Mr. Ashton's powers of endurance. It was a sheer insult to him; a piece of impertinence that called for rigorous measures. An ukase was at once issued, peremptorily commanding the person that the Register should be forthwith brought into use without a word more of explanation. The washers were all the more surprised at this sudden change of attitude on Mr. Ashton's part, specially as they had experienced nothing but the utmost courtesy and consideration at his hands in every other respect.

All, however, is well that ends well. But for the interference of Mr. J. E. O'Connor and the exertions made by the washers themselves, the subordinate Salt Officers would have, by their zeal, killed the Saltpetre industry in Calcutta by this time. The policy is certainly questionable of interfering in this way with such an useful industry upon which the Government itself has to depend for the supply of its own gunpowder. Such an interference, to the annoyance of those engaged in it, for the small advantage of regulating the sale or disposal of a few thousand maunds un-edible saline refuse, argues extreme shortsightedness. The very position that England has won in the polity of nations, has in no small measure been due to her supplies of Indian saltpetre. The brilliant campaigns of William III. and the still more glorious achievements of Marlborough on the continental fields of Europe, were directly attributable to the loyalty of the East India Company in supplying the Crown with Indian saltpetre at cost price. History has recorded that towards the latter part of the seventeenth century, "all Europe would hardly produce in a year saltpetre enough for the siege of one town fortified on the principles of Vauban. But for the supplies from India, the English Government would be unable to equip a fleet without digging up the cellars of London in order to collect the nitrous particles from the walls." The curious reader may consult the brilliant pages of Macaulay's history of the period of William III. for further information on the subject.

THE MAHOMEDAN LITERATURE OF THE DAY.

THE vitality and intellectual activity of a community can be well judged by the quantity of its publications. They correctly and clearly shew the various stages of progress in thought and expression and in the arts of refinement which it has reached, at the same time that they display its shortcomings. They are the best evidence of its moral, material, and intellectual condition, and unmistakably point out the direction towards which it is advancing, either by slow or rapid marches. They throw ample light upon the state of its education one way or the other, and afford materials for the just conception of its educational deficiencies.

The Reports of the Bengal Librarian and the elaborate lists of publications and books which are published in the Calcutta Gazette from time to time, deserve more careful attention than what they generally receive from the people concerned, and should be regularly studied by those who take interest in the education of their co-religionists. The report for 1888 is a very sad commentary on the education and literary taste of the Mahomedans of this province, and forcibly presents even to the casual observer a deplorable picture of educational backwardness and literary inactivity. It shews what their place is now as authors and publishers in their own vernaculars as well as in English, and how fast they are forgetting the Persian and Arabic languages without knowing which a Mahomedan cannot be properly called a perfectly educated man. To come to a sufficiently correct conclusion as to the number and merits of the works compiled in the three above languages, I have considered the Lists of books from 1877 upto September 1889, published in the Calcutta Gazette and read most of the books which concern us particularly, and the result is most discouraging from every point of view. The contrast between the works in these languages and other vernaculars is extremely disappointing and proves that literary life and intellectual vitality is extinct in the Mahomedans of Bengal. The following figures I take from the report of 1888.

No. of Publications.	Language.
1,190.	Bengalee.
311.	English.
125.	Hindee.
90.	Urya.
31.	Urdu.

I think the proportion of Urdu, Persian and Arabic books to other publications in the vernaculars is nearly the same for 1877 and 1889 as for the year above-named, namely, 1 to 40, or in some respects even worse. These lists shew that the books in other vernaculars, in which the Bengali language of course takes the first place, are generally on useful and scientific subjects. In most cases the sources of their materials and matters are English. Where they are not translations or compilations from, they are imitations of, English authors. In few cases, we come across original works. The subjects dealt with in these, the style in which most of them are written and the names, designations, &c. of the authors and compilers, make it clear that most of them are English-knowing men of the present generation, a large number being either graduates or undergraduates. These facts tend to prove that the work of regeneration of the vernacular languages in the present generation is chiefly in the hands of men who have received an English education, of some kind.

Persian and Arabic works not really falling under the category of vernaculars and their number being quite insignificant, I would not deal with them at great length. I must, however, say that the few books which are in these lists are mostly on religious and miscellaneous subjects, and their literary merit is far below par and they are not of much value for any useful purposes. Some religious books are now written in the form of pamphlets on theological controversies by the Wahabis or their antagonists and tend to excite religious and sectarian disputes by irritating the minds of those classes. Some Persian books are for the use of schoolboys who acquire an imperfect and useless knowledge of Persian in our schools. In the List for the quarter ending 30th September 1877, I find two Persian, 3 Urdu and 3 Anglo-Urdu books. In that for the quarter ending 30th September 1889, the number is about 16.

Among all the Urdu books in the above Lists, there is scarcely one useful book, not reckoning translations of medical works, &c., which is worth perusal or which shews either the power of writing that language decently and correctly or a proper conception or arrangement of the subject. They are the most conclusive evidence of the intellectual incapacity and educational deficiencies of their authors who have deplorably mistaken their vocation and wasted their time and energy upon things which are productive of little good—morally, mentally or financially. They are, most of them, either meant for distribution gratis or doomed to the ravages of the white ants. These books are generally written more for the sake of getting a name as an author or compiler and satisfying ambition which is not at all laudable, than for any other earthly use. In the List for 1888, I find only one book on Geography, but the author is a missionary gentleman whose name shews that he is not a native. The other works are mostly poems and ordinary third-rate translations, worthless in every way.

Now, the question is, Who are the authors of these precious productions? Excepting some professional persons, who have translated some English books or compiled some grammar or school primer, nearly all of them are obscure men who are not quite fit to write an intelligent article on any useful subject, not to speak of books.

Poetry—of a sort—is the great resource of the frivolous part of Mahomedan society. The half educated Mahomedan Reis too goes in for it. To write verses is considered an accomplishment and brings importance and honor. There are those who, without possessing any capacity or literary merit, want to become authors by the assistance of more competent men; these are liberally paid and employed to improve or compose the poems of their patrons. Others, again, rush to print without any previous knowledge, merely to make money by publishing worthless books.

I have now briefly explained the merits of these works and the qualifications of their authors and compilers. The Mahomedan graduate or undergraduate, however, is nowhere either as compiler, translator, or author. This absence from the important literary field is ominous. With hundreds of Bengalee graduates, undergraduates, professors and masters who have revolutionized their once obscure and poor language to the great glory of their nation and country and enriched it with the literary treasures of Western science and literature, there is not the slightest symptoms of Mahomedan activity.

There are, of course, books and books in Bengalee as well. There are dozens of Hindu authors and compilers who have simply mistaken their profession or who are not qualified for their self-imposed task. At the same time it cannot be denied that there is a very large number of useful books in Bengalee which are replete with the reflection of Western literature and science. Why then is there such a dearth of books and authors in Bengali among the Mahomedans? Why are they so much neglecting their own languages? Why are they far behind their Bengalee brethren in this respect? The answer is very clear. With some honorable exceptions, there is scarcely a Mahomedan graduate who can write on any ordinary subject in any of the languages which we so much prize and which are still generally taught as second languages in all the Government schools and colleges and in which again special instruction is given in the three Government Medressas. These young men have little or no taste or love for their own special literature or language, and after acquiring a dangerous little knowledge of English, fight shy of their own language and literature.

Let them compare the number of Urdu books in the above Lists with those in Urya, Assamese and Hindee, and blush. Even the much abused and wretched Masulmani Bengalee is making appreciable progress and such names as are given below adorn the list of authors of books.

Sharratullah Sarkar.
Bukhashali Khundkar.
Ghuribullah Saheb.
Sadullah Sarkar.

These authors are evidently the fruits of the Primary Education. So the once illiterate masses are turning out authors of books which command a large sale.

Who are the best Bengalee novelists, dramatists, and poets? They are the best fruits of the University. They have turned their knowledge of English to the best account and have established their reputation as authors and poets, &c. Leaving aside original contributions there are scarcely any translations of any useful scientific or other works by Mahomedan graduates or undergraduates worth naming. I think the total number of such translations is not more than a dozen.

It is a good sign that books are being written in Mussalmani Bengalee, but it is a bad sign for the respectable classes of the Mahomedans. It shows that the lowest fringe of the middle classes is benefiting by the spread of education, to the ultimate confusion of the idling better classes.

Our graduates and undergraduates are the dumb spectators of this literary revolution which is going on for years in Bengal around them, without once for a moment realizing their own responsibility. Look at the large number of Bengali newspapers and periodicals that are edited and published in Bengal by Bengalis. In the whole of Bengal proper, I believe we have only two miserably conducted Urdu newspapers and two in Behar, while there are hundreds of Urdu newspapers and periodicals in the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab, the last of which was only a few years back one of the most backward Provinces in education. The Punjabis are not up to this time considered intellectually superior to Bengal Mahomedans, but they are men of strong resolution and steady habits and have a keen sense of shame in them. They have begun to realize that no nation in the world can be considered properly educated or civilized who know not properly their own vernacular and possess not their men of literature and science.

The Mahomedans of Bengal ought to open their eyes to the absolute necessity of acquiring a useful and practical knowledge of their own languages, specially Persian and Urdu, and possessing a taste for their own literature. Just now I can only dream of the happy time when we shall see in the Bengal Provinces Mahomedan graduates in charge of well-conducted Urdu newspapers and distinguishing themselves as authors and compilers of useful, entertaining and improving books in their own languages.

THE DANGERS OF STATE RAILWAY TRAVELLING.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—On the 15th of March after paying my humble respects to you I took the night passenger train that runs from Calcutta to Goalundo. At Naihaty the train as usual stopped for a few minutes. During that brief interval a coolie with a passenger came to the compartment next to my own and called upon the sleeping occupants of it to get up in rather coarse terms. Far from the use of coarse terms there was no need for calling upon them to get up as there was ample room for a single passenger to sit down or for that matter to lie down even. A passenger replied to the coolie in contemptuous terms and this the coolie retorted by calling him sala and threatening to pull him down from the carriage by his ears. Receiving a box or two from two gentlemen in answer to the insult, the coolie brought a native officer to see justice done to him. Hearing the statements of one or two disinterested passengers, the native officer dismissed the coolie or rather the coolies, for a few others had in the mean time joined him, by telling them not to quarrel with their betters. He also advised the Baboos not to embroil themselves in quarrel with mean people and compromise their honor. This did not satisfy the coolies, however. They used vulgar and abusive language and in return received a few strokes from the thick end of a stick. By the coolies a Saheb officer was led into the compartment next to the one occupied by the real parties and there two innocent persons were pointed out as having thrashed a policeman for wakening them up from sleep to make room for a passenger or in the discharge of his duties. They denied the charge. The Saheb gave the word for arrest saying "you shall answer the charge before the Barrackpore Magistrate and I tell you if you delay in coming down you shall have to pay for the detention of the train." One of them answered "Sir, I have no stick to beat with." On search no stick was found in the compartment. The Saheb then came down to the platform but only to return soon after to the same compartment while two coolies entered the other compartment, that in which the persons really concerned were, and brought out the stick from under a bag and pointed out two other innocent persons in the compartment in which the Saheb stood. A whole host of men cried themselves hoarse alleging the innocence of these men and the provocation given to the passengers, but the Saheb was not minded to hear them. He took their tickets which he handed over to the guard giving him instructions to take the men out at Goalundo and identify them to the Police Inspector who was to take down their names and addresses for prosecution. They, however, got down at some intermediate station leaving the Railway authorities, high and low, to chuckle to the stretch of their stupidity over their tickets. Although the tickets were from Calcutta to Narainganj, they preferred being mulcted and enduring the miseries of dropping at obscure stations, to standing a prosecution.

THE EXCHANGE QUESTION.

Your correspondent "An Observer" has attempted two solutions of the important silver question. I do not understand him. One solution is "the increase of the weight of rupees." So according to his own showing the ten heavy coins must come up in weight to the fourteen and threefourths, of light ones. The difficulty remains all the same. I do not see how if the quantity of silver to be paid remains the same or nearly the same—no matter what the number of coins may be—matters will improve. His second solution "to obtain the permission of the Home Government to coin shillings"....."and to forward them in kind to that country (England) in payment of debts, &c...." overlooks the fact, important above all others things, that in payment of debts over 40s. silver is not a legal tender in England. The only remedy as shown by many eminent men lies, perhaps, in equalising the demand to the supply, which can be effected by (1) double standard in India and elsewhere; (2) increasing the volume of Indian internal trade.

MONGHYR.

Jamalpore, April 7.

The influenza has assumed an epidemic form both at this station and Monghyr. It has attacked both the native and European quarters of the station. In the audit office alone here, out of 300 Baboos, &c., some 120 are laid up with this disease. In the Locomotive Workshops, both European and native workmen have been victimized in large numbers. Of the former 40 and of the latter about 900 and in the Locomotive offices about 35 Baboos are down with it. The people call it the brother of Dengue fever which prevailed a few years back. The symptoms are more or less alike, specially as regards the pain in the body.

The people here had anticipated to pass their time in somewhat gay and mirthful or in pleasurable mood the three days of the Barwaree Poojah which comes off during Easter holidays, when dancing, keertun and opera parties from Patna and Calcutta keep the station alive. But the epidemic stood in the way, causing many persons to be sorely disappointed. The deity worshipped was Raj Rajeshari, and the Puja went off with great clat as usual. This is the 3rd year of celebration. The Monghyr Barwaree has unavoidably been postponed owing to the prevalence of the disease.

There was a river accident the other day. The E. I. Railway Co.'s steamer "Bradford Leslie" whilst plying between Monihari Ghat and Sahebgunge all of a sudden got aground at the former ghat, fortunately no injury was done to any of the passengers.

THE RAMNAD PARTITION SUIT.
IN THE SUB-COURT (EAST) OF MADURA.

ORIGINAL SUIT NO. 5 OF 1890.

Srimat Heraniya Garbayagi Ravikula Muthuvizia Regunada Rajah Dinakarassamy alias Ramasamy Se-tupati Plaintiff.

Srimat Heraniya Garbayagi Ravikula Muthuvizia Regunada Rajah Bhashkarassamy alias Annasawmy Se-tupati Defendant.

(From p. 178.)

The plaintiff in this suit on solemn affirmation states as follows :—

1. That in addition to, and in support and continuation of his affidavit for the appointment of a Receiver in this suit filed as of record on the 3rd day of February 1890, he begs leave to file this further affidavit, which he prays may be received and read as part of his aforesaid former affidavit.

2. That plaintiff has been informed, and believes the same to be true, that the defendant herein owes :

(a) The sum of Rs. 2,40,000 (two lacs forty thousand) or thereabouts, to one T. Runganatha Tawker, a Jeweller and Merchant residing at Sowkarpet, Black Town, Madras, who holds the said defendant's promissory notes for the said sum which represents debts incurred by the said defendant since he attained his majority ;

(b) The sum of Rs. 1,75,000 (one lac seventy-five thousand) to one Ana Lana Ana Roona Ramasawmy Chetty of Devacottah, who holds the defendant's promissory note or notes for the same.

3. That the two debts recited in the last paragraph, which aggregate Rs. 4,00,000, are the details, so far as plaintiff can ascertain, of the debts referred to in paragraph 9 of his former affidavit as amounting to "3 lacs or thereabouts."

4. That in addition to the debts recited in paragraph 2 of this affidavit, the plaintiff is informed and believes the same to be true, that the defendant is indebted in the sum of Rs. 30,000 (thirty thousand) or thereabouts, to the firm of Moses & Co., Tailors, Mount Road, Madras, for clothes.

5. That the defendant is now building a bathing ghat on the banks of the river Vigai in Madura, close to the Dufferin Bridge, at a cost of Rs. 15,000 (fifteen thousand) or thereabouts, the foundation stone of which has already been laid with great pomp and ceremony in the presence of the Collector of Madura, Mr. E. Turner, C.S.

6. That the defendant, it has been publicly stated in the Hindu newspaper of the 13th day of February 1890, has promised the sum of Rs. 4,000 (four thousand) for a building to be erected at Madura for a public library and reading room.

7. That the season for the current fusli 1299 has been and still is, owing to failure of rains, most unfavourable, thereby considerably reducing the revenue of the Ramnad estate ; that the plaintiff has reason to anticipate that the revenue for the current year in consequence of failure of crops will produce only 5 lacs or thereabouts, in lieu of 7 lacs or thereabouts, which will be insufficient, after the payment of the Government dues amounting to Rs. 3,54,444-3-10, or thereabouts, to meet and cover the expenses of the establishment now entertained by the defendant.

8. That so far as the plaintiff can ascertain the defendant's said establishment necessitates, a monthly expenditure of about Rs. 19,110.

9. That in addition to this monthly expenditure of Rs. 19,110 which means an annual expenditure of Rs. 2,29,320, the defendant incurs an annual expenditure of Rs. 29,000. The two items aggregating a total estimated expenditure per annum of Rs. 2,58,320.

10. The defendant further entertains an establishment costing not less than Rs. 3,000 or thereabouts per mensem for the management of the several Devastanams, Chuttrams and other charitable institutions of which the plaintiff and defendant are joint Trustees.

11. That, apart from the roughness of the estimates above given, the plaintiff has made no provision for such necessities as dress, travelling, legal expenses, amusements, medicine, books, stationery, gifts, costs of irrigation, and other permanent works which involve a very heavy annual outlay of about Rs. 1,50,000 (one lac fifty thousand.)

12. That in view of the above recited facts the retention by the defendant of the joint family estate without any check or control upon his gross and profligate extravagance must plunge the said estate into serious debt and gravely imperil and embarrass the right of the plaintiff to an unencumbered one-half share therein.

The Defendant in this suit states as follows :

1. The Muthuramalinga Setupaty, father of Plaintiff and Defendant herein, was at the time of his death possessed of certain personal properties and the Zemindary of Ramnad with its appurtenances specified in Schedule A. to the plaint and Devastanams and Chuttrams and other charitable institutions specified in Schedule D. to the plaint with their respective endowments.

2. That the said Zemindary of Ramnad is an ancient principality which was a Raj till about the beginning of the present century.

3. That the said Zemindary with all its appurtenances inclusive of Devastanams, Chuttrams and other charitable institutions has all along descended to a single heir and been held and enjoyed by such heir as an impartible estate which devolved, as a general rule, according to the rule and custom of primogeniture governing the descent of ancient estates that are impartible either by reason of their having been kingdoms, or in the nature of a raj or principality or by custom.

4. That Defendant denies the broad and unqualified statement made in para 2 of the plaint that the law of Mitakshara governs the family of Plaintiff and Defendant and states that the incident of partibility attaching, under the Mitakshara law, to the property of an undivided Hindu family is inapplicable to the said Zemindary and its appurtenances inclusive of Devastanams, Chuttrams, &c.

5. That on the death of the said Muthuramalinga Setupaty, the said Zemindary of Ramnad with its appurtenances, inclusive of Devastanams, Chuttrams, &c., devolved upon the Defendant to the exclusion of his younger brother the Plaintiff according to the aforesaid rule and custom of impartibility and primogeniture and in accordance with the last Will and Testament left by the said Muthuramalinga Setupaty dated 26th April 1868.

6. That by reason of Defendant's minority when the said Muthuramalinga Setupaty died, the Court of Wards in 1873 assumed charge of the estate under the provisions of Madras Regulation V. of 1804.

7. That at the time of the death of the said Muthuramalinga Setupaty who was deeply involved in debt, the peshcush due to Government on account of the Zemindary was considerably in arrears amounting to 5 lacs of Rupees and that for the realization of the said arrears of peshcush all the personal properties as well as all Pannai Kolkriem Seruthettu properties, the palace at Ramnad, Bungalows, houses, buildings, topes, &c. left by the said Muthuramalinga Setupaty deceased were sold in 1874 under the provisions of Madras Act II of 1864.

8. That at the said revenue sales certain real properties described in Schedule No. I hereunto annexed and certain personal properties being items Nos. 2, 3, 6, 22, 27 and part of 25 in Schedule B to the plaint were purchased for the defendant by the Court of Wards out of the current income of the Zemindary ; that items Nos. 13, 16 and 20 were purchased by the Court of Wards out of the incomes of the Zemindary for the defendant and Nos. 4, 5, 7, 8, 14 and part of 18 were similarly purchased by them on the occasion of his marriage in 1888 ; that item No. 17 was presented to him on the same occasion by some of his tenants : that items Nos. 12 and 22---9 and 21 were presented to the defendant by his mother, sister and step-mother respectively ; that items Nos. 1, 10, 11, 15, 19, 23, 24 and parts of 18 and 25 were purchased for the defendant by his mother or himself in or about 1889 ; and that item No. 28 was purchased by defendant's mother and presented to temples.

9. That on his attaining the age of majority on the 3rd November 1889, the Court of Wards placed him in possession of the Zemindary with its appurtenances inclusive of devastanams, chuttrams and other charitable institutions, the properties purchased as aforesaid by the Court of Wards for the Defendant, the cash balance referred to in schedule C to the plaint and the Devastanam fund referred to in plaint schedule D which includes Government promissory notes of the value of one lac of rupees that yet remain to be endorsed in favor of the defendant and handed over to him.

10. That the estates of which partition is sought for by the plaintiff consist of the impartible Zemindary of Ramnad with its appurtenances inclusive of devastanams, chuttrams and other charitable institutions with their endowments, personal and real properties purchased as aforesaid by or for the Defendant out of the Zemindary incomes which accrued subsequent to the death of the said Muthuramalinga Setupaty the savings out of such income and personal properties presented to him as aforesaid and that Plaintiff is therefore not entitled to any portion of the properties sued for.

11. That Schedule A contains a description only of the Zemindary but gives no description either by name, boundaries or otherwise of the appurtenant properties claimed under the heads of Siruthettu, &c., and that the Plaintiff should be required to furnish particulars of the properties claimed by him under the said heads so as to enable the Defendant to state more particularly if necessary his defence in respect thereof.

12. That the valuation of certain items of properties comprised in Schedule B to the plaint as therein given is excessive and erroneous.

13. That the Plaintiff has wrongly described himself in the plaint by assuming the title of Srimat, &c., &c. preceding his name and the title of Setupaty following his name which titles appertain only to the Zemindar for the time being of Ramnad and that plaintiff's proper description is Dinakarassami alias Ramasami Tevar.

14. That the plaintiff is not entitled to any of the reliefs sought for and the defendant therefore prays plaintiff's suit may be dismissed with costs.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the true belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "She had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE SAGE AND THE NYMPH.

A TALE FROM THE SANSKRIT.

BY H. H. WILSON.

[Concluded from p. 181.]

The prince, who saw their mirth had brought
• Conviction to his sober'd thought ;
And pitying, mark'd the pangs that stole,
• Sharp o'er his self-accusing soul ;
The laughter still'd, and strove to heal,
The agony he seem'd to feel—

“Grave Sir—these giddy girls have dared
Your saintly quiet to molest,
• Nor sanctity and wisdom spared
To gratify an idle jest.

“Of fleeting youth and beauty proud,
They deemed that not a heart secure,
• Should brave their power ; and boastful vowed,
To spread for thee the fatal lure.

“This nymph,—the fairest of the train,
The foster-sister of our queen,—
Engaged her freedom, she'd enchain
Thy heart, and has successful been.

“Yet blush not if thy strength were frail,
Against the god that rules us all :
• When Káma's flower-tipped shafts assail,
• The gods, not man alone, must fall.

“I need not tell thee how his dart
The great Creator's self could tame ;
How Rudra's fierce relentless heart
Was taught to feel Love's scorching flame

“Then let not what in sport was done,
Thy mind composed to anger move :
Forgive this silly Girl, and own
That Wisdom's self must bow to Love.”

“Prince, thou hast said,” the Sage replied,
“Nor fear that I resentment cherish ;
'Tis just, that man's mistaken pride
By female levity should perish.

“I own my error, and forgive
The fair disturber of my peace :
And hence with humbled thoughts shall live,
Till all the world's vain cares shall cease.

“Peace be with all—and might I leave
These nymphs one wish ere I depart ?
They will not hold it sport to grieve,
Again, a fond and faithful heart.”

He meekly bowed, and forth had gone,
But in brief whisper to the queen
Had Lila bent ; and in low tone,
Speech passed the royal pair between.

Then thus the Prince :—“A moment stay,
Ere thou re-seek thy lonely cell ;
And if thou couldst be tempted, say,
Once more amongst mankind to dwell.

“Thy councils I would glad retain,
To aid me in the toils of state ;
And the first honours of my reign,
Upon thy future days shall wait.

“And if within thy bosom swelling,
No spark of indignation stir ;
The guide that in thy saintly dwelling
Thou wast to Lila—be to her.

“A dangerous pastime she pursues,
Who sports with love :—and Lila now
The freedom that she won must lose,
And to her captive captive bow.

“I scarce dare venture to believe,
My suit thy grave resolve may bend :
Yet be prevail'd on ; and receive,
A Wife in her—in me a Friend.”—

Markanda, doubting fresh device
His passions might again entice,
Stood silent—and mistrustful eye
On Lila and the prince, he threw
Alternate—till the Damsel nigh
With timid step, and blushing, drew ;
Then closely to his bosom prest—
Conceal'd her blushes on his breast,
And all his doubts and fears for ever charm'd to rest.

Thus Wisdom learnt the power of Love to prove ;
And thus from Wisdom, Beauty learnt to love.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Counsel for the Delicate.—Those to whom seasons of changeable temperatures are protracted periods of trial should seek the earliest opportunity of removing all obstacles to good health. This cooling Ointment, perseveringly rubbed upon the skin, is the most reliable remedy for overcoming all diseases of the throat and chest. Quinsey, relaxed tonsils, sore throat, swollen glands, ordinary catarrh, and bronchitis, usually prevailing at this season, may be arrested as soon as discovered, and every symptom banished by Holloway's simple and effective treatment. This Ointment and Pills are highly commended for the facility with which they successfully conquer influenza ; they allay in an incredibly short time the distressing fever and teasing cough.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

AFTER the termination of the present fair season, the homeward mail will leave Bombay on Fridays during the monsoon and on Saturdays during the fair season. Accordingly, the overland mail will continue to leave Bombay on Fridays up to the 19th September 1890. The latest safe day of posting at Calcutta is Tuesday.

A DURWAN in the employ of the Administrator-General accompanied a bailiff of the Small Cause Court to serve a summons on one Slack, sued for rent of a house he had taken from the Administrator-General. Dr. Chew, Mr. Slack's son-in-law, shied two shoes at the Durwan, and the man's discomfiture was completed by the Durwans of the house beating him out of the premises. On complaint to the officiating Chief Magistrate (Mr. A. P. Handley) and evidence being taken, the father has been acquitted of the charge of abetment, but the dutiful son-in-law, for zeal beyond the law, has been fined Rs. 25 and the two assaulting Durwans Rs. 10 each.

A MEMBER of the pensioned Royalty of Mysore glorying in the proud name of Sultan Mahammed Soleiman Bukht, is labouring for rather a protracted period under a cloud. He is charged with theft and criminal breach of trust and criminal misappropriation of a trifling sum—Rs. 194-12-8, amount of a pension bill which he is said to have made over in payment of a loan and of which bill he afterwards obtained the benefit by force and fraud. The money-lender (Kali Charan Palit) had once before applied to Mr. Marsden and been refused. He was not to be so easily done out of his pound of flesh or whatever else there was to get. So he engaged great lawyers and moved the High Court, which, after taking the Magistrate's explanation, instructed him to take evidence and ascertain whether there was any case. Accordingly, Palit, irrepressible like his namesake of the bar, again appeared at the Magistracy, before Mr. Marsden's new locum tenens. After some evidence, Mr. Handley adjourned the case.

ON Thursday, before the Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hossein, one Kalikristo Shao returned to the charge against his worthy friends Gooyee Ram, Hurrish Mullick and Amrita Mitter, for having, under false pretences and when he was drunk, got him to execute an agreement to sell his share of the family estate without knowing the contents of the document or even understanding its nature. He was referred to the civil courts, the accused being discharged. They will doubtless in future take care not to trust even the drinking Shao—a bacchanal of the publican tribe.

RAJA Govind Rao Doliar, son-in-law of the Holkar, has been belaboured within an inch of his life by two worthy menials of his, Doorga and Bishnath, for refusing to pay their wages when demanded. The matter is in the hands of the Police.

THE Statesman's Banda correspondent, writing on the 17th April, says that influenza is making rapid progress throughout the country with fever, cough, headache and pain in the body for symptoms. Meanwhile, the city is in a ferment from the progress of civilization under British auspices. Thus:—

"Lallu Mahajun, who has lately built a new house very close to the public road, got a culvert built over the Government drain passing below the house in the same way as has been done by other men in the same quarter. When Lallu Mahajun's house was completed, the police, at the instigation of the municipal officers challened him for building a culvert, drains and privy. The Mahajun was fined by the Bench Rs. 75 (Rs. 50 for building the culvert, and Rs. 25 for building the drain and the privy), and was ordered to remove them all within 24 hours, otherwise he would be fined Rs. 2 a day. The matter was referred to the magistrate, but to no purpose, and the Mahajun paid a further sum of Rs. 64 (the fine at Rs. 2 a day). After all Lallu Mahajun had to pay a fine of Rs. 139 in toto and as a further fine he had to demolish the culvert and to close the drain. A similar case is now pending. The platform built before the temple of Mahabirji near Maheshri Devi, and which was completed in January last, has now lately been ordered by the Bench to be dismantled. Bairagi Buldeo Das, living in the temple, has absconded for fear of paying the fine ordered by the municipality. I fear it may meet the fate of the Durbhunga temple."

We hope Government will keep a watch over these proceedings betimes.

THE nuisance of washermen wearing their employers' clothes and even hiring them out, is so great that we turn with relief to the strict watch kept over them in China—at least in the Treaty Ports. Quite a dozen of them were lately arrested at Shanghai and brought before the Magistrate, one half of them being master washermen. These made a tolerably good defence. They said that this misdiversion of their customers' articles took place without their knowledge. As for what their servants did when they took the clothes to wash, they could not be held responsible, as they could not possibly control their men at such a time. The remaining six had not a leg to stand on, having been seized and produced in court in the clothes of gentlemen, and any amount of these. But though they were decked in their best, they were scarcely genteelly dressed and would not pass muster at the club. One fellow had been going about and was caught in as many as six suits of underclothing. They were all convicted of course, but the court was discriminate in punishment. The masters were sentenced to a fine of 10 dollars each, while the employes were condemned to wear the halter or wooden collar called canque for five days.

SIR Henry Harrison, although he has ceased to be the Chairman, does not cease his connection with the Calcutta Corporation. He will be on the board as the representative of the Port Commissioners. Will he still represent the Calcutta Corporation on the Port Trust? We believe his last election to the Port Trust was on the distinct understanding that he would resign his place as soon as he ceased to be the Chairman of the Municipality.

THE Vice-Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation has been granted and Gazetted six weeks' privilege leave. The Secretary Mr. Cowie, as on former occasions, during the period will do both the duties, the assessment appeals being heard by the Chairman. The Commissioners do not seem disposed that any one from among themselves be entrusted with the duties of the Vice. The late Chairman had proposed, on a pay of Rs. 700, one of the active Suburban Commissioners who never misses a meeting and knew all the ins and outs of the suburban working and takes as much interest in the urban, but there was a howl raised against the proposition. The choice of the new Chairman fell on another country mouse, who, whatever his capacity, thinks himself competent to command the Channel Fleet. He had offered his gratuitous services for the good of the town. His fellow labourers, however, declined them without thanks.

MR. D. J. Zemin's term of office having expired, the Calcutta Trades' Association has elected Mr. A. H. Wallis—a Past Master,—to represent the Association on the Port Trust.

NEW Rules have been notified, under clauses (j) and (g) of section 138 of Act III. (B.C.) of 1885, with respect to public schools over which District Boards exercise control of various kinds.

WE read in the week's Calcutta Gazette that "the District Engineer for the time being of the Brahmini district of the Bengal-Nagpore Railway is appointed to be an Honorary Magistrate, and is vested with the powers of a Magistrate of the third class to be exercised in the railway lands within the eastern part of the Gangpore State." In other words, the District Engineer is made supreme within his own jurisdiction, he is to be both prosecutor and judge for breach of rules and orders made by himself.

THE Public Works cess in Bengal in all the districts to which the Cess Act (IX. B.C. of 1880) has been extended, for the year 1890-91 has been fixed at one-half of an anna in the rupee on the annual value of lands and on the annual net profits from mines, quarries, tramways, railways, and other immoveable property (excepting such as may have been exempted under section 2 of the Act) ascertained respectively as in the Act prescribed.

HURRY MOHAN THAKOOR, of Bhagulpore, who lately was made a Rai Bahadoor, died on the 18th April.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

MYMENSING was on the 15th instant visited by a tornado. It formed itself in the Brahmapootra river close to the Sub-divisional Bungalow at Jamalpore, and extended to the town and the neighbouring villages of Nisindi, Garparah, Shabajpore, Koidola, Shengua, Tulsipore and Eannagar, taking in life and property in its course. There is distress. No official report has yet been published, and the extent of help required is not known. It will be satisfaction to know that the visitation has purified the district and made it healthy amid surrounding influenza.

HEAVY defalcations to the tune of 7 lacs have been detected in the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China. For the moment, the chief native cashier has been fixed upon as the guilty party, but there seems no disposition to bring him to justice.

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce has at last scored a victory over the Bengal Government. Undismayed by repeated repulses, it stuck to its proposal for reducing the Durga Puja holidays to four days. It at last secured the co-operation of the Political Pundit, who with the authority of the Principal of the Sanskrit College gave it as his opinion that the strictly religious days were only four in number. Armed with this opinion, the Chamber returned to the attack and has succeeded. The Bengal Government, which hitherto stood firm as a rock, now thinks that it is a scandal to civilization to close the public offices for twelve consecutive days, and has accordingly recommended to the Government of India that only four of the twelve days of the Durga Puja holidays be Gazetted under the Negotiable Instruments Act, leaving the remaining eight to the mercy of the Executive, to allow them or not as it may suit their fancy. To the world at large, the holidays will be for four days only. That means the extinction of the long holiday and with it of the Durga Puja itself in Bengal. The Bengal Government has attempted a serious step, and we hope the Supreme Government will find its way to avoid such a blow in the tenderest part of a loyal people who first gave Britain empire in the East.

FREDERICK GAINSFORD, B.A., Deputy Sheriff of Madras and a reporter on the staff of the Madras Mail, a candidate for the January B. L. Examination of the Madras University, has been declared ineligible for any of the future examinations of that University. He has been found guilty of having fraudulently obtained early information of the contents of the question papers before they were issued to the candidates and having obtained the said information for the purpose of enabling him fraudulently to pass the said examination.

IN Calcutta, two of the examination papers—Sanskrit poetry and the second half of the English prose—in the last F. A. Examination have been cancelled wholesale, on suspicion of early disclosure for the benefit of the candidates. No particular individual or candidate has been spotted. The Senate has decided that, instead of holding fresh examinations, the marks in the Sanskrit prose paper be doubled, and the passing marks reduced from 25 to 20 per cent., and the marks in the first half of the English prose paper be doubled. On the day of the examination, a series of questions on various subjects appeared in the Sanjibani newspaper as having been recommended to be set as questions by Professors. Some of the questions bore resemblance to the questions set. The examination was held, but a Committee consisting of the Vice-Chancellor, Mr. C. H. Tawney, Sir Alfred Croft and Mr. A. M. Bose, were appointed to enquire into the matter. They have only partially reported, recommending the cancellation of the two papers.

When will the schoolmasters who rule in the University and are able to appoint themselves and their professional brethren examiners, be brought to shame and surrender of their unhallowed privilege? It is no doubt a profitable privilege, enabling them to put money in their purses and earn a cheap reputation in their calling. But it is a preposterous privilege, which is discrediting University honours and sapping the foundations of Liberal education in this country. Scandals will never cease so long as the teachers themselves are the public examiners of their own boys.

THE progress of converting refuse to value is making great strides in our day. They are trying to utilise the ganja plant for rope fibre after the extraction of the ganja. The Sub-divisional officer of Nowgong has been in communication with the Agricultural Department and the Agri-Horticultural Society on the subject, but as yet to little purpose. The experiments show that the plants are enervated under encouragement to give out the drug and simply exhausted after yielding it. The fibre of used-up cannabis Indica—popularly called Hemp—becomes weak and woody and snaps easily. It is urged in extenuation that the curing so to say of the fibre was to blame. Perhaps—it occurs to us—the extraction too was not perfect. These causes may account for the failure. At any rate, the matter is worth a retrial.

It is implied in these experiments that good Hemp plants in their integrity, unsubjected to special culture for the production of the drug, would yield proper fibre for good rope-making. There ought to be explicit statement on the subject, or special experiments to test the point. Will the Agricultural Department conduct them? And if the experiments succeed, will the Publican Government allow the culture for the purpose of the harmless industry of extracting rope fibre? Besides, it seems to be already established that the fibre of the refuse plant—that is the fibre of Hemp drained of the drug—is useful for paper-making. What prevents Government allowing such use?

LOCAL self-government has at last, in Benares at least, discovered its man—the local patriot who will slave for the people as his only and sufficient resource against ennui. Baboo Gobind Das offered himself, and has been thankfully accepted, as Honorary Assistant Secretary to the Holy but supremely dirty Municipality. The Secretary, Mr. Baumann, has gone to Europe on ten months' leave, and, although Mr. Tresham, the former Secretary who after a brilliant service had resigned some years ago, is back, he is not quite a Hercules and confessedly required assistance. For this, while fully alive to its necessity, the Augean stable-keepers could ill afford to pay. The Gordian knot of difficulty has been cut clean in the most handsome way by the public spirit of Baboo Govind Das. May Kal Bhairab help him, and Lord Bisweswarji bless him for aye!

HERE is a characteristic case from up-country :—

"Munna, a servant of the joint-magistrate at Kirwi, went to the railway station at Kirwi to receive his master who was coming back to headquarters from tour. When all retired to their respective dwellings, Munna was in the station. When asked for a ticket by the ticket-collector, he (Munna) did not say who he was, and began to abuse the Baboo. Munna went to the joint-magistrate's bungalow and complained. The joint-magistrate the next morning sent for the station master and afterwards the ticket-collector who denied the charge. Munna stepped forward and gave the Baboo a slap. The Baboo began to weep bitterly; a great sensation was created in the office. The joint-magistrate observing this said 'Baboo, you were saying that you did not beat him, look how' (pointing to the man's body) 'you have beaten him.' The joint-magistrate then fined his servant Rs. 10, and ordered him to bring another suit against the Baboo. The case has been brought against the Baboo but it has been transferred to the tehsildar."

All three, Sahab, Sahab's servant, and Railway Baboo are typical—most of all the weeping willow of a railway officer. Notwithstanding his readiness to melt, we dare say his Babooship attended all the Congress demonstrations in that part of the country and has come to believe that Baboos are better rulers than "Britishers."

THE Senhati (opposite to Khoolna) correspondent of the Statesman writes on the 18th instant :—

"A most diabolical murder was committed here the day before yesterday. The name of the deceased was Kailas Chandra Karimakar. He was a man of dangerous character—immoral, profligate, and addicted to excessive drinking. While in a drunken state he used to enter forcibly into the houses of his neighbours at night for immoral purposes. That his death was brought about by his own misbehaviour cannot be doubted, but the murderer, who is still undetected, has to be discovered and punished."

And why? What a confusion of ideas and conflict of feelings the writer labours under! In the same breath he in the same person vindicates the homicide and denounces and proscribes the murderer. The man who has despatched that wretch Karimakar is evidently an honourable soul, who has, with rare courage and determination, rid his native town of a pest. That Law is to be pitied which reserves such salt of our Indian earth for the felon's doom. Well, whatever an alien law may do, surely we of the country ought to keep our heads and not play into its hands by raising a hue and cry against men who are morally innocent, though they may be technically guilty.

DR. Lunn, of the Wesleyan Mission, who had been less than a year a missionary in India and had on return attacked the present mission system and exposed the missionaries as a body steeped in luxury, has now turned his attention to religious abuses at Home. He does not care to be very choice in his company, having joined the redoubtable W. T. Stead, of Pall Mall Gazette and Modern Babylon notoriety, in a crusade against the prominent men and preachers of the Faith in England. Mr. Stead's energy is unbounded. The new Review of Reviews on which he is now engaged certainly does not suffice for its exercise. For, it is said, he has already made arrangements for a weekly article or letter from him to appear on the same date in various papers and places in Great Britain. This is to be the vehicle of the attack on the different sects and their chiefs in which Dr. Lunn will assist him.

Mr. Stead, whose element is hot water from which, though scalding others, he not unfrequently suffers himself, on his return from the Continent, started, in conjunction with Mr. Newnes, who is the chief proprietor, the sensational Review of Reviews. He has already quarrelled with that gentleman, over an article of his against the Times, which was so violent and contained such awful and indiscriminate charges against the unfortunate leading journal that Mr. Newnes, with a due sense of his responsibility, cut and considerably toned it down.

We have never been near to Europe and have no idea of its inner life. For one thing, we do not know what sort of syces they have in that part of the world. The differences between men are endless. Different circumstances impose different manners and habits. Besides, there is no accounting for the peculiarity of national taste. Among us Hindus, strange as it may sound, the employments of cooking and driving were held in the highest esteem, and the most honourable and distinguished men were selected for them. Even at this day the sacerdotal caste has the monopoly of the profession. Brahmans are the only Bawarchees of the Hindus. We do not know what are the qualifications expected in syces in Europe, but they seem to be a much superior class to the miserable counterparts we are acquainted with in this country. Are they drawn from good families reduced in circumstances whose members resort to this mode of satisfying their hereditary love of horses and making profitable matches? At any rate, they must be charming fellows. They must certainly be the luckiest dogs, judging from the facility with which they raid into the hearts of the unsophisticated British fair. The fondness of young ladies for their father's syce is rather a common occurrence in Europe. It is a marvel how charming lassies themselves are charmed by such indifferent wizards. Whatever the causes, there can be no doubt as to this strange partiality.

One continually hears of elopements with grooms in the most fashionable circles. Neither wealth nor rank nor birth nor culture is safe. The peace of the Church itself is invaded by the rascally menials and their occult fascinations. Who can forget the sad story deposed to by the late Dr. Newman Hall? Sadder still are the depositions on record in the two volumes of the Proceedings of the Trial of Queen Caroline. What a part was played by the ostlers and outriders and other menials and their kinsmen and relations on the establishment and about the person of their accommodating Royal Patroness!

We wonder whether all this is the reason why the husband of a newly married woman comes to have in English the name of "groom."

To the long list of grooms' successes with the fair sex, here comes an addition.—

"At Taunton, on January 23, James Levey, 20 years of age, was charged with having assaulted his wife. Last year the parties eloped, the lady being the daughter of Mr. Hanbury Williams, of Abergavenny. She is a lady-like person, 24 years of age. She married Levey, who was a groom, at Leamington, where they were discovered, and the lady's brother thrashed Levey. Since then they have lived at Derby Skegness, and other places, and for the past few months they have lived in Taunton. Prisoner has been in the habit of ill-treating his wife, and on Monday evening he struck her about the face with his hands. Her screams attracted the attention of a neighbour, who ran into the house. Prisoner, in this woman's presence, said: 'I'll get the whip and beat you the same as your brother beat me at Leamington.' He got the whip and lashed her across the back. He had threatened that if ever she put him in prison he would put a bullet through her when he came out. On Wednesday night she was in a neighbour's house when the prisoner threw a brick through the window of the room in which she was sitting. The Magistrates sentenced the prisoner to three months' hard labour, and it was intimated that proceedings would be instituted to obtain a judicial separation."

And the following seems darkly, obscurely, significant:—

At a ball by the bourgeoisie, in Clausenburg, the chief town of Transylvania, a nobleman was represented by his man-servant who capitally personated his master and won the good graces of many young ladies with whom he danced. Subsequently, the fraud oozed out and the public indignation against the aristocracy was great. Several duels were fought. An editor fought three duels in one week but without bloodshed.

We should think, instead of the indignation being directed against them, it is the aristocracy that had most reason to complain. But what do we Asiatics know of love?

THE discoverer has been discovered. The explorer has been probed—with the quill of a brother penman. The American press has by its enterprise thrown the European newspapers into the shade. The great Stanley himself, though an Englishman by birth, was the agent of a New York journal. Another American paper, the New York World, not to be outdone, sent out its representative, Mr. Thomas Stevens, to penetrate to the heart of Africa to meet Mr. Stanley. He encountered no small difficulty in executing his commission. The commander of the German occupation in Zanzibar would not allow him to join the German expedition to the interior. But he was not to be stopped or baffled. He broke a way from the settlement, evaded the outposts and succeeded in joining Stanley, and was enabled to give the civilised world the first news of the African explorer returning to the coast. He was not slow to utilise his splendid opportunities, and has of course given the most copious authentic account of Stanley. Mr. Stevens not only found Stanley but also explored the explorer. He clearly managed to find a way to his heart. The following confession into which the "interviewer" beguiled the subject of his operation has no little autobiographic value and suggests a reason why Stanley was a second time driven to the recesses of the Dark Continent.

"I thought I had made a capture once. It was aboard an Atlantic steamer. I was going across to New York. The captain, with whom I was well acquainted, was a great friend of mine. His great delight was to get me seated next to him and get to tell stories of my African experiences. Well, on this occasion, I sat on his right, and opposite me, on his left, was a very charming young woman. She was strikingly handsome and looked very lovable and all that. She seemed as delighted as my friend, the captain, was at my stories of African adventures. I, at the same time, was charmed with her. With me it was a case of love at first sight. The captain introduced us to one another, and for several days my suit seemed to progress swimmingly. She seemed to have eyes and ears for no one but me. My next neighbour to the left was a young dude, all collars and cuffs, who didn't seem to have two ideas in his head, and had never achieved anything more heroic than smoking cigarettes and wearing an eye-glass. Well, this youth hardly ever said a word at the table, but one day at dinner he happened to remark that he knew how to make an exceptionally good salad. At the mention of salad the angelic young fairy opposite immediately dropped all interest in what I was saying to her and bestowed her attentions on him. Very well, the dude was not blind to this display of interest in his salad, and that evening had a dish of it prepared and invited her to help him eat it. The end of it all was that she cruelly threw me over, and shortly after reaching New York married the young man whose sole recommendation, so far as I could see, was that he knew how to make a good salad, and whose accomplishments consisted in wearing an eye-glass and puffing cigarettes. Yes, it's sad, but it seems to be only too true, that a salad will make a deeper impression on the daintiest piece of femininity you might meet in a month than all the romance and chivalric devotion in the world."

The tone of sneering jocularly of that declaration scarcely disguises the pang of being jilted. We do not hold the sneer at the fair sex justified by the circumstances. These only prove the youthful simplicity of the adventurous traveller. He had evidently set his heart upon a conquest at first sight on the credentials of his pluck and his sufferings. He had met with a Desdemona, he thought. The whole account seems a free translation into modern prose of Shakespeare's blank verse. The skipper proved a very father-in-law to our explorer, even as Brabantio to Othello.

The Captain lov'd me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year, -the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days;
To the very moment that he bade me tell it:
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;
Of hair-breadth 'scapes i' th' imminent deadly breach;
Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And portance in my travel's history:
Wherein of antres vast, and deserts idle,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to speak,—such was the process;

And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. This to hear,
Would Desdemona seriously incline ;

* * * * *
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs :
She swore,—in faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange ;
'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful :
She wish'd she had not heard it ; yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man : she thank'd me ;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint, I spake :
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd ;
And I lov'd her that she did pity them.

But alas ! the whiteman, even in wooing one of his own white girls, was not half so successful as the Moor in winning a doubly, trebly, quadruply fair creature—one of the fairest—in every sense—of Eve's daughters. It is all nonsense that

She loved me for the dangers I had passed ;
And I loved her that she did pity them.

'Not a bit of it. He may have beguiled the dreary monotone of life on board with the thought that

She listen'd with a fitting blush,
With downcast eyes and modest grace,
For well she knew, I could not chuse
But gaze upon her face.

And she, on her part, might well have innocently encouraged the lovelorn moonling into the fancy for the nonce that

She listen'd with a fitting blush,
With downcast eyes, and modest grace ;
And she forgave me, that I gazed
Too fondly on her face !

If she did so, she would never have thought that the love play would be remembered on shore. But she does not seem to have done even that. It is a huge "sell—himself being his own vendor." He, poor fellow, may have loved her after a fashion, but there is no trace that she ever loved him on any ground. It is a case of misunderstanding all round. The hero certainly does not know his own mind. He loved her not for her tenderness but her beauty, although we confess we miss in him that enthusiasm which one who had been confined to the desert with savage African belles might be expected to evince.
Rather, he liked her looks, saw her "a charming young woman," "strikingly handsome and all that"—he did not care enough for her to dwell upon her charms—and it was easy for him to conclude that such a creature might be a good pretext to turn from Benedick to Benedict and thus determine his gadding about existence. Directly he decided that the connection would be a good one, he saw all difficulties in the way vanish. He believed himself most interesting in her eyes. She may have pitied him if she believed all his "moving accidents by flood and field," but, as for loving, she never pretended it. We have his own authority for saying so. It is plain enough from his account that it was all a jumping to an agreeable conclusion on his part. She is incapable of loving on such a trumpery ground as the dangers passed by a man or the daring shown by him. She might as well be expected to wed every private of the Pioneers or Sappers and every fool who goes in for the barren letters V. C. She, the Girl of the Period, wanted something better to fall upon, something that might at once give an order for a well-furnished house and table and cellar. As for hair-breadth escapes, she had been wont to yawn at Blondin performances. She may have pitied him, for his miserable choice of a life. She evidently allowed herself to be bored with his stories of ugly monsters, human and unhuman, surcharged with jaw-breaking names.

The very head and front of her offending
Hath this extent, no more.

SIR Henry Harrison is in no sense among the Monarchs Retired from Business. At the worst view, he is a Napoleon relegated to his Elba—but a ruler still in his empire in miniature. But really it does rank injustice to the sacred institution—that administrative fetish—the Board of Revenue to compare it with a Chur in the Mediterranean. It is true our late Chairman is neither sole monarch there, nor supreme. He is a sort of Tycoon or Dhurm Raj—a second king, but far more efficient than the alternative or Junior Ruler in any Constitution, present or past, rejoicing in a double-barrelled head.

Nor has he left the Corporation of which he was the undisputed head for near a dozen years. He has his seat there still, though he has descended from the Chair. His burden of office having devolved on another European member of the same Covenanted Civil Service, who is presumably his personal friend and who could scarcely get such a lift without his recommendation to Government, Sir Henry, if so minded, will still be able to rule in the Municipality benami through his tulchan as it were, without in the least feeling the weight of his former responsibility. Such a prospect is to many minds exceedingly fascinating.
But Sir Henry Harrison is too serious-minded a man to abuse such an opportunity. The utmost that he may do, and do legitimately, is to see that his policy is not unfairly disturbed.

Meanwhile, the great man condescends to mingle in the mob of the Commission. Sir Henry held his last Durbar—Council—on the 14th April. That day was his last as Chairman—

The first dark day of nothingness—
The last of danger and distress.

On Thursday last (24th), the new Chairman held his first palaver.
Sir Henry Harrison graced the occasion. The two Kings, being more than allies, the one being original holder and the other his chosen heir, met one another without embarrassment. Always genial, the veteran since his abdication is almost mercurial. With the weight off his shoulders, he was jolly as a frisky girl and agreeable as any jilt.

The monarch quits his throne, and condescends
Humbly to court the favour of his friends ;
For pity's sake tells undeserv'd mishaps,
And, their applause to gain, recounts his claps.
Thus the victorious chiefs of ancient Rome,
To win the mob, a suppliant's form assume,
In pompous strain fight o'er th' extinguish'd war,
And show where honour bled in ev'ry scar.

But though bare merit might in Rome appear
The strongest plea for favour, 'tis not here ;
We form our judgment in another way ;
And they will best succeed, who best can pay :
Those, who would gain the votes of British tribes,
Must add to force of merit, force of bribes.

For "British" you may as well read "Baboo." As for "bribes," these are of two kinds, positive and negative. If you don't pay, you may put the ratepayers' money into one's pocket or divert it to expected channels, or grant offices. The ratepayers in general themselves care nothing but to be let as much alone as possible. They cannot afford—the majority of them—to pay more than they do for even the blessings of a civilised municipality.

It is a serious matter among so many patriotic representatives of the town for any one, without a long preliminary canvassing and influencing, to aspire to the prize office of Vice-Chairman carrying a pay of one thousand a month. When Sir Henry Harrison, at his farewell meeting of the Corporation as Chairman, proposed Baboo Preo Nath Mullick for acting Vice, he was assailed from all sides with deafening cries of No ! No ! After that, it is evidence of no little courage in Baboo Janokinath Ghosal to present himself for the dangerous elevation. He is scarcely to be pitied if he found that a Municipal Corporation is a different thing from a National Congress.
The public estimate of his value on the Board is emphasised by the fact that he cheapened himself to an old song. But though they were offered a Baboo in all the glory of a chimney pot (he is supposed to have crossed Suez) for nothing, they'll none of it.

LAST December, three Frenchmen—the brothers Rogue and another Frenchman—and a native servant were carried off by brigands in Annam. They have now been ransomed for 50,000 dollars, a dozen silk pieces and a dozen watches. It was a difficult business to execute the conditions and effect the release and conveyance home of the captives. A trifle might raise the suspicions of the raiders and marauders. A single false step might invite failure. So far from bringing back those already in the hands of the enemy, there was danger of leading the mission and the ransom all into the grip of the brigands.
Happily, the event has proved otherwise. The mission went under an escort, but perhaps the presence of a priest was the more efficient protection for the party.

WE are glad to see the leading organ of the defenders of the Empire—the Army and Navy Gazette—reproduce the well-merited tribute paid by the Times of India to the Indian service of the Duke of Connaught who has just vacated the Bombay command. The experiment of officering the Army and Navy with Princes of the Blood and kinsmen and relations of Royalty is not without risk from the difficulty, in the first place, of maintaining discipline, and, next, the liability of nepotism in promotion to the injury of legitimate claims and, of course, the inefficiency of the Service. When, therefore, such a personage in condescending to serve does, in very sooth, earn his wages as soldier or sailor under the Crown, when he in right earnest pursues his calling, patiently submitting himself to all the drill and drudgery, learning all his duties and giving genuine work, the fact should be freely and handsomely acknowledged. There is no reason in the world why the Royal Caste should not turn out good soldiers and sailors. In all ages, in all parts of the globe, war has been the occupation of Princes. It is the privilege of sovereigns to lead their armies in the field. It is only in modern degeneracy that princes have been relegated to a life of inaction, or, what is worse, a career of show-soldiering. In England, under the constitution and public opinion of the land, the condition of the scions of royalty is specially hard. The Princes of Great Britain have perhaps less scope than those of the absolute monarchies of the Continent. The profession of arms is, however, still open to them. But they have not achieved in it any remarkable success,—either in the field or in camp. There are a few honourable exceptions, however. Indeed, when such a personage does succeed, he usually succeeds excellently well. Such is His Royal Highness of Connaught. He is no dunghill cock, or milk-sop. Without being a Hector or a Quixote, he is far from a drawing-room knight. He is not a military man for the flashy uniform, but for the chances of distinction of that line, with full knowledge of the mischances. He is proud of his profession, because proficient in it. Having entered the army, he has not only always been to the fore in any duty of danger but also cheerfully undertaken every drudgery. In fine, he is an admirable soldier.

In India, he has won golden opinions. This is a bad country for a royal personage in office. A hundred temptations assail him. Hundreds of men, many in loyal good faith, are ready to seduce him from the path of duty. Happily, he proved himself superior to all such dangers. He is a true soldier whose first discipline is exercised on himself. Socially, the Duke gave a good tone to the army in India. To the native soldiery, he was most gracious. Accessible to the private, he delighted to converse with the native officers, who loved him for his merits and regarded him for his mother.

WE have to apologise for not having yet thankfully acknowledged the handsome omende that the Bengal Times made to us, after having done us no little injustice, even to charging us with something like forgery. The fact is, having mislaid the number of the Dacca paper, we forgot the matter. We dare say it will turn up one of these days. Till then, we can only generally express thanks and reciprocate the good feeling—both which we do with our wonted sincerity and thoroughness. Under all his difficulties and trials—specially from Hindu tall talk and impertinence—there was always the right stuff in the editor which we hoped would come out at a favourable moment. His individuality not even a dak-runner, provided he owns a head piece, could not be so aggressive. But though not perhaps a very amiable individuality, no one possessing himself any personality to speak of, or cultivating the courage of conviction, could fail to appreciate it—there being both capacity and honour visible in it. As for its combativeness, that was thoroughly appreciated in a quarter which could return as good as it got.

THE Labour Revolt is extending in Austria. Miners and others struck work in Moravia and at Ostrau. They wanted other workmen to follow suit. They took to riots. There were many conflicts between the strikers and the military and the police and many severely wounded. The strikers have since calmed down. At Cracow, there was, on the 23rd, looting of the Jewish shops, the military were called and eleven persons killed and many injured. The latest telegraphic report speaks of a demonstration by four thousand workmen at Biala in Galicia. They grew unruly, and made for the taverns which they wrecked.

The riot could only be ended by military firing, causing bodily injury and several deaths.

MR. Balfour's Irish Land Purchase Bill has attained its second reading. Mr. Parnell moved for its rejection. He urged that the Bill justifies the Land League. While it will relieve a large class of landlords, it will only make a quarter of the tenants owners. The fund proposed was inadequate, meeting only half way the demand. He would rather prefer the advance to landlords from the local rates to enable them to dispose of encumbrances and for compensation for reduced rent, to advances to tenants as in the Bill. Mr. Gladstone opposed the Bill on ground of insufficiency of guarantee for British credit, and characterised Mr. Parnell's alternative as vague and, therefore, incapable of discussion. The debate has been adjourned to Monday next and may be concluded by Thursday following.

ON the 18th, Mr. Samuel Smith introduced in the House of Commons a motion for an International Conference on the subject of bimetallism. He said that it was not yet shewn that the fall in prices was due to the fall in silver. Sir William Harcourt considered the step undignified and dangerous. Mr. Gladstone expressed himself against the motion. Mr. Balfour was for it and approved the principle of bimetallism. Mr. Goschen was of opinion that bimetallism would only be practicable if all parties to the agreement remained true, which obviously was expecting too much. The motion was rejected by 183 against 87 votes. It has since, however, been announced in the House that the Government intended to arrange for silver imported from India being admitted at the rupee standard of purity or its equivalent.

In the United States, too, the proposed Silver Purchase Bill has been abandoned, and an amended Bill is being framed, empowering the Treasury to purchase, from time to time, silver bullion of an aggregate value of $4\frac{1}{2}$ million ounces of pure silver monthly, and making Treasury Notes eligible for all public dues, and further enabling the Treasury to coin such portion of the purchased bullion as may be necessary for redemption of notes.

THE London merchants are opposed to Mr. Goschen's proposal for a new hall-mark on plate of a rupee standard from India. They held a meeting over it and referred the matter to manufacturers in India.

Speaking at a merchants and bankers' banquet at the Mansion House, Mr. Goschen hinted at the probability of a reduction in the income-tax, in case of a surplus, next year. Will the Government in India take the hint?

The reduced mail postage to India probably takes effect from next month. There is no indication that we in India shall be allowed any saving on our letters to Great Britain.

Replying to a question, Sir John Gorst said in the House of Commons that Lord Cross sees no reason to interfere in the Durbhunga temple matter.

HER Majesty has arrived at Darmstadt and the Prince of Wales in London.

There is a strike among the railway employés, and traffic is suspended between Queenstown and Dublin.

The Brazilian Republic has abolished religious teaching in the state schools.

The German Attaché Baron Plessen at St. Petersburg has, without notice, gone to Copenhagen. It is said that he had employed agents to obtain plans of Russian fortresses.

They have abolished the gambling saloons in Egypt.

Mr. Stanley is being feted at Brussels. He has advised Belgium to persevere in her undertakings in Central Africa. The Premier has announced to the Belgian Chamber of Deputies that King Leopold had proposed that the Congo State should form a Belgian colony.

ORATOR Surendranath Banerjee goes on repeating his denunciations of the Government in India and of the Indian Legislative Councils. There was a meeting at Exeter with Sir John Budd Phear in the Chair. Of course, a resolution was carried urging election in the Councils as a necessity of the time and civilization.

WE received yesterday by post a printed invitation, dated overnight, to a public meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta, to be held at a theatre in the Native quarter this evening, at 5 o'clock, to protest against Lord Cross' Indian Councils Bill and to urge the introduction of the elective principle. The whole thing is suspicious in the extreme, and of a piece with the methods of the knot of wire-pullers who have, for these several years, undertaken to manufacture public opinion. To begin with, this circular to the select is signed by Baboos "Rajkumar Sarvadhikary and J. Ghosal, Secretaries." But who appointed them? Are they Secretaries of their own creation? And what for? Of which institute or what body are they Secretaries. There may be respectable people in this ignorant land to attend to such a call, devoid as it is of all political value and indeed wanting in assurance of authenticity. There is no taking the public into confidence—no, not even a serious call to the public. On receiving the circular, we looked into the papers of the day, but not the faintest suggestion occurs in any of them, of the tornado for overwhelming poor Lord Cross and his measure that the duet of Secretaries—to nothing were preparing for this evening's entertainment of the politicians of Black Town. Of course, the Town Hall is discreetly avoided. Far be it from us to reproach our brace of patriotic Secretaries. They are scarcely free agents. The real operators are not visible, being probably not in the country. There are all the elements of a discreditable hole and corner movement. And yet, we know, how the news will be reported by telegraph.

WE are sorry, though scarcely surprised, to learn by telegraph of our old friend Nawab Syud Loof Ali Khan, C.I.E.'s death this morning, at his residence at Patna. He was long suffering from heart-disease. His death removes an important figure in Behar society. He was about 80 years old, and was a link between the past and present generations. He has left with his immense fortune three sons, namely, Syud Mehdi Hassan Khan, Syud Ibraheem Hosain Khan, and Syud Akbar Ali Khan, and two daughters, one of whom is a widow. Here is a splendid opportunity for the men connected with the Courts, by bringing about a quarrel between the heirs.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1890.

THE PEOPLE'S TRIBUTE TO LORD REAY.

BOMBAY has spoken unmistakably of Lord Reay's administration. Nothing could be more enthusiastic than the terms of admiration in which the Western Presidency bade farewell to its retiring Ruler. Valedictory addresses rained down upon him, and his last days in Bombay must have been to him glorious and happy days indeed. Lady Reay also had her share of the kind things which were said on all sides on the close of their Indian career, and we congratulate them both on the honor they have achieved. Certainly, Bombay has not had for many a day a Ruler of such high character. Marked has been the progress made by that city, and the Presidency in general, under Lord Reay's just, active, and sympathetic rule. And he has had his reward in the remarkable display of good will and esteem which his departure called forth from all classes of the people. The demonstrations in Lord Reay's honor were characterised by as great a unanimity as is possible in these days. Not that there is not a rift in the lute, but perfect harmony of opinion in public questions is perhaps no more to be looked for in this country.

The Rast Goftar which has shown a remarkable moderation in its notice of Lord Reay's administration, regrets the attitude of a section of the European community. There were, indeed, a few prominent Europeans present at the Town Hall meeting held in honor of the Governor, but the majority of the community kept aloof. "This is most unfortunate—this severance of race from race, in their respective opinion of the Governor's administration. The wide diversity of feeling with which it has been regarded by the two great sections of the community gives rise to many painful reflections and minimises the hope of the gulf which divides them being ever bridged over." These melancholy reflections must excite an echo in every true lover of the country. And so far as these movements to do honor to a retiring proconsul serve to emphasise the schism in the body politic, their political effects are not altogether of a salutary kind.

Barring this inevitable element of regret, the demonstrations in honor of Lord Reay have been of a remarkable character. The Town Hall meeting resolved to raise a statue in commemoration of his services as well as to found some institution calculated to be of permanent benefit to the people. The speakers at the meeting were some of the most conspicuous citizens of Bombay, and they all spoke with genuine feeling of admiration of Lord Reay's eminent services. Mr. Budrudin Tyebji, who moved the first resolution, passed the whole of his Lordship's administration under review, and let his public acts speak for him. Lord Reay's singular success in the appointments and nominations made by him—the progressive tendencies of his legislation—his firm support of local self-government—"his righteous wrath against corruption and misconduct"—his support of the dignity of the Native Princes without sacrificing the interests of their subjects—his great educational reforms—his rare tact in calling forth public benevolence in aid of institutions for the relief of suffering—the numerous hospitals, asylums and other charitable institutions which have owed their existence or their development to his fostering hand—and last, but by no means least—his gracious and charming courtesy, and accessibility to all classes—these are by no means small claims upon a people's regard, and the people of Bombay acknowledged those claims at their fair value. Mr. Pheroze Shah Mehta made a fine and humorous speech in seconding the resolution. The Rast Goftar summarises the opening portion of his speech so well that we need no apology in transferring its note to our columns. "Mr. Mehta" says our contemporary, "generally has some anecdote apt to the occasion, or some idea to turn his imagination upon. This time he discoursed pleasantly upon the striking dissimilarity between the likeness of Lord Reay at the Technical Institute taken when his Lordship was on the brown heath and shaggy wood of his own native land, and his living presence in Bombay. The portrait showed him pale and thin, while his own self looked very much better for its stay in India. How could he have thrived in this much abused climate of ours—(and no one just now abuses it so much as the Uncovenanted Civil Servants of India.....) with hard work and the cares of office? Might not Lord Reay be a fraud, after all? Mr. Mehta, of course, dismissed this thought, as soon as it had entered his mind, and.....deduced an inference.....that His Excellency had thriven and thickened on hard, earnest, conscientious toil. Lord Dufferin, who claimed to have labored very hard while he was Viceroy of India said that.....that he was but 'a pale and attenuated shadow' of his former self. So it would appear that one man's meat is another man's poison!" Speaking seriously, Mr. Mehta said: "The sympathetic character and robustness of his policy had been conspicuously manifest in his desire to understand the real wants, wishes, and sentiments of the people, and in the courage with which he had invited and welcomed knowledge, information and criticism from all quarters. While thus calmly and judiciously administering the affairs of the Presidency, Lord Reay was not lacking in firmness where firmness was required. He never faltered nor wavered when misconduct and corruption had to be exposed and eradicated. He (the speaker) thought that it would yet come to be universally acknowledged that his action in such matters had not only been in the interests of the purity of the administration and of the public welfare, but also in the best interests of the honor and prestige of the Services of which England was justly proud and of the English name."

The Rev. Dr. Mackichan made a very able speech in commending the proposal for two separate memorials. "He believed that it was no exaggeration of the truth, nor was it any injustice to the memory of loved and honored Governors of this province to say that Lord Reay had impressed himself upon the heart of the people to an extent which had not been often attained in the history of our Presidency." Mr. N. G. Chandravarkar spoke with equal warmth of Lord Reay's many merits. His Lordship had been a most assiduous inspirer of philanthropy and work of public utility, but the crowing glory of his administration was its adherence to lofty principles of rectitude. Dr. Cowasjee Hormusjee spoke chiefly of the medical reforms introduced by Lord Reay, and specially of his reorganisation of the Grant Medical College. Mr. Grattan Geary, and the Hon. Mr. R. M. Sayani paid glowing eulogiums upon his Lordship's rule. Speaking of Lord Reay's self-denying decision to postpone the construction of the much-needed Government House in favour of the European Hospital, Mr. Grattan Geary remarked: "This incident is one of many which might be adduced to illustrate the altruistic spirit in which Lord Reay had dealt with many difficult and thorny questions. An administrator of a different stamp would have consulted his own ease or sought an ephemeral popularity by leaving them to his successor. Lord Reay had not been deterred from doing what it seemed to him to be his plain duty through fear of misconception; he had not feared to make enemies of the unworthy or the malevolent. An administrator of this type might make mistakes, for to err was the lot of all men. But honesty of purpose had been always manifest, and his kindness, his eminently sympathetic nature combined with a high and even austere sense of justice.....might have saved him from much harsh and resentful criticism—a criticism not always to be distinguished from unscrupulous misrepresentation of which we have had in these recent days so many unsavoury examples." Mr. Sayani said: "His character was that of a simple, unpretending, solid nature—that of a real diamond—which by use gained in brilliancy. He had often noted in the Legislative Council that instead of holding the members to the strict rules of procedure, he gave them every facility of expressing their views, even when such members were not in order. He carefully listened to their arguments, and in fact he managed matters so well that every one not only was, but felt himself to be, perfectly at liberty to speak and to vote as he thought proper.....Again, it was marvellous to observe how true to conscience was his Lordship. No opposition, no adverse criticism, would induce him to abandon the part which conscientiousness and duty had marked out. The same straightforward conduct had been conspicuous in the exercise even of patronage and hence his selections had commanded universal approbation."

All the speakers vied with one another in paying their tribute of respect to a ruler who had left his mark on their province. The Bombay Town Hall meeting was indeed the most important demonstration in his honor, but the other cities were far from behindhand. The Native Princes also were equally enthusiastic in their praise of a Governor whose bearing towards them had been one of real friendliness. Some of Lord Reay's parting words to the Native Chiefs deserve to be laid to heart by our territorial aristocracy. In replying to the address from the Princes and Chiefs of Kattywar, his Lordship said: "It will give us the greatest pleasure to welcome you to our home in England, but I should be departing from the truth if I led you to think that frequent absence from your states is desirable, because I know that it is the desire of your own subjects that they should see as much of you as possible, not only in your capitals, but also in your villages, and that personal rule entails constant personal supervision..... Then as to your sons being educated in England, that is an extremely difficult question. On the one hand, by sending them there at an early age you secure to them the full benefits of an English education, but on the other hand, there is a risk that if they go at too early an age to England, they will be alienated from their own surroundings and not be in touch with their own people. That would undoubtedly tend to weaken their influence and power for good. Perhaps the best solution of the problem is that they should receive their first education at the Raj Kumar College, and at a riper age they should be sent to England to some of the best institutions to finish their education."

The number of addresses and entertainments with which Lord and Lady Reay have been honored is legion. The cordiality of the demonstrations of good will on the part of the people is unmistakable. Lord Reay has elevated the tone of the Government by his high moral character. He has won the respect of all classes without distinction. With the progress of constitutionalism, statesmanship of the highest order has become a lost art. Under the centralization established by the Duke of Argyle, there is scarcely room for it in the Government of India: there is certainly none for Provincial Governments. All talk of statesmanship is, under the circumstances, idle. All that we care to claim for Lord Reay is ability of a high order, untiring energy and thorough earnestness of purpose. At the same time, he possessed in a large degree those attributes of justice and honesty which are essential to the success of an administrator. The great secret of his success was his deep sympathy for the people over whom he was placed.

We believe Dr. Mackichan did not drop a random statement, when he claimed for Lord Reay a popularity and influence among the people more extensive and deeper than those of any of his predecessors. That, to our mind, is a debatable point, considering that the Presidency has been ruled by Governors like Duncan, Monstuart Elphinstone, and Clerk. But there is little in common between the conditions of the country in their times and those since, and no useful comparison is possible. There is no doubt that Lord Reay succeeded beyond all the modern Governors of Bombay—we mean the last six from Sir Bartle Frere downwards—and, indeed, with perhaps the sole exception of Sir George Russel Clerk, better than any of the twenty heads of the Presidency since the retirement of Sir John Malcolm towards the end of 1819.

HERO-WORSHIP :

OR,

Suppressio veri et suggestio falsi.

Inaccuracies will creep into the most carefully edited publications, even as accidents will happen in the best-regulated households. Beeton in a philological fit says that the Brahmans derive their title from the Jewish Patriarch Abraham. But he is beat hollow by Dr. Brewer who represents Ayeen Akbari as a Brahman king that erected the temple of Juggunnath. "Bunkum," asserts a third white savant, "was a senator of South Carolina," while the wisest and brightest of Britishers, nay of mankind, makes the Prophet of Islam say "If the mountain do not come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain." There is no escape from inaccuracies. Fly them and they will follow you. Reis and Rayyet is no exception, the lynx-eyed literary leviathan presiding over it notwithstanding. The fine Roman hand of the philosophic sage is not certainly discernible in the few lines which lead me to the above remark, but as the responsible editor, he cannot but he made the scapegoat of those that conceal their identities.

The writer of the leaderette in question evidently assumes book-learning to be the be-all and end-all of one's existence---forgetting that education is nothing unless it fills the heart with a due sense of what we owe to God and man---or else P. K. Lahiri would not have been regarded as entitled to the honor of a pretty long obituary notice in Reis which, by the way, deliberately omitted to notice the death of a sound scholar like A. Barua whose edition of Bhabavuti's Vircharita is an invaluable contribution to Literature. Learning is a good thing, but it is not the one thing needful. A man may be as brilliant, as clever, as scholarly as you like, but with all this, if he is not good, he is a paltry fellow, and the death notice of such a man need not take up half a column of a journal that has ever been characterized by keen discrimination and well-balanced judgment. But what though, as a moral man, Mr. Lahiri lived and died very poor and very small, he had, we are told, charity---and charity, you know, covers a multitude of sins---for he has left no inconsiderable portion of his fortune for the poor. This will be news indeed to not a few, for, however great an "expounder of the higher classics" he might have been, he was never guilty of an exuberance of charity in any sense of the term. That writer must either be indebted to his imagination for his facts or it is fellow-feeling that makes him wondrous kind. His hero might have done the good Samaritan, but that always without the oil and the two pence. He might have been sentimental to a degree like that "most seeming virtuous" author of Tristram Shandy, who in spite of his flood of tears for a deceased donkey, suffered his own to rot in jail for debt while he himself was basking in the sunshine of prosperity, but sentimentalities no more make a good man than fine feathers make a fine bird.

But let alone the poor; what has he left for his widowed sister scarcely passed her teens, who was, during his life time, compelled to throw herself on the hospitality of a distant kinsman, and the generosity of that relative failing, had to be bred in the kitchen to the eternal glory of his Pandit brother under petticoat government? What provision has he made for his old aunt whose life he managed to render not worth a day's purchase? The other sister has indeed been provided for in the will. But is the testament worth the paper on which it is written? Was it not made simply to save appearances, or why was care taken not to have it registered? Who knows that it has not already been made away with.

It may be true that Mr. Lahiri was twice offered an appointment in the Education Department which he did twice refuse, but does it necessarily follow that "he was possessed of much self-respect?" It is certainly "a pleasure to hear his pupils speak enthusiastically in his praise," yet his life with all his scholarship was simply time elaborately thrown away, and ought to be a great warning to those who are willing to take a lesson. Thoroughly wanting in a kindly culture of unselfishness, a perfect type of Mammon-worshipper he fell a victim to the greed of filthy lucre, and those that sat at his feet, however much they may admire him, should think twice before they take a leaf out of their deceased Professor's book of life. They should never lose sight of the fact that neither literature nor cultivation, nor knowledge will avail one anything unless it is the cause of noble deeds and worthy actions.

Be good, sweet maid, and let whom will be clever.

Do noble things, not dream them all day long.

In conclusion, I hope I shall not be taken to task for disregarding that most pernicious precept De mortuis nil nisi bonum. Were it acted upon, Biography would not have been the most universally pleasant, universally profitable of all reading that it is. We should certainly

Be to one's faults a little blind,

And to his virtues a little kind.

But we ought at the same time to remember that

Praise undeserved is scandal in disguise.

WHOLE TRUTH.

ELECTIVE SYSTEM AND THE MUSSALMANS OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,---Many are anxious to know the reason why do the Mussalmans, who form one-third of the population of India, object to the introduction of the elective system in this country? For the edification of these men I wish to explain the matter in the following few words which I hope will prove the justification of the attitude taken by the Mussalmans of India at the present time.

Though there are not many Moslem orators and public speakers and writers, yet the few that are to be found in this country are sufficient enough to let the Government and the public know the views of their community on questions concerning themselves. It is gratifying to see that the leaders of the Moslem community headed by Nawab Abdool Lutef, from the very foundation of the Congress refused to join that body in their political movements. Were the objects of the Congressists not enmical to the interests of the Faithful, the Nawab and others would not have refused the repeated invitations of the "political agitators." Besides this the present demand of the Congressists is the introduction of the elective system in the Legislative Councils of the realm, which self-interested demand is highly injurious and greatly detrimental to the interests of the Indian Mussalmans. In the way of verification I have to mention that Lord Ripon's local self-government scheme based on partly election principle is yearly doing much harm to the cause of the Islamites. Had not the Government kept in its hands the power of nominating a certain number of its members, every Local Board would have been entirely free from the Moslem element in it. The result of the elections for the Local Boards shows that excepting in very rare cases Moslem candidates never succeeded in their endeavours to get seats on the Board. The few names that we find in the Civil List are almost all Government nominees. The reason of this is evident. The Moslem candidates on account of their being penniless have not much influence in the locality and consequently cannot successfully cope with their Hindoo antagonists in securing the adequate number of votes for seats on the Board. Again in cases of trading classes such as hide-merchants, meat-suppliers, boot-sellers and the like, if one of them ever succeeds at a great expense to secure a sufficient number of votes to make him eligible for a seat on the Board, the other elected Hindoo members deadily object to sit with him, forgetting that among themselves there are many Telies (oil-dealers), Paramanicks (barbers), or Gadals (milkmen) who are always scorned on account of their mean calling, by the respectable people and never get a respectable place in high society. On Municipal Boards the case is the same as the above. The elected Moslem members are seldom to be found. There is a good number of educated Mussalmans in each locality who are quite competent and eligible to serve on the local corporation or the Board, but on account of their being empty-pursed they have not sufficient means and influence to beat the Hindoos in the canvassing contest. The nominated Moslem members who are very few in number never get opportunity to do good to the community they represent. Whenever they propose anything for the benefit of their co-religionists they are outvoted. Where there are European and in special cases impartial non-official chairmen, the interests of the followers of Islam are occasionally protected. These Boards are without any hindrance doing much injury to the poor Mussalmans. In the Reports of these Boards it is seldom found that the Hindoo members ever proposed anything for the good of the Faithful. It cannot be said without disparaging the local experience and knowledge of the Hindoo members that they do not know the grievances of their Moslem voters and their neighbours and the hardship they are daily undergoing for the non-redress of the same. Such being the state of affairs what good could the Mussalmans expect at the hands of these so-called patriotic and representative men.

Under these circumstances any wise and impartial man can easily see that the existing elective system has already done and is doing much injury to the cause of the Mussalmans. To introduce the elective system in the general administration of the country is to deprive the Mussalmans of what little political power and influence they now possess and to leave them entirely at the mercy of the apathetic Hindoos. When it is hardly possible for the Mussalmans to secure by election seats on the Local Boards, it would be absurd to suppose that they will be able to enter the Legislative Councils by means of election. By empowering the public bodies to send in their representatives to the Local Councils, the interests of the 50 millions of the Indian Mussalmans will not be properly protected. Consequently the nomination system which the Marquess of Salisbury, Viscount Cross and the Marquess of Lansdowne advocate is the safest course to protect the interests of the different nationalities of India. The Viceroy and his able and impartial counsellors will never do injustice to any communities in nominating their representatives and protecting their interests in matters of legislation.

I now beg to say a few words as to the elective principle itself. The Marquess of Salisbury in his masterly speech justly said: "The elective principle—government by representation is not an Eastern idea; it does not fit Eastern traditions or Eastern minds." This frank and unbiased expression of a stubborn fact has put the Congressists out of their senses. They in their madness gave vent to many objectionable utterances and tried their utmost to gainsay the noble Marquess by unsound arguments and misrepresentations. They cited the examples of the Panchayet system prevalent in India from olden times, and also the recently created so-called election system under which the delegates to the Congress are annually appointed. In the first place I beg to say that the Panchayets are never made by election, but they are made by nomination or sometime by selection. For the appointment of a Panchayet or Panchayets no voting papers ever issued nor were there ever any lists of voters for the purpose. It was generally the case that the most influential man of a locality sent for the intelligent men of the place and nominated some of them to perform the duties of Panchayets, and in the absence of any such influential man the intelligent people of the locality met together and selected some from among themselves to supervise the doings of the ignorant masses. These men on account of their advanced intelligence easily managed to rule over the ignorant. Similarly a certain number of Congressists meet together at one place and select some to represent the local inhabitants at the Congress.

Let the leaders of the Congress honestly say if they had ever during the last five years anything like constituencies and any lists of their constituents, and if they ever invited the people of any locality to give votes regularly and in a formal way, or if there was any regular polling for the election of delegates to the Congress.

When with so much zeal and energy the congressists could not act on the lines of election principle, which they so much desire, in sending representatives to their annual gathering, it is very strange that their "mouthpiece" Mr. Bradlaugh means to propose in the House of Commons that elective system should be introduced by the Governments in India and for each million of population 12 representatives should be elected. It would be prudent for the advocates of the elective system to first set the example themselves by appointing the delegates to the Congress on the elective principle, and have their so-called Congress representatives elected by fair and formal means as it is the case with the honourable members of the Imperial Parliament. Moreover, let the congressists first try to introduce the elective system into the Independent and Protected Native States which are in most cases managed by the highly educated and learned Hindoos. If they can do this with success and to the satisfaction of the different sections of the multifarious communities that comprise the population of the Native States, there would be no difficulty then to have the Government of India introduce the same in its administration. As long as the Hindoos cannot achieve this, so long the remark of the noble Marquess of Salisbury will remain unshakable

NOMINATION versus ELECTION.

A VINDICATION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Kindly allow me to correct one or two errors which have unwittingly crept into your comment on the Englishman's badinage of me. No man knows better than the editor of Reis and Rayyet how unsafe it is to get information at second hand, from the Englishman. Who told him that I am the author of the works on Vedanta Philosophy? Sure, there is not a single word to that effect in my letter (which, of course, he had not the fairness to publish). How your "staid (?) contemporary" the Englishman, came to understand that I should be held responsible for the "farrago of nonsense heralding my books," in face of distinct intimation, in the Prospectus of their authorship (Lala Sreeram Saheb and the late Mr. Dhole, being the authors) can only be explained upon the hypothesis of his proverbial obtuseness. I never suggested in my letter (which I herewith enclose) that "the prospectus was written by the Manager," having distinctly intimated at his express request that he, "an humble personage" should not come up for chastisement. These are grave enough slips. Surely, one, who "recalls a gem" should not object to "a dearly beloved motherland," being "hurled from a pinnacle." But that is not my concern.

I can well understand the provocation of the Englishman and you will understand it too, when you read the enclosed letter. But I have been extremely pained to find you, holding me up to public ridicule and not only myself, but the entire category of Calcutta University M.A.'s, on the bare pretext of a supposed comparison, which I, according to the Englishman, instituted between the prospectus of my (?) manager, and the impassioned style of Jean Paul and DeQuincy. Surely I have given you no provocation. Believe me, I never contended that the prospectus was "an unimpeachable specimen of classic English." To confess a truth, I am no admirer, even at its best, of flowery long-drawn diction. What I objected to was the Englishman's calling it a trumpet-blast of Bengal. I contended that it was not indigenous but exotic. "It had its origin not in Bengal but in Germany and England." I appeal to you as to an Acharjya—answer me this hypothetical question. Supposing DeQuincy had attempted to anticipate his organ-music of fifty at twenty years, or say at fifteen, had he not produced something very like the prospectus in question? The exquisite "impassioned style" of DeQuincy, when imitated by an inferior hand and that hand not at all practised in composition, became the style of the prospectus. This is what I meant, by submitting that it was the ordinary impassioned prose style of Jean Paul and DeQuincy.

For the rest, your contemporary has not one word to say with regard to my protest against his attempt to heap ridicule upon the Upanisads. I admire them with all my soul. And my only object in writing at all was to point out to your Philistine contemporary that "the only means of counteracting the heat-lightnings of English education was to let in" as the Vedanta publishers have attempted to do, "the pure broad white light of the Hindoo Sastras."

HIRENDRA NATH DATTA.

139, Cornwallis-street, April 21, 1890.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Englishman.

SIR,—One or two words, with regard to your leader of the 26th March last, in which a person comes up for rather severe handling. What is there in the Prospectus to justify the tone of superior contempt which inspires your leader-writer? Is it the style or the sentiments. "These are no ordinary books to judge from the author's prospectus." If the Prospectus is the author's, why should the Manager, an humble personage come up for chastisement? "A philosopher should avoid the suspicion of levity." He should, to be sure; but much more should a publicist avoid slips of pen and intellect. There is, I repeat, nothing in the prospectus to fasten the "plantigrade phrases" on him.

With regard to the style I beg to submit that it is the ordinary impassioned prose style of Jean Paul and DeQuincy. It is not the gift of the Director of Public Instruction but of these eminent prose-writers. It had its origin, not in Bengal but in Germany and England.

You speak sneeringly of the English style of Bengali youths. The only rejoinder that I care to send is this: there are graduates among my friends and associates who will feel highly gratified if any English gentleman of their age, will consent to make a trial of style with them.

As for the sentiments of the prospectus I believe they are fully shared in by the best men of this country (for whom they are intended). There is no denying that English education is converting the country to "scientific atheism," or what is worse to atheism, based upon pseudo-science or as Carlyle would have called it "ne-science;" and that the only means of counteracting the heat-lightning of English education is to let in the pure broad white light of the Hindoo Sastras. Why this should be talking "ridiculous nonsense" is more than one can understand.

Is not spirit more than matter? And is not spiritualism of absolutely greater worth than materialism? To think otherwise would be thinking like a Philistine. By your heaping of ridicule on Kaivalya, one is reminded of the ill fate which attended the word saint, in the England of Charles II.'s cavaliers.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

LOVE AND NATURE.

O YE birds there, our sweetest in singing,
Did ye learn your glad music of streams?
From yon fountain melodiously springing
Like a sleeper awakened from dreams?

Hark, that bell-note! How sweetly it tinkled
Over ledges, thro' mosses and fern!
As ye bathed there at noon dew-besprinkled,
Did the first bird its first note there learn?

And the winds, now in Autumn-leaves moaning,
Now joyous and gay after rain,
Did ye hear them, your answer intoning,
With a sadder or gayer refrain?

And the storms, were they also your teachers?
Say, thou Eagle, dread monarch on high,
Lord of air and of all feathered creatures,
Came it thence, thine unearthly shrill cry?

Was it thus, now such melodies pouring,
That ye learnt your first lesson, sweet birds?
Even as eloquence, high in its soaring,
Was content first to stammer in words?

Till the nightingale all notes combining,
Song of finch, thrush, and warbler, oft-told,
Came last, like a Homer, refining
Rude lays to an epic of gold.*

Ah, not thus, came the answer, replying
From a songster, the sage of the grove,
Not from wind, stream, or fountain outlying,
But within us the teacher, from love!

Love, it may be, the picker, the chooser,
Nature's sweetest sounds apt to recall;
Love, it may be, the borrower, the user,
But 'tis love at the source after all.

* Love a joy, and a bliss, and a yearning,
Love a pang, and a pain of desire:
Ask yon lark there whose rapture is burning
In the firmament, catching its fire:

Ask the skylark, our wonder, our glory,
As he sings from his honest sweet breast,
Tho' a world may be listening, his story,
To his little brown mate in the nest!

* "Inspired mocking-bird, greatest of plagiarists."

So the love-note, the love-song, the warning
When the hawk is abroad in the sky,
Are love's offspring, immediately born in Love's heart, and without love they die.

For a thousand sweet notes may be ringing,
Heard Nature's rude harpstrings along;
But the charm of them all is in singing,
And the heart is the charm of the song.

And would ye too, our singers, not perish,
But live on, and sound thro' the years,—
Know, 'tis Nature alone we most cherish,
But Nature made human thro' tears.

For a thousand sweet thoughts may be winging,
Love-born, youthful fancies along,
But as pearls to enchain us need stringing,
So love to enthrall us needs song.

The Spectator, March 15.

LIFE'S AFTERNOON.

[Extract from the Poem under that name in Violet Fane's Autumn Songs just published.]

I sit at rest and Autumn-time is here!.....
Her first red leaf lies quivering at my feet,—
"At rest,"—not yet at peace! Oh, hurrying year!
Oh, Youth, and Summer, that were once so sweet,
Ere I renounce you,—with your joys and woes,—
I must await the numbing Winter snows!

* * * * *
How shall a minstrel wake the trembling lyre
And sing of Love, in Autumn-time, and live?.....
Yet could the verse that lacks the sacred fire Which Hope, and Youth, and Love, alone can give!
'I strike the lyre; the answering echoes ring:—
Say, oh, my Friend! is it too late to sing?.....

Nay! for in sorer Autumns have I seen!
Some slim brown bird start up upon a spray
And warble as tho' all the world were green
And chill October blossoming like May,— Yet droops the rose, and howso' sweet the song
No bird nor minstrel may rejoice for long.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—The attention of all sufferers is drawn to these well-known remedies, for they possess conspicuous advantages as a safe and reliable aid in all those emergencies to which travellers, emigrants and sailors are so especially liable. They have been largely patronized by wayfarers by land and sea, and, in fact, by all classes of the community, to their very great advantage. The Pills are beyond all doubt one of the most effective remedies ever discovered for cases of obstinate constipation, confirmed indigestion and colic, complaints which are engendered by exposure and irregular feeding. The Ointment will be found of the very greatest service in cases of piles, abscesses, erysipelas and all kinds of local ulcerations.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

WE gladly publish in another column a letter from Maharaja Hurlballabh Narayan Sinha, of Sonbarsa, explaining his purchase of the household furniture of the furlough-going Collector, Mr. Wace, of Bhagalpur.

THE Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief arrived at Simla last week. They were both welcomed by plentiful and replenishing showers.

THE High Court vacation for 1890 has been fixed from September 17 to November 28, the two senior Judges—Messieurs H. T. Prinsep and A. Wilson—doing vacation duty. The High Court is too high game for those of our mercantile friends who, in the amplitude of their leisure, are vexing their souls and their Chamber and the Government over the bare 12 days' holiday during Doorga Pooja of the poor native clerks.

THE Fellows of the Calcutta University have wearied of the Act of Incorporation so old as 1857, and appointed a committee to examine the Act and the amendments called for by time and necessity.

HAVE the Nizam's Courts jurisdiction over European British subjects living in Hyderabad within native jurisdiction? The question has been raised on the prosecution of a young English lady for assault of a native. She disputes the competency of the native Court to try her, and quotes the Treaty of the 10th July 1861 in support of the contention. The question has been argued before a full bench of the Nizam's High Court, but the result is not yet known. Whatever the decision of the Court, if it is adverse to the lady, will it bind the British Government? We are afraid the Nizam must prepare to give up his sovereign rights—if any is still left—against British-born subjects of Her Majesty.

IN the Harsey-Allen suit for damages, the High Court—Mr. Justice Wilson—has, on the application of the defendant, ordered the issue of a commission to Allahabad, Bareilly, Cawnpore and Mussoorie, for examination of eighteen witnesses. The defence contended that the plaintiff has suffered no damages and that the matters to which he takes exception are true, and that it is necessary to examine the witnesses at the several places named on the issue of justification. There was objection to the issue of the commission on the ground of the heavy cost to a poor man like the plaintiff. The Judge in reply made the remark that all litigation is expensive and that the plaintiff should have counted the cost before embarking on it. A reply worthy of a Court which has pulverised so many opulent families and wasted so many big estates and ruined a legion of poor men who fondly believed that the justice of the Crown was for poor and rich alike.

UNDER the sanction of the Local Governments of Bengal and Assam confirmed by the Governor-General in Council, the High Court has promulgated new Rules for the preservation and destruction of the Registers of Subordinate Civil Courts. They are published in the Calcutta Gazette, Part I., of the 30th April, 1889 and come into force from the commencement of the year 1891.

IN Mysore city, they have decided to levy a uniform duty of Rs. 3 per cent on all piece goods, Europe or countrymade.

THE Maharaja Mongal Singh Bahadur of Ulwar has arrived at Bombay after completing his Australian tour. Did he take his Beebe and Belore children with him for the benefit of the sea breeze and the bracing climate of the Southern Continent? By the bye, we wonder whether our friend of the Bengal Times knows this family. His Highness makes a short stay in Bombay, and then starts for his own territory.

ACCORDING to the Builder, the German Government is in for pasteboard barracks. It intends quartering one of the line battalions in camp of twelve such huts. They will measure 32 metres by 7 metres each. The framework will be of wood, the walls and roofs being of pasteboard double, with an insulation of compressed peat and similar materials. It is said that they will keep out cold and keep off heat. If they can stand the rain, they are welcome in India. The corrugated iron sheds are a perfect nuisance. They draw all the heat of the sun, which itself proves less warm to a traveller on the Indian railways than a corrugated iron waiting room.

SIR Robert Sandeman will be back from the Zhob Valley to Quetta by the evening of the 25th, and Sir George White a few days later.

UNDER the magnificent bequest of the late Sagore Dutt, a dispensary was not long ago opened near his country seat at Kamarhati. It has now been raised to a hospital with 12 beds.

MAHOMED AZIM, charged with the late robbery at the Industrial Exhibition School of Art, Bombay, having been caught at Gujrat in the Punjab, with the stolen articles, is now on his way to Bombay for trial.

THE papers report the sad death of "the Indian wife of an Eurasian gentleman, who claims to be Lord Gardner, from injuries received on the previous evening, by a spring door closing unexpectedly, striking her a severe blow on the forehead, and causing concussion and compression of the brain."

The Indian wife of a Eurasian nobleman, or even would-be nobleman is so suggestive of a romance of ethnology, that one cannot help wishing to know something more. Who is this unacknowledged Lord Gardner? The Eastern Guardian ought to be able to say.

A DISTURBANCE last week at Triplicane between the sons—assisted by their people—of the late Muthuvali of the Wallajah and Marwarī mosques, and the servants of the present Prince of Arcot, so serious as to call for the interference of Colonel T. Weldon, C.I.E., Commissioner of Police, Madras, is reported. Muthuvali is, of course, our familiar friend Mutwalli. But what is the Marwarī mosque?

AN offender of daring and originality has for sometime been amusing himself at the expense of our civil defenders in the Upper Provinces. In the assumed character of Police Inspector Mahomed Ali, the fellow so far bamboozled the Mainpuri police, as to get a sub-inspector and several constables to accompany him, in an imaginary pursuit after dacoits. He is supposed to be the notorious Lal Khan who had been personating the police in the district of Moradabad. He has been arrested by the railway police, at Etawah.

A SERIOUS affray of the olden type seems to have taken place at a village in the Kanaghat Subdivision of Nuddea, between the retainers of the Paul Chowdhrys of Kanaghat and those of the estate of the late Rasmani Dasi, of Jaun Bazaar, Calcutta, resulting in a couple of deaths on the spot from spear-shot. The fight must have been an unusually determined one, or dangerous missiles were freely used from the first. We confess we rather like this kind of thing—at a distance. Life is getting too safe and dull for all and sundry—even the most foolish and most rash. We shall not be sorry to see the matter amicably settled, between the parties and the Police. The two deaths are the difficulty. The surviving families of the poor victims will, however, be glad to receive adequate compensation.

THE grant for the establishment of Guru-training classes in connection with Middle schools was, during the last year, raised from Rs. 6,000 to Rs. 9,000. It was distributed as follows:—

Presidency Circle	4,800
Western	1,050
Rajshahye	1,200
Eastern	1,200
Behar	1,200
Total	9,450

The following table shews the number of Gurus under instruction:—

	Schools.	Pupils.
Presidency Division	85 (a)	343
Chota Nagpore	19	90
Burdwan	5	13
Orissa	20 (b)	63
Dacca	18	40
Chittagong	11	19
Rajshahye	19	67
Bhagalpore	2 (c)	18
	179	653

The Guru-training system, which owes its origin to a suggestion of Mr. C. B. Clarke's, still flourishes most in the Presidency Division. It has been now extended to Bhagulpore.

(a) Includes 7 unaided schools with 26 pupils.

(b) Includes 1 unaided school with 5 pupils.

(c) Returned as aided schools.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

HER Majesty returned to England on the last day of the last month.

They are still on it. The Deceased Wife's Sister Bill has been read a second time in the House of Commons.

Mr. Goschen holds that the State has no right to interfere in remedying the causes of depreciation of silver. That is Political Economy, pure and simple.

Mr. Parnell's amendment to reject Mr. Balfour's Irish Land Bill, has itself been rejected by a majority of 80 votes, the same number that had passed the second reading of the Bill. Mr. Balfour is of opinion that the Irish had not shewn themselves worthy of Government confidence, and it is not yet time, even partially, to hand over control over transfers of land, as suggested by Mr. Chamberlain, to Irish County Councils, which are sure to work on political lines with a determination to frustrate the object of Government.

At the annual Banquet of the London Chamber of Commerce, on the 30th April, at the Hotel Metropole, Sir Charles Tupper, High Commissioner in London for Canada, denied that there was a widespread desire in the Dominion for annexation to the United States, and assured the audience that England could always depend on the support of the colony in time of emergency.

Another assurance, at another festive gathering—the annual Civil Service dinner—on a previous date, was given by Lord Wolseley from the Chair. He recommended an efficient army, but ridiculed the idea that England's whole strength lay in her navy and that with its surrender, she would be undone. There was always, he said, ample provisions for eight months in store, and that it was not possible to block all English ports against fresh supplies.

The new smokeless gunpowder, named Walthamite after the place of its manufacture at the Waltham Factory, has been successfully tested. With the magazine rifle, it reached a marvellous accuracy up to one thousand yards or over half an English mile.

The Secretary of State for India has invited tenders for a three per cent. loan of £5,400,000 at 98, closing on the 8th May. The total sum will be thus distributed—£1,700,000 for the construction of railways in India by Companies, £500,000 for the discharge of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway debentures, and £3,200,000 for the purchase of the South Indian Railway.

The end of the railway strike in Ireland is not yet. Mr. Michael Davitt and Archbishop Walsh attempted to bring about a compromise between the masters and men, but failed. The strike originated at Cork and has spread to all the Southern and Western districts.

The Navoe Vremya is alarmed at the success of British influence in China. As a counterpoise, it advises Russia to divert to herself the Central Asiatic trade with India.

THURSDAY, the 1st of May 1890 dawned on Europe and America with a wide-spread Labor demonstration. It passed off peacefully. There were demonstrations at Vienna, Brussels, Liege and Amsterdam. Great crowds paraded the streets of Paris. The London labourers made a feeble show. The Germans avoided a public manifestation. The French were not content with mere show. In Paris, in the evening a disorderly crowd assembled in the streets and were charged by cavalry. Thirty were wounded and many arrests made. Next day, two thousand strikers at Turcoing and Roubaix attacked their factories and assaulted those who had replaced them there.

A ROYALIST conspiracy has been detected in Paris. The arrangement seems to have been to declare the Comte de Paris King on May 1st. Large quantities of explosives were seized. Many anarchists and malcontents in the army are suspected. Fifteen anarchists were arrested at Lyons with explosives and a secret printing press. A warrant is out for the arrest of the Duc de Luynes for complicity in the conspiracy against the Republic, but he has already given the slip, having crossed the Swiss frontier over to Lausanne. There have been several arrests among royalists as well. M. Constans, Minister of the Interior, is reported to have threatened expulsion from France of five thousand foreigners prominent among the anarchists.

THE Indian Post office has limited the insurance of a single letter or parcel during transit to one thousand rupees.

THE Government of India, in the Home Department, has issued the following important Resolution:—

"Section 2 of Regulation XXXVIII of 1793 prohibits Covenanted Civil Servants from lending money, directly or indirectly, to any proprietor or farmer of land, or dependent taluqdar or under-farmer or rayyet or their sureties, and by Home Department Resolution of 17th March 1882, this prohibition has been extended to Natives of India appointed to an office ordinarily reserved for members of the Covenanted Civil Service under the provisions of 33 Vict., Cap. III, Section 6.

2. Instances have recently been brought to the notice of the Government of India in which uncovenanted gazetted officers of Government have lent large sums of money at various, and sometimes very high, rates of interest to landholders of the province, and even of the district in which they are serving. It appears to the Governor-General in Council very desirable that this practice should be discontinued at once. His Excellency in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that the existing rules on the subject, which apply to Covenanted Civil Servants and Members of the Statutory Civil Service, shall be extended to all uncovenanted officers in the Subordinate Executive and Judicial Services of the Government. Such officers are hereby prohibited from lending money at interest, whether directly or through relatives or other agents, to landholders, with or without security, within the province in which they are employed."

The Resolution is addressed to all Local Governments and Administrations for information and guidance, and to all Departments of the Government of India for information.

WE have received the following telegram from Mymensing:—

"A crowded meeting of the Mohammandans was held this morning (Ap. 27) at the Juma masjid at the instance of Anjamani Islamia. The following resolutions were warmly passed: that this meeting most respectfully enters its strong and emphatic protest against the Bill introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. Bradlaugh; that this meeting records its firm and strong conviction that the time for the introduction of a representative council on elective basis has not come; that this meeting unanimously records its cordial approval to the Bill introduced by Lord Cross."

Our Mahomedan brethren are gradually waking up throughout the country to the prospect before them.

THE British Indian Association held this week its annual meeting. Only 29 members including the office-bearers were present, or a dozen less than the office-bearers and Committee for the present year. On account of the illness of the President Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, the half yearly meeting had not been held, although the Association boasts of a goodly number of Vices, and the business of the year, such as could not be postponed, was done by Raja Doorga Churn Law. The Dr. President could only attend to one matter—that of the Lepers, and he expressed himself very strongly against their isolation. The President for the year is Maharaja Sir Narendra Krishna, and he thus expressed himself on the Doorga Pooja holidays:—

"I regret to observe that the Chamber of Commerce has submitted a representation to the Government, proposing the reduction of the Government Doorga Poojah holidays from 12 to 4 days. Our experienced Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Stuart Bayley, has explained to the Chamber that its request for their curtailment does not meet with the approval of the entire English mercantile community. Much uneasiness prevails in the minds of the Natives for this proposal of the Chamber, as no possible inconvenience can be felt by the merchants, when a part of the Custom House is kept open on the Poojah days for the transaction of business, as ships arriving in the port obtain passes to discharge their cargoes on these days. Natives living at a distance from Calcutta proceed to their houses to associate for a few days with their relatives, with whom they jointly observe the religious rites in connection with the celebration of the Doorga Poojah. Our wise and sympathetic Viceroy, Lord Lansdowne, would not, I am confident, wound their feelings by curtailing the Poojah holidays in accordance with the wishes of a few English merchants. To the honour and good sense of the British merchants in general, I must say that they do not share in the views expressed by a few of their class in the matter. Our just and enlightened Government, I am firmly convinced, never contemplates to interfere even indirectly with the performance of the religious rites of its native subjects."

The Maharaja is a better authority on the subject than the Government Pandit who, for some incomprehensible reason, has gone over to the Chamber of Commerce. The Principal of the Sanskrit College is a doctor of Nyaya, and no theologian at all. His part in the Pooja or other Hindu rite is easy—to pocket the presents made to Brahmans and Pandits. The Maharaja is a hereditary worshipper of the goddess Doorga, and he would be lost in this world as well as in the next, were he restricted to a worship of four days, which Pandit Mohesh Chunder Nyayaratna declares sufficient.

A thriving attorney, true to his profession and practice, wished the Association to take steps for extending the jurisdiction of the High Court to the amalgamated area of Calcutta for municipal purposes. Baboo Koonjo Lal Banerjee for once spoke sense, and in reply said that a greater misfortune could not befall the added area than the imposition of the ruinous machinery, and those who fatten by it, of Original Justice.

THE financial gain to France by the Paris Exhibition is thus calculated by M. Neymarck:—

"The deposits at the Bank of France were 3,000,000*l.* in excess of the normal total. Between May and the close of the Exhibition 600,000 English and American tourists arrived; the Americans had letters of credit and cheques, for which they obtained gold amounting to 14,000,000*l.*, and there were 1,500,000 other foreign visitors. Deposits in private banks rose by a sum of 33,300,000*l.* The railway companies increased their usual income from passengers' traffic by 200,000*l.*

The Seine river steamers gained 63,000*l.* What waggonettes and other wheeled vehicles earned seems incredible. M. Neymarck knows the owner of a waggonette which did 33 double journeys a day, conveying at each journey eight persons at a franc a piece, thus taking about 20*l.* a day."

This is indeed enjoying the holy sight of Lord Jagannath drawn in his tower-car and making a profitable sale of plantains on the occasion. What activity and locomotion are indicated in those figures! what wealth! The most heavenly exhibition in Asia would not—could not—draw like that. We do not care enough for our benefit to move for it. We are doubtful of man's power to help himself. Then, we are too poor to put much money in others' purses. If the gods themselves entered appearance, there might be a concourse of poor famishing pilgrims and sturdy beggars to cause dearth and spread dirt and disease, whose conservancy and other arrangements would swallow up the fees that might be paid by the traders and opulent visitors.

THE French having succeeded, against the opinion of the whole civilised world, in connecting the Mediterranean and the Red Sea by a ship-canal, are now crying for the moon. Notwithstanding their failure in Panama, they are as ready as ever for the wildest projects. M. Georges Rolland, an eminent French engineer, recently read a paper before the Académie des Sciences, in which he insisted on the necessity of constructing a railway across the Sahara.

"M. Rolland says that it is time for France to make up her mind as to the part which she intends taking in the economic conquest of the interior of Africa. In his paper he defines what are the regions of the Western and Central Soudan upon which French commerce could reasonably reckon, his conclusion being that nothing durable or really useful could be effected in the Soudan without the assistance of Algeria, while, in order to take any effective action in Algeria, that colony would need to be connected with the Soudan by means of a railway crossing the Sahara. Dwelling upon the necessity of a Trans-Sahara railway from a strategic, political, and commercial point of view, he asserts that the route from Algeria to the Soudan, although it might be the longest, might be made the most expeditious if proper influence were gained over the Touaregs, who hold in their hands all the trade between the Mediterranean and the Western and Central Soudan. In this view he warmly supports a proposal made by General Philibert, to send a column of 200 men to the Touaregs, with the essentially pacific mission of creating a French post at Timassmin, while a second post should be established at Amguid, which would give a political and commercial command over the whole of Central Sahara. M. Rolland combats the idea of first sending a column to In-Salah, upon the ground that it would give rise to great difficulties, which would solve themselves if the Touaregs were once gained over. The conclusion arrived at by him is that the only practical and speedy method of opening up the Sahara is to construct a light railway of the Decauville type by way of Ouargla and Angaité."

There is not much harm for the Pandits and Haquims to amuse themselves with discussions in speculative engineering. But there is a time for every thing. At this critical moment of French history, the one thing for all Frenchmen who care for their country and its very existence—let glory alone—whether engineers or astronomers or chemists or metaphysicians, poets or politicians, whether men of business or mere men of the world, with or without any occupation, is to assist at the formation of a stable governing machinery and to discover the right men to work it. The example of their despised nation of shopkeepers ought to shame them. If the English be described as a nation of tradesmen, they themselves may be called a nation of tailors and milliners on the one hand and of dandies, male and female, on the other. As such, they must have heard of the precept to cut your coat according to your cloth. First set your house in order before you go out to exploit distant Continents of savage men.

THE world circum-cycli-cised! That is the latest novelty in globe trotting. The difficult operation was last year successfully performed. We now read of two promising aspirants who have been trying their prentice hands on Europe:—

"Two enterprising cyclists, Mr. Walter Goddard, of Leeds, and Mr. James Edmunds, a Buxton gentleman, arrived in London the other day, after having accomplished the remarkable feat of journeying round Europe on bicycles. The two gentlemen left London last summer with the intention of making the tour round Europe on wheels, never leaving their machines except when absolutely necessary, such as crossing the channel, &c. With the exception of such instances, the whole journey was performed on bicycles. All they took with them was an ordinary tourist's knapsack stocked with such few necessaries as they might require during this extended tour. Starting from London last July, they rode their bicycles down to Dover, where they and their machines were conveyed across the Channel to Calais, whence they went on through Abbeville and Amiens to Paris, and thence across France into Switzerland, staying for a short time en route at such places as they considered attractive and interesting. From Switzerland they got into Austria, journeying through Graz, Vienna, and Buda-Pesth, southwards to Temesvar and Kronstadt. Thence they and their machines were conveyed across the South Carpathian Mountains into Roumania, and so on to Bucharest, Giurgiu, and across the Danube to Rustchuk and Varna, thence through Turkey as far as Constantinople, where they took boat to Odessa, where, resuming their bicycles, they proceeded on through the Russian Empire to Moscow and St. Petersburg. They journeyed from the Russian capital to Riga, where they took steamer across the Baltic to Stockholm, going across Sweden and Norway north as far as Bergen, and then southwards, recrossing the Baltic to Dantzic through Prussia to Berlin, Potsdam, and Bremen, and back through Holland into Belgium, staying at such places as Antwerp, Brussels, Bruges, &c., to Ostend, thence to Calais, whence they crossed to Dover for London. The cyclists were everywhere well received, and expressed themselves much gratified with their remarkable tour."

Their detailed experiences ought to be entertaining and suggestive.

WE are afraid the Indian Army is deteriorating in discipline. It is a hard thing to say so and terrible to think of it, but so many ugly incidents, even of the character of outrages many of them, are cropping up in all directions that one is being gradually constrained to a conclusion adverse to the reputation of our defenders. Nothing would give us greater satisfaction than to be proved wrong in our view in this behalf. The matter is worth careful inquiry. We hope the military authorities will, in the interests of the reputation of their department and of the soldiery, do the needful. Happily, the Army is now under the best possible command. A brilliant soldier himself, at once brave and learned in his profession, Sir Frederick Roberts knows better than anybody could tell him how fatal must be a growing tendency to rowdiness in the rank and file to the efficiency of the Force.

The Punjab seems acquiring an evil repute for military outrages on poor natives. The latest case occurred at Lahore. According to the account, on the night of the 7th April a private of the Seaforth Highlanders on sentry duty challenged a native whom he observed near the lines, and receiving no answer fired at him. Luckily, the shot missed and the man fled, but he was caught by another soldier. Other soldiers now came and three natives, employed in the Military Work-Department who had been sleeping in a hut not far off, were attracted to the spot to see what was the matter. That proved their death—at least of one of them. The soldiers attacked them as bad characters. They fled and took refuge in their hut—their home. But it was a frail castle before a siege by British soldiers. They were unearthed and seized and treated so roughly that one of them died of his wounds before morning.

THEY are evidently trying to get up another O'Hara scandal in the Punjab. We read:—

"Among the men of the Murree Depot there seems to be a consensus of opinion that the corporal of the 5th Fusiliers, who is under arrest for the murder of a native, is not the culprit. Some of the party who were on the march up must know who fired the shot, but Thomas Atkins has strange ideas about such matters."

Yes, very strange and utterly discreditable ideas, which must be knocked out of his pate, if he is to be an honest Christian soldier and not a brutal mercenary. But we see plainly what these writers are driving at. They have only to produce a Judge of exemplary candour who will reserve deliberation after judgment.

At the last meeting of the University Senate, the Director of Public Instruction put his foot on the weak point in what we may call the institutional side of our vaunted educational progress. That progress had been mainly collegiate, instead of professoriate. We had multiplied seminaries, but no fresh personal agencies for instruction. Not that the new places of teaching opened had not been provided with teachers. But no professorships of new branches of knowledge had been added to the University, or attached to any of the colleges. And that is true. The lamented Bengali scholar the Rev. Dr. K. M. Banerjee tried his best for several years to have a Chair of Comparative Philology in the Calcutta University. His efforts did not bear fruit, however. Bombay, in this as in many other matters, has been rather more fortunate. The unexpected favour of a foreigner has come to her assistance where the liberality for which her sons are famous has for the nonce been wanting. The considerate benevolence of that Prince of Missionaries and educationists, the late Dr. John Wilson, has endowed for her University at least a modest Philological Lectureship, which has during these years brought to the front many able men to deliver their views who might else have remained unknown in such a connection. The choice has this time fallen on a native gentleman of culture and experience in the superior medical Service of Government. Surgeon Kirtikar, proud of his vernacular—the same in which the Sainted Tukaram lisped in numbers for the numbers came—has chosen for subject the Mahratta Language and Literature. We have reason to anticipate for him an unquestionable success. The Introductory to the course which he lately delivered is an earnest of it. It shows at once capacity and confidence, without undue priggishness. The most important part of it concerns the relation of thought to language and their respective precedence or subsequence. Professor Max Muller when he first came to lecture at the Royal Institution rather adroitly kept himself out of this controversy by declining to assert any order of time or the absolute dependence of one on the other. Since then, however, he has cast off all hesitation. His latest work—Lectures on the Science of Thought—contains a Lecture in which he asserts the identity of Language and Thought. He explicitly declares that Language is the prime and necessary factor antecedent to thought which depended on it and could not and cannot exist without. The Bombay Lecturer took up this vexed question, and joined issue with the great Master. To whichever side of the controversy one may belong, no one can fail to be struck by the manner in which our Indian grapples with the famous German savant. Dr. Kirtikar said:—

"The lecturer next discussed the dictum of Professor Max Muller—'Without speech no reason, without reason no speech.' 'It is curious to observe,' says Max Muller, 'the unwillingness with which many philosophers admit that there is no reason without speech, no speech without reason.' Professor Max Muller says that 'it is curious to observe the attempts that are made to escape this conclusion, all owing to the very influence of the language which owing to the most modern dialects, has produced two words—one for language the other for reason—thus leading the speaker 'to suppose that there is a substantial difference between the two and not a formal difference.' To this Dr. Kirtikar replied that there was a substantial difference between a man possessing language, by which the lecturer understood power of speech, and a man possessing reason; thirdly, a man possessing both; and fourthly, a man possessing neither. The man possessing power of speech, but not reason, was in common parlance, a lunatic, or a man of unsound mind. The man possessing neither was not far removed from a worm or a jellyfish for worldly intercourse, and as such not useful to the present inquiry. It was where man possessed reason and was absolutely wanting in the power of articulate speech that Dr. Kirtikar found an illustration disproving the dictum of Professor Max Muller. What about the deaf-mute? he asked. Could Max Muller say a deaf-mute was void of all reason? Born deaf, he was an utter stranger to sound, which is the common, but not the only, vehicle of all rational thought between man and man. He is, therefore, unable to reproduce what he has never experienced, never had any knowledge of. And what was knowledge, but all experience? It did not arise out of man's inner consciousness. If the growing child, as soon as it began to take impressions from the outside world, was brought within audible distance of the human voice it took impressions: memory helped the hearer to preserve them or reproduce them in articulate speech. An English child in the constant company of an ayah speaking Hindustani only, showed often a predilection for the Hindustani speech. Similarly, a deaf-mute was unable to reproduce any language, for it had heard not the human voice. The psychological condition of the brain of the Iclander who learnt Sanskrit from books alone was exactly the same with reference to the pronunciation of certain Sanskrit letters such as 'sa,' 'la,' as that of a deaf-mute. The Iclander was a deaf-mute so far as the articulate Sanskrit was concerned. Deaf-mutes are known to be able to read in a similar manner written books without being able to read them aloud. The only difference is that the Iclander has the power to speak if he chose, the deaf-mute has not. A female deaf-mute is reported to have applied to Lord Hardwicke in 1754 (Chancery Reports, quoted by Beck) for the purpose of possessing her real estate. He put her questions in writing, and she gave sensible answers in writing. She had reason but no speech. The education of deaf-mutes is known to be a highly successful institution and the glory of our age. It is capable—only through physical expression—of educating the mind of those hapless children, from whom 'knowledge at one entrance is quite shut out.' Nothing struck the lecturer so much as the training of the deaf-mutes and idiots in Earleswood Asylum, in Sussex, fifteen years ago, which showed that, though one may be lost to hearing and thence to speech, one is not lost to reason. Among deaf-mutes, as Taylor says, there is only a 'difficulty in the means of communicating knowledge.' So much for the dictum of Professor Max Muller, 'No reason without speech, no speech without reason.'"

For ourself, we have never been oppressed with any doubt on the point. No one who has seen deaf and dumb persons and marked their ways can doubt, we should think. They are all rational, though without the gift of articulate utterance. Some of those we have come across have considerable capacity for thought. They have no vernacular, never having heard any language. They communicate only by sight and touch, and these communications betray ideas un-reduced to verbal symbols. It is strange how a fact of common experience can be ignored by the wisest, and a plain question mystified by learning.

ADMISSION being free and unrestricted, the Theatres in Beadon-street, Black Town, were crammed to suffocation on Saturday evening. The farce announced might be named "Cross Purposes or How to Take the Name of the Nation in Vain," the object of the Managers being the condemnation of Lord Cross's Reform Bill passed by the House of Lords. Baboo Narendranath Sen, of the Indian Mirror, the Prince of Low Comedy Unconscious, was the leader fit of the actors. But it passes us how on earth was the Rishi's quiet son, who always resented the imputation of being a politician, to say nothing of an agitator—how was Dwijendranath the Good, found among the Philistines! The cry of the bisected meeting was—No taxation without representation. The assembled hosts, however, without declaring a War of Independence, contented themselves with recording the stereotyped Resolutions adopted throughout the country condemning Lord Cross's sober measure and praising up Mr. Bradlaugh's fanciful reform. If the papers of the party are to be believed, the country was never exercised so much as over the Cross Bill. Telegrams to the same effect are being transmitted from all sides, from all possible and impossible places. But those who know that the agitation is only the pulling of the wires—telegraphic—nothing more.

TRULY, as the Englishman recently remarked, the Calcutta Gazette needs editing. Under date the 29th April 1890, the Gazette of the following day allows Sir John Edgar, K.C.L.E., C.S.I., Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, six months' leave from the 10th May or such subsequent date as he may avail himself of it. But Sir John had already left Calcutta before the date of the order. Mr. P. C. Lyon, we see, signs all orders as Officiating Chief Secretary, but his own appointment to the post has not yet been Gazetted. Till such officiating appointment is notified, is any of the orders issued or notified under the signature of Mr. Lyon from the Political, Judicial and Appointment Departments of the Bengal Secretariat, legally binding?

Mr. Colman Macaulay arrived by the last mail from furlough to take up the duties of the officiating Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government. He met Sir John Edgar at Bombay, and arrived at the capital on Thursday. Those who received him at the Howrah railway station saw that he was not in himself, and wondered what could be the matter. He was suffering, though the doctors knew not from what, and ascribed his state of health to the length of the railway journey at the height of the Indian summer. He drove direct to 32, Chowringhee, to reside as a guest at Sir A. Croft's house, where, the next day, at 6 P.M., he had a fit of shivering. Later in the evening, Sir S. Bayley came to see him and dine with Sir Alfred. While Sir Stewart was in the house Mr. Macaulay became worse. Sir Stenart immediately sent his carriage for doctors. Before they arrived, Mr. Macaulay was no more. He had not taken charge of his office. The entire Secretariat is closed to-day to allow the Assistants an opportunity of attending the funeral which comes off this evening at 5-30 at the Roman Catholic Cemetery, Circular Road. By Mr. Macaulay's death the Government loses one of its ablest penmen, and the Irish Catholic Party in Bengal one of its important members. His taste for literature was shown by his making time out of his engrossing duties to contribute to a native periodical—Baboo Kali Prosunno Dey's National Magazine. He was not happy in his domestic life.

THESE being days when the dog-star rages, the Police Commissioner has notified that all dogs, found straying in the streets, both in Calcutta and the suburbs, shall be destroyed. The notification is dated the 18th April and will be in force till the 31st May. We cannot conceive anything more atrocious than this wholesale treatment of our inferiors—this war of extermination. Mr. Lambert himself we do not much blame, he is but the mouthpiece of his society, if he does not actually act under superior bidding. We only lament the heartlessness of a great Christian community. We must warn the Police, however, against carrying out the order in Burra Bazaar—the stronghold of unsophisticated Hindu, and, above all, Jain sentiment.

THE Indian Congress has lost its mother. Mrs. Allan Hume is dead. We beg to offer our cordial condolences to the bereaved husband for this deprivation, so late in life, of his help-meet, who doubtless sympathised with him in his joys and sorrows, and presumably shared his spiritual views and plans for human improvement, even if her health did not permit her to be actively useful to him. It is well for her perhaps that "her long disease" of a life has terminated before her lord. But to him the event, although relieving him of the constant anxiety and trouble of looking after a dear one who could not look after herself, and notwithstanding the cheering assurance of her relief, can only be a blow. The loss of a seasoned wife cannot be replaced. To be condemned to the loneliness of a widower in age is a calamity of the most trying kind—a prospect of frowning positive black without the faintest silver lining—

O dark, dark, unutterably dark,

Total eclipse without all hope of day!

The Congress may, as a consequence of the sad occurrence, come to a windfall of fortune as a legacy by the death of its mother, under the law and custom of the country. The father, freed from domestic distractions—relieved in the due course of Nature from the harassing obligations of cherishing the slowly wasting spectre in the cupboard of his hearth and heart—will have more leisure and more spare energy to devote to the movement of his creation. In fact, he must by a deeper plunge prevent, if possible, his personal grief overtaking him.

WE deeply regret to notice the bereavement of another Congress Chief—our colleague and friend Subramanier of the Hindu. Madras is the chief stronghold of the Congress and the persistent, spirited and well-reasoned advocacy of the Hindu—the leading daily in the native English press in India—and the untiring activity of its Editor have, in a large measure, brought about this result. Mr. Subramanier is at once a social and political reformer. As good as his word, he recently gave his poor widowed daughter in marriage. Strangely enough, he was not excited—evidence of the strength acquired by the reformers. But a greater trial awaited him. Mrs. Subramanier died—we hope under no revulsion of feeling from their brave stand against popular error and antiquated custom. Then came the difficulty—how to dispose of her remains. On a previous occasion—the death of Mrs. Gooty—none of the Hindus would go near the dead, or assist in performing the last rites to the body. Mr. Subramanier has been more lucky. Warned by experience, his friends, headed by Dewan Bahadoor Rughunath Rao, made prompt efforts and prevented any scandal. While sympathising with our colleague's loss, we rejoice at this evidence of advance. Altogether, the earnestness of the Southern reformers and their deserved success ought to embolden us of Bengal.

THE annual Report of the Chemical Examiner to Government is a document of some public interest. According to Dr. Warden, "opium and arsenic, the two most commonly known poisonous drugs, are still the favourite agents for suicidal and homicidal purposes, respectively, while the more easily procurable, and in many instances as deadly, vegetable poisons are comparatively still very little used in spite of the advance of civilization." The reason seems to us that these two are easily procurable and retained without suspicion, in consequence of not only their wide prevalence in particular medicines, but also of their habitual use among the people, specially of the former among all classes, high and low, as a prophylactic against, and panacea for, unnumbered ills that flesh is heir to.

IN connection with the examination of spirit for deleterious adulterations, the Chemical Examiner, in his report for the year 1889 remarks:

"Sixty-three samples were examined, compared with 18 during the previous year. The object of the examination was to ascertain whether or not noxious drugs were added to increase the intoxicating effects of the spirit. The following drugs were especially sought for:—Indian hemp, opium, nux-vomica, datura, aconite, and in some cases tobacco. In every case negative results were obtained. Bearing in mind that some of the drugs supposed to be used are highly toxic, and not usually credited with producing intoxicating effects, and having very distinctive and unpleasant tastes, and also remembering that others are costly, it seems highly probable that the idea regarding the adulteration of country liquor with noxious drugs is based on incorrect deductions made by persons not possessed of any technical knowledge. There is no doubt that drugs are added in some cases to the contents of the fermenting vats, as, for example, nux-vomica seeds in bakur pills, and the incorrect conclusion has been arrived at that the distilled spirit must also contain the same drugs. But this inference, as I pointed out some years ago, is founded on a misconception. The active principles of such drugs as aconite, datura, nux-vomica, Indian hemp are non-volatile, and, though the fermented liquid may be saturated with such poisons, the distillate under ordinary conditions will be harmless."

IN the list of articles tested for purity and quality in the Chemical Examiner's Report or rather the Government Resolution on it, occur—Fort William Arsenal, Medical Store Department, Telegraph Store Department, Commissariat Department and other Departments. There is against each, the number of examinations. We are not, however, given the verdict of the Examiner—how far they are pure or how adulterated. Are we to suppose that the P. W. Department, Bengal and India, is, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion?

CAPTAIN Hearsey is not the only European who cannot control his temper under insolence. Mr. Wall, an assistant master in the local Boys' High School, was fined by Captain G. B. Crawley, Cantonment Magistrate of Allahabad, for admitted assault on the Head Master's khansama. A magistrate is a different thing from a native servant, or Mr. Wall might have lost his temper in Court at the strange upshot of his litigation. He curbed himself and simply cried out—

"But, Sir, complainant was most impertinent, and I could scarcely help raising my hand to him under the sudden provocation. The Magistrate:—You had no business to raise your hand to him. If you were not satisfied with him you should have dismissed him. Mr. Wall:—I could not do so, as he was the servant of the head-master. The Magistrate:—Well, all the more reason that you should not have struck him. Your duty was to have complained to the head-master. I know if any one struck my servants, without first complaining to me, I should feel very much annoyed. On this the defendant left the court."

We believe the complaint would never have been heard of, had not the servant been dismissed by his master the head-master, presumably at Mr. Wall's by no means generous representation.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.

THE ENGLISH CIVIL SERVICE AND THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

A CONTRAST.

IN England there is but one Civil Service. There the administrative agency is not split into something like hostile camps of conquerors and conquered. No invidious distinctions are tolerated where there is no inherent difference. In that land of freemen and a homogenous population, no gulf separates White and Black—Covenanted and Uncovenanted. Like the ethnology of the people, the service of the state is uniform. There is, of course, a necessary distinction between the political part of the service and the ordinary subordinate agency—between the Parliamentary executive and the permanent administrative machinery. There is an inalienable distinction. It arises out of the nature of the thing. There surely must be a difference between the persons for the time constituting the Government responsible to the country and removable under pressure of Parliament, and the fixed subordinates in the various departments who assist and give effect to their Chiefs' decisions, views, and policy. These lesser servants of the public, in their humble sphere, not only form an essential factor, but perform an important part, in the state machinery. By their fixity of tenure they maintain the continuity of administration. Without it, Parliamentary institutions would be an intolerable nuisance. Indeed, Government would be impossible: Order would dissolve into Chaos.

In our country, too, with a different history and under another constitution, there is, as there ought to be, a difference. Here, the whole administration, from top to bottom, cannot be one, any more than in Great Britain. But the distinction is of another kind, and the limits of the difference should be circumscribed. Here, there are offices which, at least for years to come, must be independent of any general rules of qualification—they could not be consigned to the chances of general competition. They must, to begin with, be held by Englishmen. And well for India and Asia that they were so held, for long years to come! But the range of the monopoly need not be extensive. The monopoly maintained under the name of the Covenanted Civil Service is preposterously wide. It retains a large proportion of the Judicial and Revenue patronage—it has annexed the Chief Superintendence of the Jails and the Police. In fine, it embraces within its ample arms offices in all departments and various grades from the political and governing situations—which ought to be a reserve for the Leading Agents of British Power and Authority,—down to the situations of officers of Inland Collectorate, Customs, and Excise. In its giant proportions and greedy grasp at trifles below its dignity, it is at once an administrative mistake and a political blunder. It is, of course, an injustice—not only to the Natives but also to the British public at large—to the hundreds of Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen, as well as East Indians and Eurasian Christians who are thus unfeelingly debarred from a useful and honourable career.

Formerly, this favoured Service was an appanage of the members of the Governing Body of the East India Company—Nepotism was one of their dearly cherished franchises, and the Indian Civil Service was set apart as a preserve for their protégés. That was a natural, not to say necessary, state of things, arising out of history, and with some inherent weakness of principle and more corruption in practice, it was not without its good points. That arrangement was broken through in 1853, and in 1858 the Company itself was swept away by the Mutinies. But the monopoly remained, though its conditions and personnel were changed. The separate existence of the Service, to be recruited by arbitrary examination in England, planned, not so much by specific experience as by amateurs, Pandits and theorists, and the reservation for its members alone of all the fat posts and snug sinecures in this empire, constitute it a monopoly and, of course, a grievance to the public. Far be it from us to harbour schemes for vulgarising the administration and opening the door of office to inferior men, any more than lowering the prestige or weakening the securities of British Rule. But, surely, the Empire may be preserved not only in its integrity but in all its pride and glory, without inflicting a wrong on the whole profession of Government officials. Surely, the dignity as well as efficiency of administration may be maintained without dividing the employés into Brahmans and Sudras.

No doubt, the tendency to caste is unconquerable.

It is the natural disposition of human numbers. Every society, every considerable body of men—is apt to crystallise into castes. But that is no reason for encouraging the thing. Nor is it all expedient to make hard and fast distinctions between servants of the state who have so much in common. The distinction between Covenanted and Uncovenanted are of a severe and adamant character, unknown even to ancient Hindu polity and social organization. The authors of the Hindu caste system at least left it possible for inferior classes to aspire to promotion to the superior ranks. Under the British Indian system of administrative castes, there was no such provision. According to the unalterable decree of the official Manu, once a Sudra always a Sudra. There is no getting out of the rut of the depressed and despised Uncovenanted.

How different the case in England! There is no distinction except from the dignity of the office and the worth of the official. The homogeneity of the Service leaves ample room and verge enough for individual talents and ambitions, and allows of many possibilities. Although below the Parliamentary Service, and, in consequence, more analogous to our Uncovenanted, it enjoys advantages which the Indian Junior Service sighs for in vain. Accordingly, the British Civil Service is a far better career. It is an incentive to exertion and a path of ambition to merit. Its annals have been illustrated by many bright names and not a few remarkable successes.

The English Civil Service may as well be called the Kerani Service. There is no necessary opprobrium in that well-known Indian word, which we owe to our first visitors from Europe round the Cape, any more than in the much-abused title Baboo. Kerani means simply a clerk or "writer." The members of the White Covenanted Civil Service bore the official designation, dropped of late years, of the Company's writers, rendered into Hindustani Company Ka Kerani—briefly simply writers—and their posts were denominated writerships. Hence the long pile on the North of Dalhousie Square and facing it, now the Bengal Secretariat, as their residence, was called Writers' Buildings and known among the people as the Keranis' Barracks. With the spread of British empire in the East and the consequent increment of pretensions and finally with the rise of Paramountcy, the more clerical functions devolved more and more upon an inferior agency usually picked up on the spot, while an enlarged field of offices of great dignity and high emoluments was opened to an ever-increasing number of the favoured sons of the Company. Thus, gradually, the word writer or kerani became an anachronism and a misnomer. The true Keranis now are the non-professional sections of the Uncovenanted Service. And these are the true analogues and counterparts of the English Civil Service. But what a gulf parts the Keranis of England and the Keranis of India in respect of position and prospects and social repute! Much of the degradation of Indian Keranidom, no doubt, lies in the men, but the system is very much to blame too. It constitutes the Service the resource generally of inferior men. Better men are scared away from its blighting precincts. The superior men who, for want of a better opening, enter it, dwindle, for want of encouragement or communion with their betters. In the absence of opportunities for improving or for distinction, these poor fellows decline on a lower plane, until they, in a few years, rust and decay, or absolutely go to the bad.

RESULT OF THE COMMONS' CONDEMNATION OF INDIAN EXCISE.

MR. CAINE, M.P., the apostle of temperance, may as well rest on his laurels. Having got the House of Commons to pass a practical censure on the Government of India's excise policy, he might well afford to pass over in silence the carping criticisms of well-known apologists of that Government. The Government itself scarcely denies the charge that there have been errors and irregularities in its excise administration. It only pleads the extreme difficulty and complexity of the subject, and it promises reform. This alone is sufficient vindication of the efforts made by Mr. Caine and his friends. That the Government in replying to Mr. Caine's charges has been able to throw discredit upon some of his facts and figures, is a small matter. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times has, indeed, made capital of this, and this has proved too much for Mr. Caine's patience. Mr. Caine has dashed off a long letter replying to the Times' correspondent's strictures.

Probably it were as well now that the controversy should cease, or at any rate be free from bitterness. The Government has promised reform, and already some action has been taken to give effect to the promise. It was in Bengal, far more than in other provinces, that the evils of excise administration reached their highest point. The outstill system here attained its greatest expansion, and although the mischief produced by it was patent to the public, the Local Government shut its eyes to its evils. Now, however, that the Government has been brought to see those evils, and Sir Steuart Bayley has from the outset of his administration shown himself earnestly determined to remedy them, our best course is to cease quarrelling, and to wait and watch the progress of the reform. Our contemporary of the Statesman rightly thinks that the present is a fitting occasion for our public Associations to thankfully recognise the great public service rendered by the present Government of Bengal by ordering the gradual abolition of outstills from populous districts. We quite agree with our contemporary. Sir Steuart Bayley is justly entitled to the thanks of the country for his attitude towards the excise question. The reform will not have been fully effected without a considerable sacrifice of the public revenue, and it requires no small moral strength in a Government always pressed for funds to undertake a reform in the face of such a sacrifice. In fact, were it not for Sir Steuart's personal determination in the matter, the reform would have little chance of being taken in hand, and even now we are not altogether without misgivings as to the extent of progress it may make in the long run. The resolution of the House of Commons has no doubt come in good time, and it will strengthen the hands of officials sincerely earnest in carrying out the reform.

But we should not expect too much even from a vote of the House of Commons. The Government out here is not a Parliamentary Government, and it carries on its work according to its own lights. Indeed, anybody who read the despatch of the Secretary of State in which the vote of censure was communicated to the Government of India, could not have failed to be struck by the almost contemptuous tone in which that vote was spoken of by that supreme executive authority. Nor does the Government of India in its elaborate reply speak of it with more reverence. The Government is a despotism, using the term in no evil sense, and the details of administration will scarcely be affected by a debate in Parliament. At any rate, it will always have the right of the last word, and it can always make that last word tell. For instance, in its reply several of Mr. Caine's statements have been contradicted, and on questions of facts, the Government must always have an authoritative position. Mr. Caine himself is compelled to admit the inaccuracy of some of his information. This was inevitable in the very circumstances of his position, and need not cause him any uneasiness. The Government can easily turn the tables upon its opponents in any statistical contest. The statistics themselves are often misleading, being compiled upon no uniform system in the different provinces. Mr. Caine has therefore done well in frankly admitting, after the explanations given in the Government despatch, that his information had in some instances been wrong. But these are minor points. Let it be sufficient that the Government has at last admitted that its excise administration has not been all that it should be. It has taken, indeed, a very long time in seeing the error of its ways, and Mr. Caine is welcome to his triumphant reflections that it is the vote of the House of Commons that has awakened its conscience. Mr. Caine writes: "The 'Reply' [of the Government of India] shows conclusively that the Government is at last roused to a sense of its duty, and it furnishes abundant evidence, in the abolition of the out-still system in Bengal, the taxing of the strong native beers, the admission for the first time of the principle of local option and in many other ways, that the censure of the House of Commons is almost the only means of awakening the conscience of the Indian Government." Mr. Caine has worked too hard not to be entitled to these complacent feelings, but he cannot be unaware of the fact that, if it is a conscience so hard to awaken, it may go to sleep again after making some signs of waking up. The Government has it in its power to defeat the result of the debate in many ways. In reforms involving financial sacrifice, success practically lies in the hands of quite subordinate authorities. Even the most earnest orders of the Government may be marred in the execution. Let us therefore carry the Government with us, now that the Government itself has shown a commendable desire to set its house in better order. Let our policy now be to help the Government in its efforts and to wait and watch their results.

UNCOQUIDNESS AND GIDDINESS: OR THE APOSTLE OF ABSTINENCE.

MR. THOMAS EVANS, the Evangelist of the Gospel of Jesus and of Teetotalism, the ally of Mr. Caine, M.P., is—in the estimation of himself and, let us hope, of many a poor private who had sold his soul to drink and the Devil before his redemption—a hero. But, unfortunately for him, he is not the only hero. He lost sight of this little fact and of another, namely, that private men are not so easy to misrepresent and run down as States and Governments. And so he has come to grief. He has had the rashness to tackle the redoubtable Atkins of Allahabad. Of course, he has made himself a laughing stock as the captor of a Tartar.

Flushed with success, Mr. Thomas Evans is not only quarrelling with all sorts of people, but also falling out with his friends, associates and supporters. A man embarked, as the mission of life, in a war against the entire trade of publicans and a great publican Government, has need to conciliate all other parties and interests in order to husband and concentrate all his resources on the one objective. His heart and soul are fixed on the great war for which he lives; he cannot afford to futter away his forces on desultory skirmishes from time to time with various minor enemies. Not so the heroic Evans. He does not care to multiply foes. He represents the Church militant rather than the Gospel of the meek son of Mary. Like a mettlesome steed well used to strife, he puffs with swelling nostrils from afar the breath of war and dance with delight at the prospect. Before he had wriggled himself out of his conflict with the lawyers, he was in for another. He chose the Press as a convenient object for sitting upon. He anatomised the Morning Post for—what enormity, does the reader fancy?—why, for opening its columns to drink advertisements. This sinfulness of his neighbours is too much for the goody-goody Evans to bear. His pure soul was not only agitated by the circulars of the vendors of spirits and wines, but also by the trade announcements of the business in malt liquor. He would crush the infant industry in that article in India. His ire is specially directed at the very honourable enterprise of the Murree Brewing Company. He had denounced the Morning Post for giving publicity and encouragement to that horrible business. This of course drew the Murree Company into the field, and between the Printing office and the Brewery, the Saint has been well dished. Indeed, the coup de grace has been applied by Mr. H. J. Whympier, of the Brewery. In a well-written temperate but incisive letter, he probes the enemy to the quick. The parts he reveals are indeed of the most stubborn calibre. He repays scorn with scorn, and carrying the war into the very heart of the enemy's camp, leaves him hors de combat.

After stating the cause of action, Mr. Whympier plunges in medias res. He says that at this moment the Murree Brewery is probably the largest subscriber to the Army Temperance Association, and that in its own interest, because brewing distinctly gains by temperance as opposed to intemperance. At the same time he freely confesses that the Company does not, naturally enough, believe in total abstinence being good for all.

Then the formidable man introduces his hand into his pocket as it were and produces a letter received last year from the Army Temperance Association, to wit:—

"Simla, 24th September, 1888.

H. J. Whympier, Esq., Murree Brewery Company, Gora Gully.

Dear Sir,—I have the pleasure to send you a copy of the Simla Herald, a paper started here for the purpose of assisting the funds of this Association, and to solicit the favour of your very kindly supplementing your liberal donation of Rs. 500 by giving us a permanent advertisement of your Company's ales, &c., for the Simla Herald. The rate will be for a whole page, any position you like, Rs. 50 per mensem. For half-page Rs. 35 per mensem. I send you a specimen copy of the paper, which circulates largely in the hill stations surrounding Simla where troops are kept, such as Kasauli, Subathu, Solon, Jutogh, Dugshai, and also in Umballa, besides a liberal local circulation.

The Simla Herald is the mainstay of our Press, for which I appeal to your generosity in the interests of the Association.

Yours Truly,

ATTLEEN WALKER,

Offg. Hon'y. Treasurer, A. T. Association."

That takes one's breath away. Is it possible that the saints should sneak to the sinners, ready to sell their souls for a mess of pottage? The sinners are always more generous and the Brewery gave the Association a full page advertisement, which has appeared in the latter's organ regularly since November last. The saints, however they may affect to damn the publicans and sinners, have undoubtedly a particular affection—an intense crave—for their money. For one favour only leads to another solicitation. In less than a quarter after that grant of the foregoing advertisement, another appeal was made marked "Private and Confidential—without prejudice," which on that account is not published, but the purport whereof is briefly stated to be to explain that the temperance organization was on its last legs for want of funds, and praying the dreadful Brewers to come to the rescue with an advance payment for their advertisement.

Mr. Evans was not the man to sit quietly under such a disaster. But the ground had slipped from under his feet, and he could only feebly mutter the following excuse:—

"Sir,—I am sorry to find from your remarks on my last note that the Post has pulled down its temperance flag, and that it now seeks the patronage of publicans. With such money expect no blessing, for it is stained with the blood of those who have fallen victims to the demon drink. It may be as well that I should tell you in reply to your tu quoque argument that it is not applicable to me. I would not from principle knowingly accept money acquired by the sale of an article which has killed more than famine, pestilence, and war. And I may add that I refused to minister to a large church in England while liquor sellers were allowed membership. I am happy to be able to say that few if any churches at home now recognise the fellowship of those who traffic in alcoholic poison.—Thomas Evans."

There is no absence of tall talk in that epistle. This holy man is a Bully Dawson who takes a drubbing with all the airs of enjoyment. He never retires, but only makes a strategic movement. But his assurance will not alter facts. Since Sydney Smith routed his "nest of consecrated cobblers," there has scarcely been such an exposure. Nor are we permitted to pity. The vain, blustering, canting priest has brought it all himself.

MAHOMEDAN EDUCATION IN BENGAL.

AN OFFICIAL REPORT.

The following table compares the attendance and expenditure of all Medressas under Government management during the last two years. The Calcutta Medressa, the Nawab of Moorshedabad's Medressa, and the Cox's Bazar Medressa are maintained from provincial revenue, and the rest from the Mohsin Fund:—

Calcutta Medressa.—The number of students on the 31st March last was 1,170. Of these, 25 were in the College Department, 408 in the Arabic Department, 437 in the Anglo-Persian Department, and 300 in the Colinga Branch School.

The total expenditure was Rs. 48,867 against Rs. 48,373 in the previous year. The amount of fees and fines was Rs. 8,409, against Rs. 10,276. The falling off is partly due to the fact that in 1888 the fees for April, May and June were collected in March, and included with the fees for that month. Twenty students were sent up for F. A. examination, of whom one passed in the second and 5 in the third division. 17 candidates went up for the Entrance examination, of whom 6 passed, 2 in each of the 3 divisions.

The number of resident students was 605. The new boarding house sanctioned by Government Resolution dated the 31st July 1888 contains 12 students.

The number of pupils in the Dacca Medressa rose from 336 to 424—238 in the Arabic and 186 in the Anglo-Persian Department. The receipts from fees and fines were Rs. 1,222. The number of boarders was 33, against 36 in the previous year. The number of students in the Chittagong Medressa was 401 against 356 in the previous year. A sum of Rs. 1,255 was realised from fees and fines. Out of 291 students who were examined locally, 124 passed the annual examination. In the Hooghly Medressa the number of students rose to 60. The income from fees was Rs. 208. In the Cox's Bazar Medressa the receipts were Rs. 40 from fees, Rs. 67 from municipal funds and Rs. 18 from subscriptions. There were 28 pupils on the rolls. In the Nawab of Moorshedabad's Medressa a gymnastic master has been appointed and a debating club started. The number of boarders was 16, as in the previous year.

The Sitapore Medressa in Burdwan received last year Rs. 2,172 from the Mohsin Fund. It had 60 pupils on the rolls. Moulvie Abdul Hai examined them and reported favorably on their progress, especially in arithmetic. The Jorghat Middle English School received Rs. 480 from the Mohsin Fund. The roll number was 55. The roll number of the Mir Ahya Medressa went down from 147 to 108 owing to the promotion of 50 boys to the Government Medressa and the opening of a new Medressa, called the Anglo-Arabic Medressa by Moulvie Abdool Udud, lately a teacher in the Government Medressa, with a roll number of 218. The Sasseram Medressa had 96 pupils on its rolls, against 105 in the previous year. The total expenditure was Rs. 6,650 against Rs. 7,000. There are two Medressas in the Gya District. One at Gya, called Medressa Islamiya, with 111, and another at Aurungabad with 22 pupils.

The order to notice especially the number of institutions wholly or mainly intended for Mahomedans, with the number of their pupils, reached too late for the purpose of the present report, but it will be fully carried out in subsequent years. Meanwhile an attempt has been made in this section to give all the information on this point that was available.

GOVERNMENT AID TO HORSE-BREEDING IN ITALY.

The following is extracted from a report on Government Aid to Horse-Breeding in Italy, which has recently been issued from the office of the Board of Agriculture :—

The May number of "Annali di Agricoltura," the valuable journal published under the auspices of the Italian Minister of Agriculture is entirely devoted to the provisions made by the Government of Italy to improve the breed of horses in that country. From this it is seen that the encouragement given, both in direct and indirect forms is very great. Among the direct forms are the establishment of stations for stallions, Stazioni di monta, in all parts of the country, the cost of whose construction and maintenance is borne by the district commune. There are also seven centres, Depositi, or head-quarters, from which stallions are sent from time to time to the stations. Three-fourths of the cost of building and maintaining these falls upon the province in which they are located, in proportion to the number of stations and the number of stallions within them, the other fourth is charged to the district.

The Government provides stallions which are selected and purchased by committees appointed by a council, consiglio ippico, consisting of the Director-General of Cavalry, the Commandant of the Royal Horse Corps, delegates nominated by the National Veterinary School, and, besides, others, seven members chosen by the Minister of Agriculture, of whom four must be owners of studs.

Everything connected with horse-breeding is regulated by this Council, which is consulted by the Ministers of Agriculture and War upon these questions.

In pursuance of a law passed in 1887, to take effect upon the 1st January 1889, a Royal decree was published in June 1888, prohibiting the use of stallions for service by private individuals unless they have been duly certified as sound and suitable in all respects, by a Commission, Commissione ippica, appointed for each province in the Kingdom. These Commissions consist of a member nominated by the Minister of Agriculture, who shall be the president; a Veterinarian, appointed also by the Minister; a breeder of horses, nominated by the Prefect, Projetto, of the province. Each Commissioner may charge travelling expenses first class by railway, and 3/4d. per mile by road and 8s. for each day occupied in examining stallions. In the examination season (1889) 870 horses were examined by the various Commissioners in the regions of Piedmont, Lombardy, Venice, Liguria, Emilia, Marches of Umbria, Tuscany, Lazio, South Adriatic, South Mediterranean, Sicillia, and Sardinia. Of these 818 were certified as fit for service. These stallions submitted for inspection belonged to 620 owners.

In addition to the stallion stations there are five establishments for purchasing and bringing up colts brought in the neighbourhood and for collecting horses for army purposes. These are termed Depositi di allevamenti. They are at Persano, Palmanova, Grosseto, Portovecchio, Scordia and Bonorva. From 1883 to the end of 1888, 41,021 colts had been purchased and brought to these establishments. Of these 31,961 were brought in Piedmont, Lombardy, Venice, Emilia, Umbria, Lazio, Sardinia, Sicily and other parts of the Kingdom; 2,407 horses fit for service were also purchased for army service by means of these allevamenti, besides 22 French mules. The average price for the colts was £25; that for the horses £37 and £33 per head for mules. No less than 9,895 colts were presented for purchase at the allevamenti, of which 5,800 were refused for various causes, unsoundness, exorbitant price and excess of age; 1,705 were under the standard of height. During 1888 the number of horses sent to the army from the allevamenti was 3,989.

The directors of these depositi for rearing and collecting horses furnish reports to the Government as to the progress and work of each establishment. In most of these there are statements shewing that much improvement has been effected in the horses of the respective districts by the influence of the stallion stations and the examination of the stallions belonging to private individuals. Thus, concerning the deposito of Pisa, the director says that "in the province of Pisa, there is a sensible advance in breeding year by year as well in point of numbers as in stamp and type."

Colonel Raunizzi remarks of the deposito at Grosseto that the animals are "better made, more strong, and vigorous." Colonel Gerini, in charge at Persano, speaks of the improvement in the horses in some of the provinces and suggests that the number of Government stallions should be increased, as being so much more satisfactory than those belonging to private individuals.

The report from Sardinia is, however, not quite so satisfactory. Colonel Sosso observes that the number of horses rejected was large, chiefly owing to deficiency in height, caused, he is inclined to think, by the exceptionally inclement winter.

In the season of 1888 there were 209 stallion stations, stazioni di monta, as against 201 in 1887.

During the season of 1887 there were 360 stallions on service at the 201 stations, to which 13,006 mares were brought, an average of 36.23 mares per stallion. Of these 6,910 proved in foal, but from abortion, 965; death, 211; sale, 242; the actual produce was only 5,495; or 2,752 colts and 2,740 fillies.

225 mares were not allowed to be covered in 1888 for various reasons. The average fee paid for the 12,255 mares covered in 1888 was £1.7s. The amount ranged from £6.5s. paid per head for 31 mares put to an American trotter, Amber, to £4. for 41 mares put to an English thoroughbred, Audred, to 10,578 mares put to various sires at 10s. per head. The fee for no less than 307 stallions was only 10s. The total amount received for fees for the 1888 season was £7,000.

Among the stallions in the season of 1888 were 74 English thoroughbreds, 94 half-breds born in England, 5 common bred horses born in England, and two cart stallions, making altogether 170 horses born in England, out of the 360 stallions at the stations in 1888.

The report of the Commissioners appointed to buy horses in 1888 and 1889 in England is interesting. The Commissioners were Professors J. Baldessare, Captain Masino, and Signor Ciuc, a veterinary surgeon. They visited 26 studs in Norfolk, 6 in Suffolk, 12 in Yorkshire, 12 in other counties. They examined 238 stallions, of which 198 were inscribed in the Hackney Stud Book and 40 in the General Stud Book.

Lamentations are made by the Commissioners over the decadence of the breeding of half-breed horses in England, as evidenced by many facts and especially by the willingness of the owners of the hackney stallions to take much lower prices than in the previous year for the same animals. Thus the owner of one horse is said to have refused to take "one penny less" than £1,000, for him in 1887, and accepted £400, in 1888; while the possessor of another sold him for £500, though in 1887 he declared he would not sell him at any price whatever. In spite of a most suitable climate, and the renowned skill of the English breeders, and all the aids given to encourage horse-breeding by societies and by the Royal Commission in placing the services of the best stallion at the disposal of breeders at a very low rate, the breeding of horses, according to the opinion of the Italian Commissioners, is not by any means advancing.

To encourage horse-racing a sum of £1,700 was given by the Government for flat racing, and £760 for trotting races in 1888. In the case of the flat races this was divided among 17 race societies, societta di corse al galoppo to whose funds the Jockey Club and the municipalities in the provinces also largely contributed. For flat races in 1888 the sum from all sources amounted to 21,340l.

Trotting races are also held under the auspices of societies, societa di corse al trotto. To these the contributions from all quarters equalled 3,800l.

Prizes were given at the Agricultural Exhibition of Aquila for stallions, mares, colts, fillies and groups of saddle and light draught horses, also for heavy draught stallions, mares, colts, and fillies. These consisted of 11 gold, 15 silver, and 5 bronze medals, and 265l. in money. Towards these prizes the Government contributed a proportion. Premiums were also awarded to the private owners of the best stallions. The amount spent by the Government in 1888 upon exhibitions and premiums was 1,498l.

The expense to the Government of the seven centres, Depositi and 209 stallion stations for the year 1888, that is for wages, forage, veterinary attendance, saddlery, harness, shoeing, insurance, including the 3,875l. for race premiums, prizes at exhibitions, and premiums for stallions, was 46,890l. Adding the amount spent in purchasing 97 stallions, 18,756l., the total sum spent is equal to 65,640l. It will be remembered that the construction and maintenance of the buildings fall upon the provinces and communes.

AN EXPLANATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF Reis & Rayyet.

DEAR SIR,—In a late issue of your paper, I have noticed with surprise and regret, mis-statement and insinuation in connection with the purchase made by me of certain furniture from Mr. Wace Collector and Magistrate of Bhagalpur now on furlough.

You have stated that the furniture have been disposed of "to the best advantage to his good and obliging friend Rajah Harballabh Narain Singh at cost price."

I regret that you have been led to make this observation on incorrect information; and I therefore in the interest of justice to all parties hasten to correct it. I have purchased the articles not on cost price but on a fair and reasonable price, the list of the same along with other articles with prices fixed on them having been duly circulated among the people of the place. I request you therefore to rectify the mistake you have been led to fall into.

Yours Faithfully,

HARBALLABH NARAYAN SINHA,
Maharajah, Sonbursa.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

HORACE.

BOOK II., ODE 16.

WHEN the pale moon is wrapt in cloud,
And blinding mists the stars enshroud,
When on the dark Ægean shore
The bursting surges flash and roar,
The mariner with toil opprest
Sighs for his home, and prays for rest.
So pray the warrior sons of Thrace,
So pray the quivered Mede's barbaric race :
Grosphus, not gold, nor gems can buy
That peace which in brave souls finds sanctuary :
Nor Consuls' pomp, nor treasured store,
Can one brief moment's rest impart,
Or chase the cares that hover o'er
The fretted roof, the wearied heart.

Happy is he whose modest means afford

Enough—no more : upon his board
Th' ancestral salt-vase shines with lustre clear,
Emblem of olden faith, and hospitable cheer :
Nor greed, nor doubt, nor envy's curses deep
Disturb his innocent sleep.

- * Why cast on doubtful issues life's short years ?
- * Why hope that foreign suns can dry our tears ?
 'The exile from his country flies,
 Not from himself, or from his memories.

Care climbs the trireme's brazen sides ;
Care with the serried squadron rides ;
Outstrips the cloud-compelling wind,
And leaves the panting stag behind :
But the brave spirit, self-possessed,
Tempers misfortune with a jest,
With joy the allotted gift receives,
The gift denied, to others frankly leaves.

A chequered life the gods bestow ;
Snatched by swift fate Achilles died :
Time-worn Tithonus, wasting slow,
Long wept a death denied :
A random hour may toss to me
Some gifts, my friend, refused to thee.

Holloway's Ointment.—Sores, Wounds, Ulcerations, and other diseases affecting the skin, are capable of speedy amendment by this cooling and healing ointment, which has called forth the loudest praise from persons who had suffered for years from bad legs, bad breasts, piles, abscesses, and chronic ulcers, after every hope of cure had long passed away. None but those who have experienced the soothing effect of this Ointment can form an idea of the comfort it bestows by restraining inflammation and allaying pain. Whenever Holloway's Ointment has been once used it has established its own worth, and has again been eagerly sought for as the easiest and safest remedy for all such complaints. In neuralgia, rheumatism and gout, the same application, properly used, gives wonderful relief.

A hundred flocks thy pastures roam,
Large herds, deep-uddered, low around thy home
At the red close of day :
The steed with joyous neigh
Welcomes thy footstep : robes that shine
Twice dipt in Afric dyes are thine.
To me kind Fate with bounteous hand
Grants other boon ; a spot of land,
A faint flame of poetic fire,
A breath from the Æolian lyre,
An honest aim, a spirit proud
That loves the truth, and scorns the crowd.

MY BOY.

There is even a happiness
Which makes the heart afraid.

HOOD.

ONE more new claimant for Human fraternity,
Swelling the flood that sweeps
On to eternity.
I who have filled the cup,
Tremble to think of it ;
For be it what it may,
I must yet drink of it.

Room for him into the Ranks of humanity ;
Give him a place in your Kingdom of vanity ;
Welcome the stranger with Kindly affection,
Hopefully, trustfully,
Not with dejection.

See, in his waywardness,
How his fist doubles ;
Thus pugilistical
During life's troubles.
Strange that the Neophyte
Enters existence
In such an attitude,
Feigning resistance.

Could he but have a glimpse
Into futurity,
Well might he fight against Further maturity ;
Yet it does seem to me
As if his purity
Were against sinfulness
Ample security.

Incomprehensible,
 Budding immortal,
 Thrust all amazedly
 Under life's portal ;
 Born to a destiny
 Clouded in mystery,
 Wisdom itself cannot Guess at its history,
 •
 Something too much of this Timon-like croaking ;
 See his face wrinkle now,
 Laughter-provoking ;
 Now he cries lustily—
 Bravo, my hearty one !
 Lungs like an orator
 Cheering his party on.

Look how his merry eyes
 • Turn to me pleadingly !
 Can we help loving him—
 Loving exceedingly ?
 Partly with hopefulness,
 Partly with fears—
 Mine, as I look at him,
 Moistened with tears.

Now then to find a name :
 Where shall we search for it ?
 Turn to his ancestry,
 Or to the church for it ?
 Shall we endow him with Title heroic,
 After some warrior,
 Poet, or stoic ?

One aunt says he will Soon "lisp in numbers,"
 Turning his thoughts to rhyme,
 E'en in his slumbers ;
 Watts rhymed in babyhood—
 • No blemish spots his fame—
 Christen him even so ;
 Young Mr. Watts, his name !

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

It has been officially notified that the Birthday of Her Majesty the Queen, Empress of India, will be kept in India on Saturday the 24th May—the very day Her Majesty was born. There will be the usual State dinner, after which His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General will hold a Levée at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, at 9-45 P.M. But the State ball comes off later—on the 29th. There is no indication that the new Lord Mayor of Calcutta will gratify the town on the birthday as heretofore with his show of a Garden Party. Perhaps he has not been able yet to make his arrangements.

THERE was a Garden Party at Belvedere on Thursday. Sir Stuart there took leave of Calcutta society and starts for the hills on Tuesday next. But he does not go direct to Darjeeling. He spends a day or two at Cooch Behar under the hospitable roof of the Maharaja.

MR. MACAULAY was buried last Saturday, the Lieutenant-Governor and the Director of Public Instruction acting the chief mourners. The former thus notices the death in the Gazette in black :—

"The 5th May 1890.—It is with deep regret that the Lieutenant-Governor has to announce the death, on the 2nd May, of Mr. C. P. L. Macaulay, C.I.E., who had just returned from England to take up the post of Officiating Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

By his death at the early age of 40 the Government have lost an Officer of distinguished merit and ability, and one who, from an early stage of his career, had given proofs of high administrative capacity.

Mr. Macaulay had been associated for many years with the administration of Bengal, and the Lieutenant-Governor desires to place on record his high sense of Mr. Macaulay's services, and his keen regret at his untimely death."

THE Bengal Government has been prompt in making its selection and a proper one of the officiating Chief Secretary. Mr. C. C. Stevens, Commissioner, Patna Division, will act for Sir John Edgar, doing duty from the 13th, Tuesday next. In the meantime, the Officiating Under-Secretary P. C. Lyon remains in charge of the Judicial Political and Appointment Departments.

THE Government of India, for itself and as representing the Cashmere Government, has agreed to a telegraphic line from Suchetgarh to Jammu, preliminary to a railway enmeshment of the Unhappy Valley.

THE shortest period on record in Literature for journey round the world is 40 minutes. In his Dream, Shakespeare could not make Puck "put a gridle round about the earth" in less than that time. But a French savant has considerably shortened the distance. He calculates that a man walking day and night without resting would take 428 days to make the complete round of the earth ; an express train would do it in 40 days ; sound at a medium temperature in 32½ hours ; a common ball 21¼ hours ; light a little over one tenth of a second ; and electricity passing over a copper wire a little under one-tenth of a second.

It is announced through the Pioneer that "the Legislative Council is not likely to commence sitting at Simla for another month to come ; and when it does open, the Session will probably be a quiet and unostentatious one."

THE Chief of Palitana has offered Rs. 2,000 for a portrait of the Duke of Connaught.

NANA NARAYAN BHOR, the blind Mahratta, has obtained permission to practise as a pleader in the Poona Courts. His advocacy must be costly, and he will be the wonder of the age, if he succeed in the profession he has chosen. He has combatted many difficulties ; there are yet many more to surmount, not the least of them the jealousy of his brother pleaders.

THE Thakore Saheb of Gondal returns from England earlier than he had arranged for. He has grown acclimatised to that climate, but it does not seem to agree with the Rani.

A JAIN from Cutch arrived at Bombay in 1885. He proposed the construction of a Jain temple, and to prove his ardour and sincerity offered Rs. 1,500 as the basis of a subscription. The collection gradually swelled to Rs. 8,000, and was put in a bank. The astute Cutchee who had by this time earned the confidence of his community, proposed a more lucrative investment of the sum and himself offered a higher interest. There was no suspicion and the Rs. 8,000 was transferred to him. The Jain having now gained his object, made himself scarce. A warrant was issued for his arrest. He has surrendered himself and is in custody.

A FUND is being raised in Hyderabad for relief of distress in Mecca and its neighbourhood. The Nizam himself heads it with Rs. 25,000 from his privy purse.

THE head—Bal Kishen Das—of one of the leading banking firms in Hyderabad has been convicted, by the Nizam's High Court, of dishonestly using a forged document, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment and a fine of a lac of Rupees.

THE local Government has permitted the Port Commissioners to expend Rs. 12,417-10-3 for a Jetty at Dabee Roy's Ghat.

MR. H. M. Kisch, Postmaster-General, Bengal, acts as Director-General of the Post Office in India, during Mr. Fanshawe's absence on furlough.

WE take the following report from an English paper of April 18 :—

"The ninth German Congress on International Medicine was opened in Vienna on April 15 with an address by Professor Nothnagel, and speeches by Baron Gautsch, Minister of Public Instruction, and the Burgomaster. About 500 physicians and others, including the first authorities in Austria and Germany, are attending the Congress. On April 16 Dr. Unna, of Hamburg, read a paper on the Physiology of the Skin. From numerous experiments he had found that by covering the skin with fatty substances the perspiration was reduced, and the temperature of the body consequently raised, while the application of gelatine had just the opposite effect. Professor Senator corroborated these statements, and added that the covering of the skin with gelatine was a good anti-pyretic. Professor Mosler, of Greifswald, followed with a paper on Pemphigus, a malignant vesicular eruption of the skin. In his bacteriological examinations of the products of this disease he had failed to discover micro-organisms, and he inclined to the belief that the disease belonged to the order of nervous disorders, as he found that it was always accompanied by pathological derangements of the spinal cord. During the discussion which ensued, Professor Kaposi pointed to the great mortality prevailing among patients suffering from this disease. Of 200 cases which had come under his observation 90 per cent. proved fatal. Professor Weber, of Halle, stated that he successfully treated a case of pemphigus with warm baths containing permanganate of potash."

THE new German Chancellor, with leave of the President, on opening of the proceedings of the Prussian Diet on April 15, after the Easter Vacation, addressed the following speech :—

"I have to-day for the first time the honour to appear before this exalted House. In asking leave to address the House before the Orders of the Day, I have not been animated by any intention of developing to you a programme in the name of the Government. Such procedure would appear to me questionable in itself, and, on general grounds, it would be for me personally, at the moment, impossible. Hitherto a stranger to political affairs, I am introduced to a sphere of activity, to obtain even a general survey of which has not up to the present moment been possible for me, but I considered it my duty, and I had a desire to appear here to take the first step towards the establishment of personal relations between you, gentlemen, and myself. You will understand that, in view of my great predecessor, I must have a keen desire to enter into personal relations with you, at least in so far as such personal relations promote the real despatch of business. I could not but feel like a Minister who commences his official activity with a serious deficit if I only took my own personality into account at this juncture; but if, nevertheless, I have entered upon my new office with good courage, it is because of the consciousness that other considerations make it possible for me, if not in such measure as my great predecessor, yet in a humbler degree, to conduct public business for the well-being of my country. (Applause.) I am convinced that the edifice which arose under the distinguished co-operation of Prince Bismarck, by the force of his genius, his iron will, his profound love of his country—that this edifice is firmly enough built and established to continue, now that the support of his hand is withdrawn, to resist wind and weather. (Loud applause.) I consider it an extremely gracious dispensation of Providence, that at the moment when the departure of Prince Bismarck from public life came, Providence should have caused the personality of our youthful exalted Monarch to stand forth so clearly in its significance for our own and other lands, and that this personality is fitted to fill the void and to step before the breach. I have, therefore, an irrefragable belief in the future of Prussia. I believe that the continuance of the Prussian State, and of the German Empire, which rests on its shoulders, will long remain a necessary event in the world's history; and I believe that this country, and this empire, have still before them a future full of hope. (Loud applause.) You will have read his Majesty's words that the course steered remains the old one, and the circumstances that my colleagues continue in their offices undisturbed will demonstrate to you that the Government has not any intention to inaugurate a new era. (Applause on the Right.) But it is involved in the nature of the case and in human nature, that against a force like that of Prince Bismarck's other forces could hardly find place, that, in the face of his resolute and self-reliant ways of regarding and conducting affairs, many another tendency had to fall into the background, many an idea, many a desire, even if justifiable, could not be fulfilled. (Hear, hear, on the Left.) The first consequence of a personal change, with reference to the Government itself, will be this, that the particular Ministerial Departments will gain larger scope and greater prominence than hitherto. (Applause on the Left.) It will, then, be inevitable that within the Prussian Ministry the old collegiate constitution of the Ministry shall obtain more recognition than was possible under that mighty President of the Ministry. (Applause.) Without possessing any formal authorisation, I believe I am warranted in declaring, in agreement with my colleagues, that the Government will everywhere be ready to receive such arrears of desires and ideas, to subject them to fresh examination, and, so far as the Government becomes convinced of their practicability, to fulfil them. (Applause.) We shall accept what is good from wherever and through whomsoever it may come—(loud applause)—and we will execute it when its execution, according to our conviction, is compatible with the good of the State. (Applause.) If the Government is ready to meet the House and the desires of the country in this fashion I may venture to express the hope that I also may reckon upon the same attitude on this side of the House and of honourable gentlemen. We will willingly co-operate with all, and we hope for their close union, in view of the undeniably difficult home situation which we shall probably have to face. We will co-operate with all who have the welfare of Prussia at heart, and are minded to aid in the further conduct of the establishment and development in a national sense of this Empire."

M. PASTEUR's chief assistant has found cinnamon fatal to the typhoid fever microbe.

AT the Hoogly Criminal Sessions, Sairavi Dasi, aged 25, was convicted of false personation of another woman before a Sub-Registrar and execution of a deed of sale for a valuable consideration, and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Two men who identified her before the Registrar have been ordered two years each.

AS a rule, rural Sub-registrars are miserably paid and too much work exacted of them. It is therefore not to their interest to be sufficiently careful or punctilious in the discharge of their duties, and whenever they find it profitable they make no scruple to relax the rules of the department. The whole system needs amendment, specially in the selection and remuneration of Sub-registrars.

THE Magistrate of Hooghly has sentenced a village Guru to four months' hard labour for introducing two passed boy-students at the last Primary Examination. The two boys have received as their prizes, by order of the same Magistrate, ten stripes each. We are afraid, the pass system—payment by results—is at the bottom of this disgrace.

AN old and systematic swindler has at last been spotted. Amrita Lal Dey, of 69, Aheritolla-street, Calcutta, has been sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment by the Ranchee Deputy Magistrate. He had applied to the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore for contribution towards an institution which existed in his imagination, named the Lansdowne Royal Scientific College. The Maharaja smelt a rat, and made enquiries. The Police at last took up the matter and brought to light other delinquencies of the Baboo.

Two months hence, Mr. Dey will doubtless be found in Upper India, an eloquent missionary of the Congress, like another well-known to the Bengal Police, who is now an oracle to our friends of the Advocate.

GEORGE CROFTON'S Pastoral Theatre in the maiden closes after to-night's performance. It seems not to have been patronized sufficiently for a longer duration.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE tenders for the new three per cent. Indian loan of £5,400,000 came up to £10,500,000. Tenders at £99-3-6 will receive 16 per cent. and above in full. The price of issue was 98.

Sir John Gorst, in reply to a question, said, that Lord Reay had threatened but not tendered his resignation, as he was reported to have done in his speech while leaving Bombay.

The Poor-house Lunatic Asylum near Norwich, New York, was, on the 8th instant, reduced to ashes. Eleven idiots and two other inmates perished. A ferry steamer on the Ohio was capsized the same day drowning twelve passengers. Another lunatic asylum, at Montreal, has also been destroyed by fire, burning and killing sixty inmates and damaging property valued at a million dollars. The lunatics who escaped are still at large and are committing mischief by setting fire to houses.

A loss of 10 million dollars by frauds over a period of years has been discovered in the Customs Department of the Argentine Republic.

The railway strike in Ireland has closed and the men have returned to duty. Those at Roubaix and Tourcoing in France are nearing their end.

Mr. Stanley had been to Windsor where he dined with the Queen, staying all night at the Castle. He had certainly a grand opportunity for dating his communications for the nonce from the royal abode.

There was a monster reception of the explorer by the Geographical Society at Albert Hall on the 5th. Royalty and authority were represented by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh and the Duke of Cambridge. Mr. Stanley described the geographical results of his journey and the Prince of Wales presented him with a special gold medal of the Society.

Mr. Smith announced in Parliament that Government was prepared to discuss the Crawford case but could not afford facilities for a discussion.

Portugal has agreed, as was certain, to submit the Delagoa Bay dispute to arbitration.

The Emperor himself opened the German Reichstag on the 5th. His Majesty declared that his efforts were unceasingly directed to the continued maintenance of peace and that he had succeeded in strengthening the confidence of the Powers by that policy. He will cultivate existing defensive alliances and friendly relations with all foreign Powers. Any displacement of the balance of power will, he said, endanger the equilibrium forming the basis of the peace policy of Germany.

The Emperor passed under review the resolutions of the Berlin Labour Conference, and expressed his greatest solicitude for the interests of workmen. He pointed out the urgency which existed for the amelioration of the conditions of labour, in regard to which the Powers were concerting measures of relief.

The proposed increase of the army, which begins on the 1st of October, was, the Emperor said, in consequence of the action of neighbouring Powers in the same direction.

Among the bills announced are the Military Bill, which is already known, and measures for the protection of workmen.

THE heat is excessive in Calcutta. But the epidemics are dying out. The Influenza has almost ceased, the later attacks proving fatal in some cases. The mortality last week from cholera was reduced to 15 from 18 and 27 of the two preceding weeks. The deaths from small-pox were 20 against 36 in the previous week. The total deaths from all causes were 230 against 270 and 345 of the earlier fortnight.

ON account of the heat of the season, under advice of the Health Officer, the Port Officer has advised the commanders of vessels not to expose their crews to the sun between the hours of 11 A.M. and 4 P.M. That is of course an obvious necessary precaution, but, like many other obvious truths of grave importance, often strangely neglected, resulting in disease and even death among the poor sailors.

To sailors equally with landmen we are prepared to give advice which, if not of the obvious kind, will, we trust, be found nonetheless useful. Take frequent draughts of the sherbet of the pulp of green mango thrown into the fire and taken out before it is calcined. The green mango, indeed, in different forms, is a tried preventive of sun-sickness. Announced to the European world by the late Raja Radhakanta Deb Bahadoor, of Sobhabazar, during the Mutinies, for the express purpose of saving the invaluable lives of the British soldiery who were succumbing daily to the heat of the march or the halt under exposure, and adopted not without reluctance, it was a discovery of the highest importance. Thus the Bengalis who had invited the British to the sovereignty of this country, again helped them in their hour of sorest trial to maintain the hold.

THE noble example of the Maharaja of Vizianagram is already bearing fruit. The Cooch Behar Government has sanctioned, as a permanent charge on the State, a monthly grant of rupees one hundred towards a professorship in Dr. Sircar's Association for the Cultivation of Science. This liberality of the Maharaja is worthy of Bengal's own Prince. The amount may not be enough to draw a Professor, but the Durbar may increase it in time, and other Princes and Chiefs may come forward with their quotas.

WHILE an expedition has been sent to Europe to speak down Lord Cross and the existing régime and cry up Mr. Bradlaugh and Democracy and altogether sumjhuo the good people of England into faith in the Congress as the true political Saviour, patriots of less enterprise have kept themselves within the Kalipani to conquer and consolidate at home. In the North, Pandit Ajudhia Nath has been taking city after city. And what wonder? The notice of his coming circulated in advance is itself a triumph :—

"MAY THE EMPRESS
CONGRESS! OF INDIA'S PROS- CONGRESS!
PERITY ENDURE.
CONGRESS!

Be it known that on April 4, 1890, on Friday, at 3-30 P.M., a very great Congress meeting will be held, at which thousands will be present, at (such-and-such a place). At that meeting the Hon'ble Pandit Ajudhia Nath will explain Congress matters, and will speak about the petition which will be presented to Parliament, of which the object is the remission of tax (maafi tikas), the advancement of Hindustan, and the strengthening of the English Government. All raises and residents are invited to attend."

The cleverness of that writer is beyond doubt, whatever may be thought of his principles. He starts with the assurance of success. There will be a great meeting of thousands in favour of the Congress. It matters little whether you attend or not, but in your own interest you can not well neglect such an opportunity of showing the stuff in you.

The notification does not stick at trifles. It roundly offers the most tempting of all political baits—remission of taxation. As for the elective system, a discreet silence is maintained.

HERE is another of the recent orders of the Government of India, in the Home Department, evidently the outcome of the inglorious ending of the Calcutta Town Hall meeting in honor of His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor of Wales. It is addressed to all the Local Governments and Administrations :—

"I am directed to say that the Governor-General in Council has had under consideration the attitude which should be maintained by officers in the service of Government towards political and quasi-political movements with which they may be brought in contact. Servants of Government have not the same liberty of action as private individuals and are bound to hold themselves aloof from many movements which are perfectly legitimate in themselves and which private persons are free to promote. Their participation in such movements is open to objection, because their connection with them is likely to create and even to be appealed to for the purpose of creating a false impression in the minds of ignorant persons that such movements have the countenance of Government and because their influence with the community at large is liable to be impaired by their indentifying themselves with the class by which the movement is promoted.

2. For these reasons His Excellency in Council desires that the following rules may be observed by all Government servants :—

(a) As a general rule no officer of Government should attend at a political meeting when the fact of his presence is likely to be misconstrued as to impair his usefulness as an official.

(b) No officer of Government may take part in the proceedings of a political meeting or in organizing or promoting a political meeting or agitation.

(c) If in any case an officer is in doubt whether any action which he proposes to take would contravene the terms of this order, the matter should be referred to the Head of the Department or District and if necessary to the Local Government or Administration."

PANDIT Prannath Saraswati, M.A., B.L., the worthy son of the late Justice Sambhu Nath Pandit, has been elected the Tagore Law Professor for the next session. He came, he saw, he conquered, for he had the appointment almost for the mere asking, as he had not, like his brother pleaders, to wait and wait till other favorites had been provided for. The University has done itself honour as well in the selection as in the manner thereof. Pandit Saraswati is one of the most accomplished and learned of our lawyers and publicists.

THE practice of flaying alive goats in Calcutta, coupled with the inadequate punishment awarded by the Honorary Presidency Magistrates, has, we see, attracted the attention of the Press in England, Mr. Labouchere, in particular, making it an occasion for attributing hard-heartedness to the natives of India generally.

In simple justice, we must exonerate our Mahomedan brethren from all responsibility in the scandal. It was the brutal conduct of some Hindoo butchers of Calcutta, that first brought the matter under public notice. That it has reached the dignity of an English agitation, we owe to the incapacity of the Honorary Magistrates who tried them to realise the gravity of the offence committed by the butchers. The chief responsibility, however, rests not with the unpaid magistracy. The Indian journals never dealt tenderly with the practice, and always severely commented on the insufficiency of the punishments awarded. But no body took the trouble to enquire why all these cases of an exceptional character were made over to the Honorary Magistrates for trial, and why not a single one of them was retained on the file of the stipendiary Magistrates. These quietly allowed the cases to be transferred to the Benches, without making a precedent for them to follow. We must not, however, omit to mention that the highest penalty under the Cruelty to Animals Act—under which these prosecutions were made, is only a fine of Rs. 100, and it was doubted whether the Act was amended to cover the particular offence.

The tendency of the stipendiary magistrates has long been to take a brief magisterial airing on the bench, doing as little as they can and making over the bulk of their work to the poor Honorary Magistrates. It is strange that Government do not take notice of such a state of affairs, so long continued, at the very capital.

A JEW, Elias H. Solomon, is under arrest for colossal frauds on the Bank of Bengal and the Hong-Kong and Shanghai Bank. He is charged with defrauding the Banks of over ten lacs of rupees by forged documents—opium passes. The Bank of Bengal started the prosecution, but Government intervened and wanted to take charge of the case. The Bank resisted the attempt. It brought down Counselor Woodroffe to the Magistracy but ultimately retired, leaving the prosecution to Government. Mr. Aparcar thus opened the case on behalf of Government against the accused:—

"The accused was for some years a constituent of the Bank of Bengal. He was a purchaser of opium from the Government sales, and was both a dealer and shipper of opium. On many occasions the accused had received advances from the Bank of Bengal on what were called passes issued by the Board of Revenue after the usual monthly sale of opium. These sales were notified in the beginning of the year. The purchasers paid the necessary deposit and then paid the balance, and obtained passes, showing that the chests were in the godown, and were the property of the persons to whom the passes were granted, or in whose name they were endorsed. On the 21st of January last the accused took four opium passes, representing 600 chests of opium, to Mr. Balfour, the then Superintendent of the Loan Department in the Bank of Bengal, and representing them to be opium passes for which chests of opium were in the godowns of the Board of Revenue, he got an advance of six lacs of rupees. On the 6th of February in the same way he brought two passes representing 350 chests of opium, and obtained an advance of three lacs and forty thousand. Mr. Balfour gave over charge of the Loan Department on the 11th March to Mr. David Crowe. On the 20th March, Solomon, the accused, paid one lac on the four passes which he had pledged with the Bank on the 21st of January, and redeemed one of the four passes, so that three passes were left, and five lacs still unpaid. On the 7th of April accused brought two more passes representing 335 chests of opium, and obtained from the Bank of Bengal two lacs and eighty-three thousand rupees. The passes bore the endorsement of E. H. Solomon, and were forgeries. Subsequently, accused, being pressed, sent another pass representing 75 chests of opium as additional cover for the loans of advances made to him by the Bank. These forged passes purported to bear the signatures of J. Knox Old, Superintendent, and G. C. Chuckerbutty, Assistant, in the Board of Revenue, which were forgeries. The genuine passes bore the Government stamp which were not on the forged passes. Mr. Aparcar said he would also prove that comparing the writing in the body of the documents and the signature of the accused, they were in the same handwriting, and that the signatures of J. Knox Old and G. C. Chuckerbutty were forgeries. He would also show that when these passes for opium were alleged to be in existence, there was not the quantity of opium in the Government godowns. It would also be proved that the Nos. of the lots shown on the passes were the Nos. sold to Mr. Gubboy, and the opium delivered to him when called for. It would be shown conclusively that, on the representation made by the accused that the documents were genuine passes, cheques were given to him by the Bank of Bengal, and the cheques bore his endorsements on them."

The case stands adjourned to Monday next.

Meanwhile, our King of Israel—the same Solomon—we find, figures in the Insolvent Court.

AFTER having done all the mischief possible, Mahamahopadhyaya Mahesh Chandra Nyaratna now awakes from his sleep of Kumbhukarna to pour oil over the troubled water. He was evidently not prepared to be caught in the act—of striking at the religious and social institutions of his Hindu fellow-subjects. Our publication of his secret correspondence with the Chamber of Commerce forced him out from cover. He now makes a virtue of necessity and lays his correspondence before the public. In his covering letter to the Statesman, he thus justifies his conduct in connection with the Doorga Pooja holidays:—

"Several letters condemning me in connection with the question of Hindoo holidays having appeared in your correspondence columns, I beg the favour of your publishing the annexed copies of correspondence that passed between the Chamber of Commerce and me on the subject. I shall feel much obliged by your kindly drawing your readers' attention to the fact that I was asked only to furnish a list of the Hindoo holidays, particularising the days that are days of 'actual worship,' and to indicate, in the list of Hindoo holidays given in the Bengal Government notification, the days 'imperatively required for the performance of religious rites, and especially the strictly worship days in the Doorga and Lakshmi Poojas,' but that I was not asked to mention the number of days for which I thought offices should be closed on the occasion of each Pooja. For the Doorga Pooja, as a matter of fact, I consider 12 days holiday, for various reasons, by no means too long."

The Pandit, after his wont, wants to please everybody. When he rushed into correspondence with the Chamber, he knew what he was doing and knew why the Chamber selected him, of all men, and for what purpose, and now that he is assailed from another quarter, by his own people, the Nayaratna takes shelter under a quibble, and assures his people that the 12 days' holiday is by no means too long.

SOME one—doubtless no friend to the Papacy—has calculated that the Cardinals at Rome receive an aggregate pay of £750,000 a year. But then the revenues of the Anglican Bishops? The receipts of the various Churches together form no doubt a vast and formidable total, before which the emoluments of all the Brahmins that ever lived sink into a veritable beggar's dole.

AMERICA maintains its name for being "go-ahead" in every thing. The latest discovered Continent has itself in our age taken rank as the Land of Discoveries. It has now surpassed itself by the invention of a new and perfectly original grievance. There is a Brummagem in Lancashire in England and there is a Brummagem in Connecticut in the United States. The British Brummagem takes the lead of the whole world in brass, Paris itself coming after it. But for brazenness all round, the Transatlantic Brummagem beats the universe. The girls of the Brass Factory there have, after the manner of workmen elsewhere, struck work. The problem here is not economical but rather emotional—not so much political as poetical. The girls' ground for mutiny is thoroughly characteristic. They inveigh against the tyranny of Capital encroaching on the right divine of gals to make love and be foolish. They would rather starve than continue to earn the wages of such slavery.

Let the reader think we are drawing upon our imagination for this picture of the female proletariat of the go-ahead Continent, we extract the following paragraph which is going the round of the press:—

"At Birmingham, Connecticut, the girls employed in the Housatonic Brass Company's factory have struck because they are not allowed to flirt with men across the street."

Poor Brass Girls! Relentless Brass Masters! The prohibition subtracts all poetry from the factory. What is the life of a factory gal worth after the loss of the dear privilege? Down with the Black Act! Flirting for ever!

THE Director of Public Instruction thus reports on the working of the Government School of Art during 1888-89:—

The number of students has risen from 158 to 172, and the expenditure from public revenue from Rs. 24,978 to Rs. 25,462.

Mr. Jobbins remarks that the students in the technical classes are doing excellent work, particularly in the wood-engraving and lithographic classes, and a considerable amount of outside work has been satisfactorily executed. Less work has been done this year in the advanced painting classes owing to the fact that 22 of the advanced students have entered as candidates for the first certificate of the 3rd grade. The work prescribed for this certificate includes examples in various stages of drawing as light and shade, outline, drawing with instruments, &c. The second certificate, "Painting and Design" will be commenced after the completion of the first. It is estimated that the execution of the works and preparation for the examination will take a year for each certificate.

The holder of one or more certificates of the 3rd grade will be eligible for employment as teachers.

Special classes have been instituted for those students desirous of becoming teachers. Lectures on Perspective, Practical Geometry and Model Drawing, are now given every week.

Another innovation is the establishment of a class for still-life painting. The progress of the students in this class has been most satisfactory.

In the elementary classes free-hand test papers (to be worked in a given time) are given out every week. The Superintendent examines and marks them himself and the results are put up in a conspicuous place in the class rooms.

The following prizes have been offered for competition among students of the school.

His Excellency the Viceroy. A silver medal to be awarded to the student who at the end of the year has made the greatest progress in any of the classes under instruction.

The Hon'ble Sir Alfred Croft. Four silver medals.

1. For the best head painted from life in colours in any medium.
2. For the best study of still-life in oils or water-colours.
3. For the best example of modelling in clay or wax.
4. For the best architectural drawing.

These prizes have been instituted in connexion with the Calcutta Art Society.

His Highness the Bara Thakur of Tipperah. A gold medal.

Maharaja Sir Jotendro Mohan Tagore. A silver medal.

The Superintendent mentions the great assistance he has received from Mr. Ghilardi, the Assistant Principal, and Baboo Annoda Prasad Bagchi the Headmaster.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

A CONGRESS PUBLISHER AND THE LITERATURE OF THE CONGRESS.

WHATEVER opinions may be held by different politicians and thinkers about the objects of the Congress, or about the seasonableness or unseasonableness of the agitation or its methods, the phenomenon of the agitation itself is indisputable, though its proportions and influence may be exaggerated. The movement has drawn thousands in all parts of the Empire, including men of all sorts—good, bad and indifferent. The prime movers and their immediate followers are not a few, and they are all working with no little energy. Their wisdom may be questioned, their tactics condemned, their very sincerity suspected, but their apparent zeal is patent. Few as the chief leaders may be, they have plunged into the thing with heart and soul. They have made sacrifices and shown ability. They have maintained the movement with their purse, and have planned and perfected a great organization with numerous branches and wide ramifications. From this point of view at any rate, they are entitled to indulge the highest hopes, and may well declare—

'Tis not in mortals to command success ;

But we'll do more, Sempronius ; we'll deserve it.

The Congress has its press of course. All the Hindu journalism of the country, with three notable exceptions, is devoted to its service. That is a phenomenal fact. The Congress has found its Publisher too. Not that it has any recognised publishing House, but, with its luck in other respects, it has received the advantage of one. The times have evolved it—the movement has created it. A speculative printer has seized the opportunity. That enterprising gentleman is Mr. Ganga Prasad Varma, of Lucknow. Although not by Appointment, he is to all intents and purposes Publisher to the Congress. And he is the sole Publisher. There is no other in the field. Nor is there any likelihood of one. For, his publications are the despair of all brethren of the craft who might aspire to have a hand in the pie. By his cheap and prompt production he will always distance all competition. His work is far from handsome, but it is good enough, and, what is the prime consideration, within the means of the reading classes. His paper is not milk-white, nor his ink jet-black, but as the paper is thick and the type new, the print is clear. And surely sumptuous letter-press is much of a waste in matters so ephemeral, and distinctly out of place in this country.

Mr. Varma—the trade name of his business is G. P. Varma and Brothers (sic) Press—has, by his printing and publishing activity, doubtless advanced the cause. During the last two years, he has issued tract upon tract. These were not original works, but they were virtually such to most, and useful to all. Made up of matter from the newspapers and periodicals in England and in this country, they from the first allowed the masses of the Indian reading public a real opportunity of perusing and pondering what was said on the great Movement in the two countries. Newspapers like the Pioneer are in no sense popular. The circulation they boast of is exclusive and sectional—simply racial—being confined to Europeans. Even the official Gazette is caviare to the general, and publication in the newspapers under European conduct is no publication to the people. As for the journals of Great Britain, the very names of most of them had not been heard by most natives. Even the more educated among them have not to this day seen a copy of the Times or the St. James's Gazette. Hence the value of Mr. Varma's labours in educating the popular mind on the subject of the Congress. Even those who had seen the speeches, epistles and essays in their original spheres at their first appearance, appreciated their reproduction together in a durable and handy form.

Mr. Varma's most important publication was one of his earliest. In a thick royal octavo volume, in unboarded coloured paper cover rather than a pamphlet—under the name of India in England, he fairly broke ground and laid the solid foundation of his claim to be the Publisher of the Congress. This is a reprint of all that had been said and written on the subject in England in 1888. First, we have so much of Sir William Hunter's address at the annual meeting of the National Indian Association at Willis's Rooms on the 3rd March of that year, under the presidency of Lord Hobhouse, on Recent Movements in India as relates to the National Congress, with Sir Charles A. Turner's remarks thereto and Mr. Dadabhai Naorojee's speech too. After another short speech by the last named, comes a longer speech from Mr. Caine, M.P. Then comes the Programme of the Indian Political Agency, followed by the covering letter of the President forwarding the Proceedings of the Third National Congress. The really valuable matter now appears in Sir W. W. Hunter's letters to the Times. Then come extracts from the newspapers. The pamphlet which the late Chief Justice of Bengal published soon after his retirement—"A Few Plain Truths about India"—is next reprinted, followed by Mr. Bonnerjea's speech at Wainfleet, then Messrs. Bonnerjea and Norton's speeches at Gateshead, again Mr. Bonnerjea's speeches at four different places, Mr. Bradlaugh's speech on Our Indian Empire, Sir William Wedderburn's Lecture on Our Duty to India, an extract from a letter from Sir John Phear on the Congress, and a short letter to the Times by Mr. Digby on Sir Auckland Colvin. Then follow two appendices containing Mr. Norton's letters to the Hindu and various letters and articles bearing on the subjects. The whole is preceded by an original Introduction of some dozen pages.

"The National Congress Vindicated" is another of Mr. Varma's publications of last year, containing Lord Dufferin's St. Andrews' Dinner Speech and Mr. Norton's Open Letter to the Marquess of Dufferin. The same year he published "Two Memorable Speeches of Mr. Eardley Norton delivered at Patcheappah's Hall, Madras, giving an account of the work of the Indian Political Agency and his English Travels." These are all interesting brochures, and their value will be daily more and more recognised as people require to refer to any of the incidents of the movements going on. Such a publisher is an important ally to the cause.

NEPAL.

THE Indian Political Agency is doing magnificent work. That will be conceded by friends and foes alike. No candid mind can help admiring the ability with which it is being worked; above all, its energy fairly staggers one. The Indian Congress whose interests it was started to promote, would have been sufficient to engross the working capacities of any organization. To recommend such a novel movement with the grave problems and wide possibilities involved in it to a practical unimaginative people like the British, is a task of the heaviest and most exhausting kind imaginable. But the Congress is but one department of the Agency, though by no means the least important. The Political Agency is a great unofficial India Office in London and no mean rival of the official institution. It is regarded by the people of India, suffering from the indifference of the official classes and the secret methods of government prevailing in this country, as a final board of appeal. It lends ear to all complaints, and advises and helps parties to the best of its power. What an enormous amount of work must be thus thrown upon it, may be imagined! Up to this, it is struggling valiantly with the ever-crowding demands upon its resources. In its miscellaneous department, the Agency has done some notable work. We are only afraid that the discerning public is unable to keep pace with the quick succession of public questions turned out by it. Certainly, amidst the vast mass the proportions of different subjects are apt to be missed.

Some such cause must account for the strange neglect which has befallen the Agency's literary effort in behalf of the despoiled and exiled Princes of Nepal. Neither in the cause nor in the treatment thereof, was there anything to justify indifference. It must therefore be that the multiplicity of the interests forced on the notice has bewildered the public and the press into an attitude of dumb show before a brilliant performance. Such undoubtedly is Mr. Digby's elaborate pamphlet. We call it a pamphlet advisedly, as advocating a cause in practical politics, otherwise, it might well be described as a grave work. To begin with, it comes to us in all the dignity of a well printed and profusely illustrated octavo, bound in cloth gilt. The matter is historical, involving no little research, and the manner is of the best. Apart from the particular cause advocated, the book is a valuable contribution to the history of Nepal with special reference to the course of British relations with that country. Indeed, but for its immediate object, it would pass for a smart historical essay. The main portion sets out with an account of the kingdom of Nepal and proceeds to relate its various fortunes until the ascendancy of Sir Jung Bahadur who consolidates the power and cements the alliance with Great Britain in the most splendid manner by fighting her enemies during the Mutinies. Then it goes on to recount the story of the present usurpation effected by base ingratitude and treachery and attended with massacre and spoliation and the present wretchedness of Sir Jung's family. The whole is preceded by some striking prefatory matters.

We will content ourselves with quoting the greater part of the preface as a specimen of the writing and an introduction into the subject:—

"In 1857

Sir Jung Bahadur places the resources of the Kingdom of Nepal at the service of the Governor-General of India. The offer is accepted. Less than a year after Lord Canning expresses cordial thanks for the aid which the Prime Minister of Nepal and his brave soldiers rendered in the suppression of the Mutiny, and adds: 'The friendly conduct of his Government, and the exertions and successes of his troops, will be held in grateful recollection not less in England than in India.' That Lord Canning was speaking the mind of England in so saying the English newspapers of the day bear testimony.

In 1886 and 1887

another Viceroy and Governor-General of India is, in view of what was said in 1858, asked to interest himself in Nepal, and to show some kindness to the family of India's friend in Mutiny days. The Dowager Queen of Nepal, a daughter of Sir Jung Bahadur, and other relatives of the late Prime Minister of Nepal, are refugees in India. They have been driven from their country and their homes by an act of wholly unjustifiable usurpation, the country not being misgoverned, and by a series of peculiarly base assassinations of most dearly beloved relatives. The Marquis of Dufferin and Ava is Viceroy and Governor-General. In culture, in broad-mindedness, and in a chivalrous sensitiveness to every honourable obligation binding upon the British nation Lord Dufferin is regarded as without a superior, and as not having many equals. Nevertheless, incredible as it may seem, with Lord Canning's pledged word on behalf of both England and India brought specially to his attention, his Excellency leaves the distressed daughter and nephew of Sir Jung Bahadur wholly without sympathy, and refrains from exercising that friendly intervention which was asked for and which could so easily have been rendered. One explanation, apparently, is alone possible. The Indian Foreign Office evidently had no copy of Lord Canning's letter to the Secret Committee of the East India Company, and Sir Mortimer Durand was, therefore, unable to verify the accuracy of the statements attributed to the Viceroy of thirty years ago."

"The 'grateful recollection' not less in England than in India' vouchsafed with sincerity to Sir Jung Bahadur by Lord Canning has been wholly effaced from the minds of the rulers of India. There remains England, whose 'grateful recollection' Lord Canning felt himself justified in proffering. It is the object of this little work to ascertain whether gratitude for such unique and most valuable aid as Sir Jung Bahadur rendered is as little cherished in England as, apparently, it is in India. The Dowager Queen of Nepal, her cousin General Dhoje Nursing, and other Nepalese refugees in India, entertain no doubt on this point. They believe British statesmen who ruled India in past days said what they meant and meant what they said, and that the British nation will stand by what they said. Not statesmen only have spoken. H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, and not a few of the nobles of England, have been lavish in their acknowledgments of Nepalese help and goodwill to Britain in India, and, it must be presumed, have not been unmindful of the obligations consequential on such acknowledgments. The belief is cherished, with a confidence and fidelity that have in them much that is touching, that services so splendid and so timely as those rendered by Sir Jung Bahadur in 1857 and in 1858, and the subsequent hearty recognition of those services, cannot fail to bear some fruit. The crop looked for is not large. Only a little thoughtful consideration, and friendly intervention in a quarter where one word spoken with firmness from the Viceroy and Governor-General of India would be sufficient, in redemption alike of Treaty provisions and personal promises, are sought. These pages will have been written in vain if at least this much of justice is not granted through the friendly efforts of English people, or, better still, of his own generous and grateful motion, by the Marquess of Lansdowne, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, with whom is the power and, I would fain hope, the will also to do all that is desired and all that is due."

Mr. Digby has evidently had very able assistance in the correspondence of some of the fugitive princes. General Dhoje Nursing in particular, on the subject of their grievances. He has with a true artist's eye enriched his pages by freely quoting from their letters. For example, we quote a capital letter addressed to the head of the Jungs by the other members who had made up their minds that the good offices of the British Government should be invoked:—

"May it please your Royal Highness,

With profound deference and submission we, the undersigned, beg to approach your Royal Highness with this humble representation, expressive of our deep disappointment at the ungenerous treatment which we have experienced at the hands of the Government of India. After the treacherous murder of our universally beloved Prime Minister, Maharajah Sir Ranadip Sing, and the usurpation of power by Bir Shumshere and his brothers, we were induced to come to British India in the confident hope of receiving every assistance from our powerful ally in rescuing our country from the hands of the usurpers. That hope was based—

1st. On the services which Nepal had rendered to the Government of India during the Indian Mutiny; and,

2ndly. On the third clause of our Treaty with the British Government (No. XLVII of 1801), which provides 'that the principals and officers of both Governments will cordially consider the friends and enemies of either State to be the friends and enemies of the other; and this consideration must ever remain permanent and in force, from generation to generation.'

But our hope was doomed to bitter disappointment. Within about two months of the cruel murder of Maharajah Sir Ranadip Sing, the Government of India, perhaps at the instance of a new Resident, wholly unacquainted with the country and the real sentiments of the people, and before we had hardly any opportunity of stating our case, precipitately recognised Bir Shumshere as Prime Minister, and entered into political relations with him as the rightful representative of the Nepal Durbar. On our arrival in British territory, memorials were submitted to the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council on behalf of our country, and also for the restoration of our property, both personal and immovable; but our representations have been altogether unheeded, and we have been subjected to a most galling police espionage as if we were the enemies of both States. The Government of India, which is never slow to insist on the observance of treaty obligations on the part of its allies, has shown its singular fidelity to Nepal by taking the part of the unscrupulous traitor.

Meanwhile, the country is being ground down under the iron heel of Bir Shumshere. There have been repeated massacres of innocent men since his usurpation of power; nearly all the nobility and trusted leaders of the people have been either killed or forced into exile, and their property seized by him; there is no security of life and property, justice being polluted at its very fount; trade and every industrial enterprise are being fast ruined by systematic oppression, and by jealous restrictions imposed on free intercourse between Nepal and the rest of India; the public revenue is wasted in promoting either the personal indulgence or the self-aggrandisement of the usurper, whose arbitrary will constitutes the law of the land; and the entire nation is utterly demoralised by a policy of stern repression, and emasculated by the deprivation of all means of successful resistance to tyranny. And who can say, now that the pillars of the State and the natural defenders of the throne have been removed, that Bir Shumshere will not, in the pursuit of his lawless ambition, crown his supreme guilt and infamy by ultimate regicide?

Under these circumstances, we humbly but most earnestly pray, that your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased, on behalf of our ancient kingdom, to make an appeal under the existing treaty to the People and the Parliament of Great Britain. England is no less just and generous than great and powerful among the nations of the earth; and we are sanguine that the moment her sympathies are awakened in favour of Nepal, the downfall of the tyrant is certain. We would ask the British Government, in fulfilment of its treaty engagements, to withhold its support from Bir Shumshere, and to assist us in establishing a regency, composed of the senior members of the Royal family, to conduct the administration of the State during the minority of our beloved sovereign. Such a regency, we are sure, would be most acceptable to all classes of the people, as being in entire harmony with precedents in our past history, and calculated to ensure the speedy restoration of internal peace and tranquillity by vesting the supreme authority of the State in those who are naturally entitled to our allegiance and veneration. And we are confident that if, under British auspices, your Royal Highness, attended by your faithful Sikaris, now appeared with a small force in Nepal, the army and the people—by this time wholly disillusionised—would readily flock to your Royal Highness's standard, and throw off the hated yoke of Bir Shumshere with heartfelt alacrity and with feelings of deep gratitude to their British deliverers.

With sentiments of profound loyalty and reverence,

We remain,

Your Royal Highness's most devoted and humble servants,
(sd.) PADAM JUNG RANA BAHADUR, (sd.) DHOJI NURSING RANA BAHADUR, and others."

We will conclude with the Jaitha Maharani's representation to the Viceroy:—

"To Her Royal Highness Sri Panch, Dowager Jaitha Maharani of Nepal. May it please your Excellency,

It is now upwards of two years since the writer of this, the Senior Dowager Maharani of Nepal, and daughter of Sri Jung Bahadur, came to British India under most melancholy circumstances. The late Sri Ranadip Sing, Prime Minister of Nepal, had been treacherously murdered by General Bir Shumshere and his brothers; and I myself, though a woman, had been shot at by them, and would have shared the same tragic fate but that I succeeded in escaping into the Residency by timely flight. With the aid of the Brigade stationed at Khatmandu, to whose command General Bir Shumshere had been appointed by the generous confidence of the late Prime Minister, the conspirators had killed General Juggut Jung and his son Yudh Pratap; sent the leading Bhardars into captivity, or otherwise compelled them to seek protection at the Residency; and thus established a military despotism on the ruins of the constitutional Government of the country. In this unhappy situation, I determined to leave Khatmandu for British territory; and I am thankful that I was enabled to fulfil my intention through the friendly assistance of the Residency officers and men. But I had to leave behind me my only daughter, who is Heir-Presumptive to the throne of Nepal, as well as all my personal property, with the exception of the jewellery I had on my person.

As the head of the Royal Family of Nepal during the minority of the Maharaj Adhiraj, I may be permitted to say a few words on the present situation. By the old laws of Nepal, the King only could appoint his ministers for carrying on the work of administration; but if the king happened to be a minor, as in the case of Rana Bahadur Shah, Grivan Yudh Bikram Shah, and Rajendra Bikram Shah, the authority to appoint ministers, as well as the control of the administration, was usually vested in a Regency, composed of the senior qualified members of the Royal family. This law was, during the Premiership of my father, Maharaja Sir Jung Bahadur, abrogated in favour of a settled rule of succession to the Ministry, which was solemnly accepted by the then reigning Sovereign, Surendra Vikram Shah, and his father, Rajendra Bikram Shah, and by all the Bhardars of the State. But neither under the old law, nor under Maharaja Sir Jung Bahadur's Rule of Succession, is General Bir Shumshere lawfully or constitutionally entitled to exercise the authority of the Durbar which he has assumed in his hands. The King is a minor, and could not have given him the power; of the three senior qualified members of the Royal family two, namely, the Senior Dowager Maharani and the King's uncle, are decidedly opposed to his elevation, and view his usurpation of power with the greatest distrust and consternation; while he stands only fifth on the constitutional roll of succession to the Premiership. Successful violence, therefore, is his only title to power; and if the British recognition is founded on that fact, then I submit, it is opposed to the Treaty of 1801, the 3rd Article of which provides as follows:—

"The principals and officers of both Governments will cordially consider the friends and enemies of either State to be, the friends and enemies of the other; and this consideration must ever remain permanent, and in force, from generation to generation."

Surely the men who murdered the Prime Minister of Nepal; who attempted the life of a number of the Royal family, viz., of the Senior Dowager Maharani (which is felony punishable with death under the law of my country); who have placed the King's uncle in captivity; and subverted the constitutional government of the State; can only be regarded as her greatest enemies. I would respectfully ask your Excellency to think for a moment, if these unhappy events had occurred in England, how would the British people, how would all lovers of constitutionalism, regard the perpetrators of the crime? It is true Nepal is not England, but that is all the more reason why the truest friends and allies of Nepal should openly discountenance all political violence subversive of established order and tranquillity in the State.

Since my arrival in British India my minor daughter, I deeply regret to say, has been married by the party in power, into an inferior family and to a person acknowledged to be devoid of education, against my wishes and in spite of my strongest objections as communicated to the Foreign Office. No exigencies of policy nor considerations of political advantage could be pleaded in justification of the measure; it was, apparently, deemed not enough to have separated mother and child, and so the cruel wrong must needs be crowned with a crueller one, in order to inflict deep pain and humiliation on the exiled mother, if not to overawe the people of Nepal by a show of the irresistible power of the wrongdoers.

It is now, as I have said, over two years since I came to British India, but I am sorry to observe that no provision whatever for my support has been made by the present Government of Nepal. At the time of my departure from Khatmandu a promise in writing was extorted from me that I should not claim any personal property nor ask for maintenance during my residence in British territory; but, as the promise was given under compulsion, and without a consideration, it is, of course, not binding upon me. According to the established usage of my country, members of the Royal family, while residing in British India, have always been liberally supported at the expense of the State; and the Government of India has, in the past, benevolently interfered to secure for them fitting provision from the Durbar. What crime, what felony have I committed to merit a different treatment? Even the Junior Maharani of Rajendra Bikram Shah, although guilty of the grossest excesses, was amply provided for on her retirement to Benares. These considerations have induced me to seek the good offices of the great Government of India; and, therefore, in reliance on the friendship and amity which have long subsisted between it and our family I beg that your Excellency's Government will be graciously pleased to exercise its benevolent interference in securing a suitable maintenance for me and in recovering my personal property which I left behind at Khatmandu, from the present Government of Nepal.

I remain, your Excellency's most obedient servant,

SRI PANCH,

Senior Dowager Maharani of Nepal.

168, Lower Circular Road, Calcutta, May, 1888."

Nothing could be better expressed or more forcible. But cui bono? The despoiled Nepalese exile is a despoiled exile for a' that, and a' that.

A MAHOMEDAN PROTEST AGAINST ELECTIVE COUNCILS.

To the Hon'ble the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament Assembled.

The humble petition of the Committee of Management of the Mahomedan Literary Society, Calcutta.

SHWETH,--That the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta, founded in 1863, is the earliest educational and political organisation established for the purpose of representing their orthodox co-religionists throughout India, and promoting their interests, and your petitioners are the Members of the Managing Committee thereof.

That Your Petitioners are satisfied with the Indian Councils Bill as passed by the Hon'ble House of Lords, acting upon the advice and suggestions of the responsible rulers of this great Empire.

That your petitioners especially desire to express satisfaction at the omission of any elective principle from the said Bill, inasmuch as owing to the peculiar religious and social circumstances of India, the country is not yet fit for the exercise of such privileges, and it is their firm belief that should election form the basis of any portion of the contemplated legislation on the subject of the Indian Councils, the Mahomedan community though numbering some 50 millions will be at the mercy of a strong and compact Hindu majority whose notions of right and expediency are so different in many vital points from those entertained by the Mahomedans. History, both ancient and modern, is replete with instances of conflict between contending factions; and it is submitted that the Legislature may therefore well pause before enacting any measure which will have the practical effect of committing the interests of one community to the control of another.

In consequence of the backwardness of the Mahomedans in regard to English education and political organization, their community will be unable to benefit by any system of election, and even if they should secure a certain number of representatives, their numerical proportion could never be strong enough to ensure a due regard to their vital interests.

Your petitioners therefore whilst accepting gratefully the Bill abovementioned as an appreciable movement in advance towards reform, manifesting the confidence and good will of the British Government towards the Natives of India, humbly pray that in dealing with the Bill Your Hon'ble House will be pleased not to allow any system of election to be introduced therein, but leave the responsible executive Government of India to make such selections for the several Councils in India as under proper safe-guards they may consider right and proper in the interests of the various nationalities which form the subject races of Her Imperial Majesty the Queen-Empress.

And your petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray.
Calcutta, the 1st April 1890.

THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

THE KILIMANJARO MOUNTAIN.

At the Council meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on April 14 the awards of the honours for the year were finally decided upon. It may be as well to explain that at the meeting of March 24 the award of the gold medals of the society was virtually agreed to, though, in accordance with the rules, the final decision was deferred till April 14. At the same time it may be stated that upwards of a fortnight ago the president of the society telegraphed to Emin Pasha that one of the Royal medals had been awarded to him in recognition of the great services rendered by him to geography and the allied sciences by his explorations and researches in the countries east, west, and south of the Upper Nile during his twelve years' administration of the equatorial Province of Egypt. Emin Pasha was at the same time invited to come to London and receive the medal in person at the anniversary meeting of the society on July 16. In a telegram to the society some time previously Emin had expressed a hope that he would be able to come to London. As no reply has yet been received to the telegram announcing the award of the medal, it is not known whether the message has reached him. If Emin means to accompany a German expedition into the interior, it is of course highly improbable that he can be in London in the summer.

The other royal medal of the society has been awarded to Lieutenant F. E. Younghusband for his journey across Central Asia in 1886-87, from Manchuria and Peking via Hami and Kashgar, and over the Mushtagh to Cashmere and India, a distance of 7,000 miles.

Africa has claimed another honor this year from the society. The Cuthbert Peck grant has been awarded to Mr. E. C. Hare for his valuable observations on the physical geography of Tanganyika made during his many years' residence on that lake. The Murchison grant has been awarded to Signor Vittorio Sella in consideration of his recent journey in the Caucasus and the advance made in our knowledge of the physical characteristics and the topography of the chain by means of his series of panoramic photographs taken above the snow level. Finally, the Gill memorial has been given to Mr. C. M. Woodford for his three expeditions to the Solomon Islands and the important additions made by him to our topographical knowledge and the natural history of the islands. Mr. Woodford has just published a richly illuminated volume describing the results of his visits to these islands.

Dr. Hans Meyer then read a paper describing his ascent of the Kilimanjaro mountain, supposed to be the loftiest within the limits of Africa. This great snow peak of Eastern Africa has already been described by Dr. Meyer himself with great minuteness, and before his day more than one naturalist passed some time on its slope. When, in 1848, Mr. Rebman, of the Church Missionary Society, intimated to the world that there was in Africa, three degrees south of the Equator, a mountain covered with perpetual snow, his intelligence was received with something like incredulity, although it was fully confirmed by his companion, Dr. Krapf. All doubts on the matter were, however, finally set at rest by the visits paid to the mountain by the party of Baron Von der Decken, in 1862, and by that of Mr. New, who, in 1867, reached the lower edge of the snow. Since that date, it has been frequently examined, and described with more or less fulness. Sportsmen have haunted around its base and far up its lower reaches, and Mr. Johnston, now our Consul in Mozambique, passed several months collecting natural history specimens within the temperate area of its many climatic zones. In reality, it is now believed that long before modern African travel or travellers were dreamt of, Aristotle alluded to it when he wrote of "the so-called Silver Mountain," from which flowed the mighty Nile. But, says the Standard, no one will dispute Dr. Meyer's claim of being the first to attain the summit, or deny that to him belongs the glory of being its most exhaustive explorer, although he had the experience of more than one predecessor by which to profit.

Of late years, Kilimanjaro—or Kilma-Njaro, as the purists in Bantu philology insist on writing the name—has assumed an entirely novel aspect. It has been found to be only one of several snow-capped peaks in the same region, and one of many dormant or extinct volcanoes in the African Highlands. Kenia, not to mention the white top of Ruwenzori, which Mr. Stanley has described in his preliminary account of his latest explorations, equals, if it does not surpass it in grandeur, though Kilimanjaro is undeniably the highest known point in Africa. Some of its rivals have, it is understood, been ascended, though there are, or there have recently been, such a number of private expeditions in Central Africa, that it is difficult to keep account of the work done by travellers, many of whom are sportsmen who do not essay literature, or are engaged on behalf of rival trading companies, which have every interest in keeping secret the movements of their agents. But Kilimanjaro is within the sphere of the German Company's operations, so that Dr. Meyer is justified in making the patriotic boast that in ascending the summit of this mountain he has been able to plant the flag of his country on the loftiest ground in German territory.

Kilimanjaro stands quite isolated from all other heights on the Eastern edge of the great plateau of Equatorial Africa, though Kenia and Lemeru lie only a hundred miles away, while due west, at a distance of between thirty and forty miles, towers the noble mass of Mount Meru. It has two principal summits, besides various volcanic craters now filled with vegetation, or, in one instance at least, with one of those strange tarns which are so familiar to geologists in the Eifel and other volcanic regions. The great peaks are Kibo, or Baremi, a magnificent dome distinguished by a smooth and regular outline, and Mawenzi, or Kimawenzi, which, on the contrary, is dark and rugged, the saddle between the two being a ridge several miles in extent. The first of these summits Dr. Meyer, during his three weeks' stay on the upper slopes of the mountain, ascended four times, while the latter was reached almost as often. Hence, perhaps, in spite of his modest disclaimer, there is not a great deal to do for those who come after him, the botany, zoology, and geology of the mountain having been thoroughly examined. The latest series of ascents commenced in October last, Dr. Meyer and his companion, Herr Purtscheller, being accompanied by a native of Pangani, though, as a rule, the tribesmen living on the sides of the mountain, unable to bear the cold of the higher reaches, decline to go as far as the snow line. The saddle-shaped plateau above Mareale's village, 14,270 feet above sea level, formed the basis of their operations. From this point they crept upwards along the great lava streams running in a south-easterly direction. At 16,400 feet they met the first snow, though in much smaller quantities than in July 1887. At 18,240 feet, in an atmosphere hard to breathe on account of its rarification, the lower limits of the ice-cap of Kibo were attained, and there what would be called in Switzerland the real Alpine work began. Coloured spectacles to prevent the climbers from being blinded by the glare of the snow, ropes to keep them from slipping, and axes to cut footholds in the slippery glacier, now came into use. Crevasses were numerous, and that difficulty of breathing which affects men so differently that, on the greatest heights of the Andes and the Himalayas yet attained, the "zoroche" has sometimes not been noticed, was so intense that a halt was necessary every few minutes. At length, just when their strength was all but exhausted, the rim of the Kibo crater was reached. But though they saw its highest elevation on the south side of the mountain rising some few feet above the ice-cap, they were unable to go further unless at the risk of having to bivouac without the least protection from the bitter cold of an elevation over 19,000 feet above the sea-level. Having climbed 5,700 feet in eleven hours, and, by discovering the eruptive cone in the bottom of the crater, having solved the problem of Kibo, they considered, not without reason, that for that occasion they had done enough.

Their next attempt was crowned with complete success, for they reached, with comparatively little labour, the highest point—Kaiser Wilhelm Spitze—which, by the aneroid barometer, an instrument by no means trustworthy at great elevations, was found to be 19,696 feet in height. Shifting their quarters, Mawenzi was next essayed. This summit seems much older than its twin peak; and owing to its ragged crumbling rock, worn away by ages of rain and wind and snow, it affords a less secure foothold than Kibo. Detached patches of grass straggle up to 15,750 feet. Beyond this all vegetation, except lichens and mosses, ceases. However, the different sides of the summit are not equally difficult, so that three ascents were accomplished to an elevation of over 19,300 feet. If, therefore, Dr. Meyer's estimates by the aneroid barometer are not inaccurate, the mountain is considerably higher than was previously supposed, 18,715 feet being the elevation usually given for it. The mere climbing of this peak, though creditable to the perseverance of Messrs. Meyer and Purtscheller, who, for sixteen days, worked at a height of over 13,000 feet, is of less geographical than biological importance, since the observations of previous explorers had made us fairly well acquainted with its general features, the 2,000 or 3,000 feet which were left for the Germans to traverse not being the most interesting of the 19,000. The lower reaches of the mountains are those which will in future years be found most important. Already they are dotted with native villages, some of which ascend to a height where the climate is almost temperate. In the fertile, well-watered valleys of this volcanic mountain all crops can grow, from the fruits and grains of the tropics to the cereals and garden vegetables of the North. At 5,900 feet the last banana is passed, when a forest region is entered, which extends to about 11,000 feet. Then come grass-covered lava fields, which, we have seen, extend to between 15,000 and 16,000 feet, and, in detached patches, even further, though the zones of vegetation, of which there are six well defined, vary a little in different exposures. After this lichens and mosses assert their sway, until snow and ice stop the upward range of life. Kilimanjaro may, therefore, with its sister peaks, become, if not the most lucrative of the German possessions in Africa--and Sir Samuel Baker declares that he never saw anything in Africa except ivory "worth a shilling the pound"---at least the most important. For here Europeans can live in comfort; and no doubt, in the ages that are before us, sanatoriums like those on the Indian hills will be established on the heights of Kilimanjaro. The Germans are, indeed, fortunate in this respect. For if they have entered the field of African colonisation rather late in the day, they have secured in this summit in their East Coast possessions a health resort rivalled only by the Cameroons Peak in their pestilential territory on the Western shore of the Continent.

THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION,—MAY 1 AND 5.

(Before Wilson, J.)

STEPHEN vs. STEPHEN.

The respondent in this case, which was a suit for divorce brought by a wife, did not enter any appearance or defend the suit, and in January last a decree nisi for divorce was obtained against him by the petitioner. Mr. Pugh now applied to the Court, on behalf of the respondent, for a rule to the petitioner to show cause why the Court should not set aside the decree nisi, or require further inquiry or have the affidavits of the applicant filed and placed on the record for consideration should it be deemed fit to make the decree absolute, or otherwise deal with the case as justice might demand. Mr. Pugh in support of the application said: The matter has been discussed by Mr. Justice Bayley at Bombay who reviewed all the English cases bearing on the point, as for example, Stoate v. Stoate, 2 Sw. and Tr., 384; Boulton v. Boulton, 2 Sw. and Tr., 405 and deplored the non-existence in this country of a Queen's Proctor. The 16th section of the Indian Divorce Act (No. IV. of 1869) provides that at any time after a decree nisi has been granted, and before such decree has been made absolute, any person shall be at liberty, in such manner as the High Court, by general or special order from time to time, directs, to show cause why the said decree should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion or by reason of material facts not being brought before the Court; and that on cause being so shown, the Court shall deal with the case by making the decree absolute or by reversing the decree nisi, or by requiring further inquiry or otherwise as justice may demand.

Wilson, J.—What is the general character of the case? Which do you allege, collusion or suppression of material facts?

Mr. Pugh.—Both. The respondent's affidavit in support of this application states that he married the petitioner, who had been a Mahomedan, on October 1888, she having on the previous day been baptised as a Christian. That after their marriage she became acquainted with one Mr. Creet, and at her request, he was engaged to teach her English, and after a time, besides visiting respondent's house for that purpose, used to visit it at all times and up to a late hour in the night as a friend. That in December 1888 during respondent's absence from the house she allowed Mr. Creet to put his arm round her neck and kiss her, on learning which the respondent thrashed him and turned him out of the house. That petitioner and respondent made it up together on the next day upon the distinct agreement that Mr. Creet should be forbidden the house. That during his visits to the house Mr. Creet was guilty of various other familiarities with the petitioner. That on several occasions in January and July 1889, during the respondent's absence from the house, petitioner without his knowledge or assent visited Mr. Creet at his private residence. That in November last she left respondent's house with the ostensible object of going with her mother to Dacca for a fortnight; but in reality stayed in Calcutta and instituted this suit for divorce against him, of which suit he knew nothing till he was served with the summons. That after the institution of the said suit the petitioner, who was the owner of the premises No. 31-1, Theatre-road, subject to a mortgage for Rs. 14,000, told respondent that if he would promise not to enter an appearance in the suit she would make over to him the said premises in Theatre-road, which he could if he wished, settle for the benefit of their child, who was to remain in his custody. But that in case he would not consent, and opposed her in getting a decree in the said suit, she would revert to her former religion of a Mahomedan and not part with the custody of her child, but bring her up as a Mahomedan.

That the respondent agreed with the petitioner that he would not, and did not, enter an appearance and defend the suit. That before the decree was made he consulted his attorney with reference to the carrying out of the agreement between him and petitioner as stated above. That after the decree had been obtained, the respondent's attorney had an interview with the petitioner's attorney, who told him the petitioner had made up her mind not to carry out the agreement as to the premises in Theatre-road, but was prepared to give the respondent Rs. 10,000. That the said suit had been managed on her behalf by the said Mr. Creet and that the suit was not a bonâ fide one, but was brought by the petitioner in order to obtain a dissolution of their marriage solely with the object of marrying the said Mr. Creet with whom, as respondent was informed, and verily believed, the petitioner had on many occasions since her marriage with the respondent committed adultery. That the respondent had not been guilty of adultery or cruelty to his wife.

Wilson, J.—There is nothing whatever in the affidavit except an allegation that he was a party to the corrupt bargain. There is no reasonable suspicion against the petitioner. He merely says, he believes she committed adultery with Mr. Creet.

Mr. Pugh having read the affidavit of Aratoon Simon Galstaun, his Lordship inquired whether he put it as a corrupt bargain negotiated between the two attorneys.

Mr. Pugh.—It does not seem that my client's attorney was employed in making the bargain at all.

Wilson, J.—This represents the two attorneys as parties to the bargain.

Counsel then cited in support of his contention the cases of—Boulton v. Boulton and Page 2 Sw. and Tr. 405; Stoate v. Stoate, 2 Sw. and Tr. 384; King v. King, I. L.R., 6 Bomb. 416; and Clements v. Clements and Thomas, 3 Sw. and Tr. 394. In King v. King it was ordered that the petitioner should appear in Court in person for examination, and the case was adjourned for that purpose. What happened then does not appear in the report.

Wilson, J.—Who is to cross-examine her?

Mr. Pugh.—That is the difficulty. There is no Queen's Proctor here.

Wilson, J.—In England the divorce law has two provisions—the first, for the protection of the interest of the parties; and the second, for the protection of public morality. In this country the legislature seems deliberately to have left out the second provision.

Mr. Pugh.—There being no Queen's Proctor here, and no other authority established in his place, any one who is willing to intervene ought, I contend, to be allowed to intervene.

Counsel then asked for a rule in the terms of section 16 of the Divorce Act, the terms of which have been already set out.

Wilson, J.—That is really a motion for a new trial.

Mr. Pugh.—It comes to that.

Wilson, J.—Suppose these affidavits are put up with the papers in the suit, and notice is given to the petitioner, and she goes into the witness box, who is to examine her unless she is examined by her counsel and answers 'No.' when the truth of each allegation is put to her.

Mr. Pugh.—That is the difficulty.

Wilson, J.—There is this difficulty as to section 16. This is an Act taken from the English Act, and yet one is to put an interpretation on the section totally different from that put on corresponding section in the English Act. Under the Indian Act no public officer is provided like the Queen's Proctor, to intervene in cases which seem suitable for such intervention.

Mr. Pugh.—Section 7 of the Act provides that subject to the provisions contained in the Act, the Indian Courts shall act and give relief on principles and rules, which in the opinion of the said Courts are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Divorce Court in England for the time being acts and gives relief. Section 16 says any person may intervene; i. e., according to the English practice, any person may do so, except the respondent or some one moving at his instance. Yet in practice only the Queen's Proctor moves.

Wilson, J.—In England there have been numerous instances of private interveners.

Mr. Pugh.—In the contemplation of the Act the great mass of the cases would be intervened in, by the Queen's Proctor. A liberal interpretation should be placed on section 16.

His Lordship intimated that he would take time to consider the matter, and on Wednesday delivered the following judgement:—

I shall follow the course adopted by the Bombay High Court in King v. King, I.L.R., 6 Bomb. The affidavits which have now been filed by the respondent and others in this matter will be put up with the record of this suit. As in the Bombay case, when the case comes on for the decree to be made absolute I shall not allow the respondent to be heard, but I shall direct that notice be given to the petitioner's attorney that her decree shall not be made absolute till the matter of collusion has been fully cleared up. She must take what course she may be advised in the matter.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little book.

are written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hunts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE INVINCIBLE ARMADA.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF SCHILLER.
BY A BRITISH OFFICER.

Affavit Deus, et dissipati sunt.—Elizabethan Medal.

SHE comes, she comes, the southern haughty fleet,
Borne on the bosom of the groaning main,
With shackles laden and a hated creed,
And threatened thunders from a thousand mouths.

Big with the world's destruction she bears on,
A swimming host of towering citadels,
(Such as the sea ne'er looked upon before,)
Her boastful name—The Invincible Armada.

How loud the title by the spreading fright,
She strikes on all around ;
Old Neptune, awestruck, with majestic pace
His burden onward bears.
Behold, she nears ! each gale, each storm is hushed.

See, where she floats right opposite thy shores,
Thou happy isle ! Fair ruler of the seas,
Great-hearted, proud Britannia !
'T is thou they threaten, with their galleon hosts :
Woe, woe to thy free-born gallant sons !
See, where she floats ! A thunder-laden cloud.

Who won thee, say, that high and priceless gem
That made thee queen of nations upon earth ?
Didst thou not conquer, from thine own proud kings,
Of nation's laws the wisest ever known ?
The Magna Charta, that turns your kings to citizens,
Your citizens to kings ?
The sea's proud sway ;
Hast thou not wrung it from a million foes,
In bloody battle on the foaming main ?
Who won it for thee ? Blush, ye nations all !
Who, but thy mind, thy spirit, and thy sword ?

Thou doomed one ! Mark those grand batteries yonder ;
Mark ! with forebodings of thy glory's fall ;
Throughout the world all eyes are strained on thee,
In anxious fear. Each freeman's heart beats high,
And every good and beauteous soul bewails,
In sorrowing brotherhood, thy glory's fall !

God, the Almighty, cast his eye on earth,
And saw thy foe's proud lion-flag unfurled ;
Saw, threatening, open thy too certain grave.
Shall, said He, shall my Albion pass away,

And perish thus my noblest heroes' stock ?
Oppression's rocky barrier crumble down,
And last obstruction 'against a tyrant's power
Be swept away from off the hemisphere ?
Shall manly worth's firm bulwark be destroyed ?
God, the Almighty, blew--
And scattered to each wind th' Armada crew !

LOVE IN SORROW.

WHAT shall I do for thee ? Thou hast my prayers,
Ceaseless as stars around the great white throne ;
No passing angel but to heaven bears
Thy name, wreathed round with some sweet orison ;
Yet evil on thy path may come and go,
Taking deliberate aim to lay thee low,
While I stand still, a looker-on, to prove
The penury and silence of my love !

How can I comfort thee ? my tears are thine ;
Full duteously upon thy griefs they wait ;
If thou art wronged, the bitterness is mine,
If thou art lonely, I am desolate ;
Yet still upon thy brow the darkness lies,
Still the drops gather in thy plaintive eyes,
The nails are sharp, the cross weighs heavily--
I cannot weep away one pang for thee !

The midnight deepens—and I cannot guide ;
The tempest threatens—and I cannot shield ;
I must behold thee wounded, tempted, tried,
Oh, agony—I may behold thee yield !
What boots that altar in my heart, whereon
Thy royal image stands, unbreathed upon,
And pure, and guarded from irreverent glance,
With a so vainly jealous vigilance ?

Oh, were this all ! But no—I have the power
To grieve thee by unwary tone or deed,
Or, niggard in my fear, to miss the hour
For comforting with hope thy time of need,
To hide, too shyly, half the love I feel,
Too roughly touch the wound I seek to heal,
Or even, (oh, pardon !) wayward and unjust,
To wrong thee by some moment of mistrust.

Yet I would die for thee, and thou for me ;
We know this of each other, and forgive
Those tremblings of our frail mortality,
So prompt to die, yet so afraid to live.
Lift we our eyes to heaven ! Love greets us thence Disrobed of its earthly impotence,
Even human love—below, still doomed to be Stronger than death, feebler than infancy !

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

It is gravely announced that the Nizam has been elected an honorary member of the Northbrook Club in England. Great condescension on the part of the Club.

THE difference between His Highness Siyajirao Holkar and his mother have been made up, and they have together gone to Nowsari.

THE Mysore mines yielded last year gold worth Rs. 20,00,000.

A STRIKING proof of the futility of moral text-books is afforded by a late incident in the London Police Courts. On the person of a burglar caught breaking into a fishmonger's shop in the city, was found a slip of paper filled with the following writing :—

“‘Keep good company or none,’ ‘Honesty is the best policy,’ ‘Drink leads to ruin,’ ‘Honour thy father and thy mother,’ ‘Civility costs nothing,’ ‘Do not mock at sacred things.’”

AN infant, two and a half years old, of the Teli caste, has lately been given in marriage at Ramkristopore, Howrah, to a man aged thirty seven.

IN consequence apparently of recruiting difficulty, Government have withdrawn the orders against recruiting for Native regiments from Afghanistan consequent upon the number of desertions during the Afghan War, and have sanctioned the formation of new Afridi companies in certain selected regiments.

THE following “home news” comes to us all the way from Hyderabad in the Deccan, by way of the far Punjab :—

“A correspondent sends to the Lahore paper an account of what he mildly describes as ‘a strange event’ which occurred at a village called Banagram in the sub-division of Jessore in Lower Bengal. In his own words :—‘A Bengalee pleader, named Chatterjea, swooned away in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate after finishing his pleadings in a case. The doctors, after examination, decided that death had taken place. The corpse was accordingly taken to the cremation ground, and directly the fire was applied to it, there was a terrific noise like that of a thunderclap, and the body flew up to a height of about 100 feet and fell into the river that flowed past the cremation ground. The body was no more seen as it sunk down directly it fell. The phenomenon has created a sensation in the village, and the superstitious among natives are attributing the thing to causes which only the superstitious can believe.’—Hyderabad Record, 9th May.

IT will be remembered that soon after the executors of the late General Nassau Lees sold the Times of India to the editor Mr. Curwen and the manager Mr. Kane, they were presented with an address of grateful appreciation by the employés on the establishment. On the eve of Mr. C. E. Kane's departure for Europe, there was on the 10th another meeting of the servants to present him with an address. The two proprietors of the Times of India have subscribed liberally, out of their pockets, in aid of the Provident Fund which their employés have started.

IT is said that as many as 61 Parsis have been admitted into the Poona Volunteer corps, and they are undergoing recruit drill with commendable assiduity. Meanwhile, news comes that the relations between the European and Eurasian members of the Poona Volunteer corps on the one side and the Parsees on the other have already become strained, and the former have taken objection to the admission of the latter.

THERE is at least one hero and statesman among our Mahomedan brethren of Madras. He glories in the characteristic name of Mahomed Anwar-ud-Din. Speaking at the late annual meeting of the Mahomedan Association of Madras, for the purpose of inducing his co-religionists to educate themselves, “If Russia attempted to invade India,” he is reported to have said, “she would not only be repulsed, but lose all her conquests in Central Asia, in governing which educated Indian Mahomedans would be called on to help. Mahomedans would then reap the reward of their labours.”

THE Opium Agent, Behar, Mr. W. Kemble is Gazetted to act as Commissioner of the Patna Division, during the absence, on deputation, of Mr. C. C. Stevens, Mr. W. H. D'Oyly, Magistrate and Collector, Mozufferpur, acting as Opium Agent.

MR. P. G. Melitus, Bengal Civil Service, officiates as Postmaster-General, Bengal, for Mr. Kisch, promoted temporarily to the Directorship-General of the Post Office of India.

THE Damuda-Rupnarain Survey Division has been abolished from the 1st instant.

THE Chitpore Lock of the Circular Canal, hitherto closed for examination and repairs, has been re-opened for traffic since yesterday.

IN October 1886, the Bengal Government promulgated rules for the payment of revenue not exceeding Rs. 50 in amount a year by means of postal money-order in the Burdwan and Dacca Divisions. The system being found successful, the rules were, in April of the following year, extended to all the districts in the Lower Provinces. In March, 1888, further extension was ordered in respect of all demands on account of land revenue, of whatever amount, and of Zemindari and other cesses. In July 1889, the system was experimentally introduced for six months in the Burdwan Division for payment of rent. The Board of Revenue then recommended the general adoption of the system, but the Lieutenant-Governor is cautious enough and is unwilling “to extend too rapidly a change which may have important consequences, and considers that the power conferred by the Act (Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885) should be exercised in the divisions which in their circumstances most resemble Burdwan.” Accordingly, from the 1st July 1890, payment of rent by means of postal money-order has been authorized in the Burdwan, Rajshahye, Presidency, and Dacca Divisions.

THE Calcutta University has commenced to announce the results of the last examinations. In Medicine, 9 students have passed the Preliminary Scientific L. M. S. ; 20 in the First L. M. S. ; and 13 in the Second L. M. S. It is bungling too long over the Entrance and First Arts Examinations.

FROM the commencement of the current month, the Lieutenant-Governor has been pleased to empower the Port Officer of Calcutta to receive the fees payable in respect of surveys in the Port of Calcutta ; to receive declarations of Surveyors in the Port of Calcutta ; to deliver certificates of survey of steam-ships, to give notice to owners or masters of steam-ships when certificates are ready for delivery, and to receive expired, cancelled, or suspended survey certificates in the Port of Calcutta.

These duties, we believe, were hitherto entrusted to the Port Commissioners, and is it in the interests of the Port that they are now transferred to the Port Officer? We hope there will be no friction between the Surveyor and the Officer of the Port.

IN Russia, they have proposed to connect St. Petersburg with Archangel, a distance of over 500 miles, by a railway to be worked entirely by electricity. The cost is estimated at a little over 3,000*l* a mile, including rolling stock. The current will be supplied from a series of generating stations distributed along the line. It will be necessary to span a wide stretch of country between the Baltic and the White Sea.

PROFESSOR Kaufmann, of Paris, is said to have successfully treated snake-bite by putting a tight ligature over the wound, and injecting into the wound, with a morphia syringe, a mixture consisting of one part of chromic acid to two parts of water.

THE latest development of surgery is dégraissage, or the removal of fat from the body. It is reported by a Paris correspondent that Doctors Marx and Demars successfully operated upon a literary man, M. Hiroguelle. They raised the skin and cut away four-and-quarter pounds of the adipose tissue. Of course, the patient was put under chloroform. The skin was stitched up and it healed in about a week. The patient is said to have suffered only from headache, the effect of the chloroform.

A BARISAL correspondent communicates to the Statesman the following information of archæologic interest :—

"About eight years ago a couple of copper plates of the same size, together with brass idols, numbering 40 in all, were found by a Mahomedan cultivator when levelling a mound at Asraffore, thannat Rtipura, in the district of Dacca. One of the plates some parts of which had been completely mutilated by age, was purchased from the finder by Babu Protap Chandra Bannerjee, the well-known Zemindar of Murapara in Dacca, and was presented by him to the Asiatic Society. It was deciphered by Raja Rajendralala Mitra, and a fac simile of the inscription and an English translation of the same were published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society. The plate was said to have borne the names of Raja Khadga Shinlia and his wife Ranee Probbabati, who made a gift of certain lands to a Buddhist monastery in the eighth century, i. e. eleven hundred years ago. I have seen another plate which is still in the possession of the Mahomedan who is not willing to part with it unless Rs. 25 be given him. No part of this plate has been mutilated at all. At present a few idols remain with the Mahomedan after distributing most of them to the neighbouring Hindoos who have taken to worship them. Any one interested or willing to purchase the above plate and the remaining idols may write for further information."

We hope this will draw the notice of the Asiatic Society. If they do not care, the trustees of the Indian Museum ought to secure the plate and as many of the idols as possible.

It is said that the head of the Police of Rampore State was, on his way to Moradabad, set upon by four men, one of whom attempted to stab but was shot dead by him.

THE Lahore Tribune accuses Mr. Warburton, District Superintendent of Police, Amritsar, among other things, of compelling people to make false declarations that they have never been ill-used in the manner described by the Tribune previously; that he is "indebted to the amount of Rs. 70,000, of which some Rs. 25,000 are moneys extracted from Amritsar people. Our contemporary adds, "We are prepared to prove many of these debts, and have knowledge of them all." "Other serious charges are brought against Mr. Warburton and his subordinates, and an appeal is made to the Lieutenant-Governor for the instant suspension of Mr. Warburton. Matters have now gone too far, and the only course open to Sir James Lyall is to call upon Mr. Warburton to clear himself of these charges by prosecuting the Tribune."

MR. Le Maistre, Deputy Magistrate of Allahabad, last week, convicted one J. Bose, booking-clerk at Nynee station, under Section 417 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50; in default, to suffer three months' imprisonment. The accused took from the complainant, Massanut Lachmin, Rs. 3-13 as the fare from Nynee station to Fyzabad, while the actual fare was Rs. 2-13, thereby appropriating one rupee for himself.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

BEFORE the King of the Belgians and all the members of the English royal family, the Queen, on Monday, unveiled the equestrian statue of the Prince Consort at Windsor,—the Jubilee gift of the women and children of the United Kingdom.

Her Majesty has been on a visit to Baron Rothschild at his seat at Waddesden Manor, Aylesbury.

DJEVDET Pasha, the Turkish Minister of Justice, has been dismissed in consequence of his action in the Moussa Bey case.

Several officers are under arrest for huge and systematic robberies of bombs from the Sebastopol magazines.

Destructive American cyclones are reported from Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, and Kansas. Hundreds of houses have fallen, and many persons been killed and more injured.

Influenza has reappeared in Warsaw and in acute form, this time attacking both men and cattle—horses in especial. Was it

On mules and dogs the infection first began;

And last, the vengeful arrows fixed on man?

we wonder. If the disease in its aggravated form is to make an immediate and second round of the world, the prospect is fearful indeed!

Stanley is going bravely through the penalties of greatness in Christendom. Having, besides escaping death, discovered the rich India rubber trees and been the guest of the Queen at Windsor Castle, he has, as usual, been made the hero of a poor medieval play for presenting him with the freedom of the city of London, as it is called.

The gasmen of Hamburg have gone into strike, leaving the city to darkness.

On the 13th, Lord Alcester was run over in Piccadilly by an omnibus, breaking three of his ribs. Notwithstanding, he is expected to recover. Even an English Lord is hard to kill.

THE Colonial Bill has been introduced in the German Reichstag. The new Chancellor explained that it was impossible for Germany to go back without loss of honour and purse. He assured the House that there was no conflict between Germany and England and no intention of any encroachment on the British sphere. Emin's mission will be confined to entering into relations with the tribes in the interior and making an estimate for the establishment of fortified stations; in other words, to strengthening Germany's position in East Africa. In unofficial language, it is the introduction of the thin end of the wedge. The Minister of course omitted all reference to the thousands of elephants' tusks on which poor Emin's huckstering heart is set. In the meantime, Emin's progress is not smooth and easy. The caravan has met with a serious check. After a five days' march, fully a quarter of the porters deserted in a body.—Major Wissmann bombarded and captured Lindi on the 10th.

Italy is as conciliatory to England. Speaking in the Chamber on the 13th, Signor Crispi said that Italy was in accord with England and Austria, and would not allow any revolution in the Balkan States which menaced the peace of Europe. Italy was content with her portion in Abyssinia. There was concord between Italy and England, and Italy would do nothing which England disapproved.

IN speaking on the Army Bill, on the 14th, Count Von Moltke declared that the European situation was a problem of ever increasing difficulty, and that the only guarantee for peace was a strong army.

SENATOR Plum has introduced a bill in the American Senate making the unit-value of the dollar, whether in silver or gold, legal tender. Senator Jones, in opening the debate, recommended free silver coinage. His remarks were received with many marks of approbation, shewing the direction of the wind.

THE Congress agitation is progressing valiantly in England, aided by loudly and expensively expressed sympathy from unexpected recruits in India. Just now there is cause enough.

The dog-star rages I say, 'tis past a doubt,

All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out:

Reuter, under date the 12th, reports :—

"The delegates of the Indian National Congress have addressed meetings at Bristol, where a telegram from Mr. Justice Norris, of the Calcutta High Court, was read, wishing every success to the movement. Sir Charles Hobhouse presided at meetings in several of the London divisions last week, and the Hardwicke Debating Society in the Temple, after four hours' warm debate, carried a resolution favouring Indian reform. A meeting of delegates takes place at Reading to-night, and on Friday the Manchester Reform Club will entertain them at dinner, and a meeting will take place afterwards. On the 20th instant the delegates will be at Birmingham, where they hold meetings under the presidency of General Phelps. On the 22nd instant, the Oxford Union will hold a debate, which the delegates have been specially invited to attend. During the Whitsuntide holidays, meetings will be stopped. Meetings will be held on the 2nd of June at Newcastle, and subsequently at Aberdeen, Dundee, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dublin. A meeting of ten federated associations of South Wales will be held at Cardiff on the 16th of June. Mr. Mudholkar Joshi and Mr. Eardley Norton, with Mr. Surendranath Banerjee, will take part in the later meetings."

THE governing body of the Imperial Institute has been formed to consist of 120 members. All the industries of the United Kingdom are to be represented. India will have 15 members. The Viceroy will elect 3, the different Provinces 6, the Chambers of Commerce 4, and the Native Institutions 2. The Congressists will not fail to make capital of this concession.

IN the House of Lords, Lord Cross, repeating the oft-given assurance of non-interference with the internal affairs of Native States, informed the House that he would ask the Viceroy of India to advise them to follow the factory legislation of British India. That is, of course, a Parliamentary way of enforcing the order in those States.

In the House of Commons, on the 14th, the Irish members stole a march on Government. The House being thin, the Irish moved the second reading of the Bill for the erection of Labourers' Dwellings. There was an attempt to adjourn the debate, but it proved unsuccessful. The adjournment was negatived and the second reading was agreed to without a division. Was the tyler—we mean the whip—fast asleep at his post? To recover countenance as it were, Mr. Balfour said that the vote for adjournment carried against Government, was without significance.

There is quiet in Crete, and the reserves have been disbanded.

Serious riots are reported from Bilbao—Spain—among the miners and other workmen on strike. Troops were called. They were received by the mob with volleys of stones. The military in reply fired on the mob, killing and injuring several.

MR. Bradlaugh has presented to the House of Commons a petition from 500 rayyets of Jessore accusing the Magistrate of cruelty and perversion, and praying for an enquiry. The Home Government has agreed to refer the matter to the India Government.

TEMPERANCE is gaining ground in Parliament. After three days' debate, the Lower House, in full assembly, has passed by 73 votes the Local Taxation Bill empowering County Councils to withdraw publicans' licenses by compensating the holders. That is Reuter's report. According to the Central News, the Bill to amend local taxation was rejected by as many votes.

MAHARAJA Sivaji Rao Holkar must put his house in order, without further delay. In the House of Lords, the Secretary of State for India, in reply to a question, announced that the last report was not favorable to the Maharaja's administration, but that there was no immediate intention of any interference in that quarter.

SOUDAN is not all peaceful yet. There is admitted to be much insecurity and great distress in the Eastern Districts. The dervishes of Tokar and Handoub occasionally raided on the neighbouring districts. The Soudan Trading Company, however, have been able to conclude agreements with Native Chiefs for growing cotton and opening up the Berber route.

THERE was a report in Paris that M. Pasteur was dead. The truth is he is in excellent health.

THE Times' correspondent at the Porte reports the dismissal, by the Sultan, of a swarm of Palace spies, who, in the language of the correspondent, while quite powerless for good, did a great deal of mischief by furnishing numerless fantastic reports to his Majesty. That means a saving of nearly 10,000/ a year, and a possibility of strengthening other Departments of the State.

THE Lieutenant-Governor left Calcutta on Tuesday, under the usual salute. A goodly number of officials and others were present at the Sealdah railway station to see him off. Sir Steuart Bayley, accompanied by Miss Bayley, Mrs. Colvin, Mr. Colvin, Private Secretary, and Captain Greenway, A.-D.-C., left for Cooch Behar by the ordinary train. After partaking of the hospitality of that Durbar, the party yesterday moved on by road to Buxa, where halting this day, they again drive on to-morrow, Sunday, to Falakotta, and thence on Monday the 19th to Julpaigori. Here there will be a halt of two days, and Darjeeling will be reached by road from Siligori on Thursday the 22nd. This is a rational and agreeable way of breaking the dangerous fall of temperature from the plains to the heights of the Himalayas.

MR. H. J. S. Cotton has been fully restored to the good graces of the Bengal Government. He has been confirmed as Secretary in the Financial and Municipal Departments, and will be taken in in the local legislative council in place of the deceased Mr. Macaulay, if only the Supreme Government will allow it.

If Sir Steuart Bayley can take to his bosom the Secretary who, by a secret compact with a professional agitator, contrived to insult him and royalty alike in the same breath, at a public meeting, by a pack of insolent boys, Lord Lansdowne too may well think it none of his business to part them.

THAT confirmation confirms Mr. C. E. Buckland as Senior, and Mr. K. G. Gupta as Junior, Secretary to the Board of Revenue.

THE new officiating Chief Secretary does not go to Darjeeling till after the arrival there of the Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Stevens will work away the period in Calcutta.

GO-A-HEAD again! There is at New York a juvenile actress of the age of seven, and she has found her match—in an actor of eight years of age! These little imps of the mimic art, precocious beyond their years, have actually concluded a treaty of marriage between them. It runs to the following effect:—

"We, the undersigned, do promise and vow three things in our names—first, that at the ages of 20 and 21 we will get married; second, that we will stay together for ten years and not get divorced; third, that at the ages of 30 and 31 we will retire from the stage and live in Fifth Avenue."

Notwithstanding this business-seeming transaction, there is romance at bottom. Indeed, a parol understanding, whatever may be its legal value, modifies the contract. The little actor is up to a considerable chivalry of sentiment. He has allowed his contingent inamorata the important privilege of changing her mind, saying, "Gertie, if you ever do marry another man, I will feel very much distressed, but I won't sue you." A superfluous piece of generosity.

GO-A-HEAD to the bitter end. There is at this moment a lady in the United States who boasts, and is ready to prove, that she has been married nine times since 1867! Thus she has tasted of the joys of matrimony once in two years and a half. Three of her husbands are dead and five divorced. Her ninth mate—rather than lord—has been only recently taken in—in every sense we are afraid, poor fellow! The advanced girlhood of the great Republic has adopted a new reading of the customary marriage vow of obedience to the husband. Instead of "I will obey you," the bride would say "I will Bay you!"—a novel formula suggestive of not the brightest prospect for the unhappy groom.

Such is the "advanced" solution of this important problem of marriage in the great democratic community beyond the Atlantic. These Americans at any rate have actually carried into practice the wildest suggestions of European speculators like Goethe. There is some thing to be said in favour of their choice. It must be a delicious prospect to enjoy a honeymoon every second year. The tree of matrimony is too often discerned to be an upas, but not before it grows to seed. Marriage is a nuisance only by flux of time. In its virgin freshness and purity, it is a right good thing. And the honeymoon—there is nothing like it! The go-a-head reform offers to surfeit you with it. Hurrah for Paradise Regained!

HERE is news that comes home to suffering humanity:—

"The ninth congress on internal medicine was closed at Vienna on April 18. Among the papers read at the last two sittings was one by Professor Senator, of Berlin, on Bright's disease, which created special interest. The Professor remarked that this terrible malady was not incurable, as was generally believed. The greatest importance was to be attached to the diet. Food containing albumen ought to be avoided, while fats and carbon hydrates were desirable. Fish and the meat of young animals might be given to patients, but not eggs. The milk cure and the koumiss cure had been found efficacious in many instances. Professor Ziemssen, of Munich, recommended hot-air baths and hot-water packings, while other speakers dwelt on the curative effect of prolonged rest in bed. Dr. Kleniperer, of Berlin, lectured on the treatment of fever. He recommended large doses of bicarbonate of sodium. Professor Eppinger, of Graz, reported on the newly discovered micro-organism cladotrix, which produces a disease similar to tuberculosis. Great interest was manifested in Professor Stricker's electric microscope, by which microscopical preparations under a magnifying power of 11,000 linear were made visible to an audience of 300 persons. The pulsating heart of a dog and the heart beats produced by suffocation were successfully demonstrated, and the experiments convinced the spectators that the teaching of natural science would be greatly assisted by this appliance. The next meeting of the Congress will be held in 1891, Wiesbaden."

Why should not there be an annual conference of the numerous medical men scattered throughout India, Burma, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements and China, and even Japan and Australia? It would do them and science a world of good to have such periodical opportunities of exchanging notes. No congress or society in Europe would afford them equal facilities. They are a class by themselves, confined to a sphere of their own, in a different climate from Europe, engaged in battling with new forms of disease under different conditions of not atmosphere only but also society. Such a class can expect little sympathy from medical men in Great Britain, far less from those on the Continent. At the same time, these Eastern physicians and surgeons have doubtless a stock of experience and ideas to communicate which, valuable to the East, is not to be despised by the faculty in general throughout the globe, but which naturally perishes in the absence of a record. We commend the proposition to the enterprising founder of the new popular medical journal, the Medical Record.

PREPARATIONS are making, or rather orders on that behalf are issuing thick and fast, for the next census. It will be taken on the night of the 26th February 1891. Mr. C. J. O'Donnell has been appointed Provincial Superintendent of the Operations for Bengal. A happy selection. Mr. O'Donnell has a facile and smart pen, and he is, we believe, blessed with the patience and tact that other penmen of his grade in the service lack. Certainly, he has, from an early period, been accustomed to statistical inquiries and economical speculations.

With regard to the Census of 1891, the Commissioners of Divisions have received some introductory instructions. They are reminded to be particularly careful about two initial proceedings—namely, the accurate and exhaustive demarcation of all inhabited areas, and the appointment of intelligent, and, if possible, educated enumerators. These need not be appointed immediately, but a list of them should be prepared without delay, selecting men capable and willing to do the work. In rural parts, it will not do to blindly depend on the village Panchayets without enquiring into their educational qualifications for the work. It is suggested to choose young men with the requisite literary proficiency, leaving the Panchayets to aid the youthful enumerators by their influence and local information. The importance of good and trustworthy enumerators is beyond question, and we trust Government will not be wanting in its efforts, nor niggard of purse, to employ them in proper time to make a proper return.

THE whole of Dacca District has been thrown into commotion by an extraordinary occurrence. We translate from a local vernacular paper:

"Srinagar and Sholaghur are two villages in Bikrampore. The Babus (Zemindars) of Srinagar are a wellknown family; Sholaghur is the birthplace of the Hon'ble Justice Chunder Madhub Ghose. Of late, Srinagar and Sholaghur have been at feud on many points. From Dacca the way to Srinagar lies through Sholaghur, where passengers leave their boats in the canal, and proceed on foot to Srinagar. Recently, on the occasion of the wedding of Babu Kali Prasanna Ghose's son, the bridegroom's party went to Srinagar via Sholaghur. After the marriage, the bridegroom and bride with the bridegroom's friends took boat at Sholaghur and left for Dacca. In the meantime, an affair took place which dumbfounds us to hear. At 2 O'clock in the morning, a man with the title [titic] of Khasnavis, with about 200 or 300 men armed with clubs, boarded the boats and attacked the boatmen and belaboured many of the gentlemen within an inch of their lives, (besides) smashing the boat and wasting the goods and articles contained in it. Many gentlemen saved their lives from the fury of the attack by swimming. Next day, many reached Dacca naked and barefooted. Some are still laid up from the beating received.

"We are sorry to hear that the aforesaid Khasnavis is dewan or steward to Justice Chunder Madhub Ghose. It is said that it was under the orders of this Khasnavis that the lattials (professional clubmen) committed this horrible outrage upon the harmless gentlemen at dead of night. One of the leading pleaders of the Dacca bar was amongst the wedding party, of course he could not come out unscathed. The pleader, we hear, by giving information to the police, has caused some 12 or 13 men to be arrested. Khasnavis, we hear, has escaped and cannot be found.

"Every one is pained at hearing the villainous conduct of Mr. Justice Ghose's servant. Mr. Ghose will, we are confident, by surrendering the wicked to the police, see them duly punished. The hon'ble Judge should keep a strict eye upon his servants so that, under cover of his good name and wealth, they might not commit such crimes any more."

WITH an eye to the traffic from transmission to town of the imports of the kerosine oil landed at Budge Budge down the river, a branch of the Eastern Bengal State Railway was run up—or down perhaps—to that country port. But it was no sooner opened than closed—for having nothing to do. It is not only cheaper but every way more handy to transport the cargoes of oil from the Budge Budge dépôt to Calcutta by boats. The Railway authorities are doubtless thinking of a reduction of their rates. But can they without risk make a reduction out of all proportion to their general tariff for all their lines throughout?

The reduction must be considerable, we suspect, to enable the Railway to crush the competition of the boats. But will it be worth the Railway's while to do so? Can the railway afford to come down so far? At any rate, the matter was worth considering before going to all the expense of opening a new, however short, line to catch a single traffic which has now, after all, given it the slip. Who is responsible for the waste of public resources?

AT the Allahabad High Court, on May 9, Mr. Justice Straight made some very pertinent remarks on the ways of the Police in this country. It was at the hearing of the appeal of Maurakhan and three others against a sentence of the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore, condemning them to death for murder. According to the prosecution, Bugwandin and Ramcharan, his son, whilst returning from the market of Hamiapore were set upon by men armed with clubs. The assailants knocked down the son and knocked off the father from his pony, which they took away, the said pony having wallets containing jewellery attached to the saddle. Bugwandin died some weeks afterwards from the injuries to the head he received in the assault. Evidence was given that, before his death, he recognised the four accused as his assailants, and the son also identified them. Mr. Justice Straight, with the full concurrence of Mr. Justice Brodhurst, remarked in his judgment:—

"The deceased was taken to Cawnpore, and it is obvious from what appears in the diaries that no intimation ever came from him as to who the persons were that assaulted him until after the police had already themselves fixed upon these four men. . . . The attack upon deceased took place on the 21st December, 1889. Before the 3rd January these four men were under the control of the police, though, according to the charge-sheet, they were not arrested until the 18th January. The learned Sessions Judge has made some strong remarks on this matter, and has said, what is perfectly true, that for a period of more than a fortnight these men were in a condition of unauthorised arrest. If the police will act in this way, they must expect that their conduct will be regarded with the gravest suspicion, and that what happens while this unauthorised arrest continues will always be regarded with the greatest suspicion by us. I think the police made up their minds that because three of these men were absent from their homes, and that the fourth was found under circumstances considered to be suspicious, that they were the persons who had perpetrated the crime. . . . Nothing was found in their houses. Looking to all the circumstances of the case, I think it would be most unsafe to go upon the evidence produced as establishing the guilt of the accused. The appeal is allowed, and prisoners will be released."

We hope these remarks will be taken notice of by Government. Mr. Straight usually speaks with the manliness of an English judge, and he has the further advantage of not being a lunatic.

WE are delighted to see Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji's Parliamentary prospects brightening up. The Central Finsbury Liberal and Radical Association met recently to consider the following Resolution:—

"That the Executive Committee recommend to the Council as Parliamentary candidate for Central Division of Finsbury the Hon'ble Dadabhai Naoroji, who being in a position to devote his whole time and attention to the service of the constituency and representing the great cause of 250 millions of our fellow subjects, is, in the opinion of the Executive Committee, the best eligible candidate, and likely to regain the seat for the Liberal and Radical party. The Executive Committee further recommend Mr. Naoroji to the Council because of his well-known views in favour of Home Rule and his adhesion to the London programme."

As a result, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji was definitely selected as their Parliamentary candidate. The old Association, who nominated Mr. Richard Eve, may still put difficulties in Mr. Naoroji's path. But then, whether in love or war, Eve is a slippery name for an ally. Their Eve may give them the slip any moment. He is understood to be contemplating a strategic movement to carry himself out of the field before it is too late. His friends are indignant that he is not earnest in his own cause, and seems not unwilling to retire as soon as he can do so gracefully. We wish him God speed! It is time enough to have a Baboo installed in old St. Stephen's historic chapel. The whirligig of Time brings in its own revenges. The irony of Fate would be a myth if it did not send Lord Salisbury's own "black man" to the House of Commons, to confront his Lordship's own ministry!

THE new organ of the Kayastha community of Behar is destined at no distant date to make its mark. The Kayastha Gazette is now in its 19th number, and it is already one of the ablest members of the press. It needs only a proper material expansion to constitute it a journal of weight and authority. As it is, the single small sheet of which it consists, is brimful of readable matter. The present issue opens with an excellent leading article on the Importance of Social Reform. Taking for his text Mr. Justice Telang's late speech at the Elphinstonian gathering, the writer notices the speaker's remark that "he did not disapprove of the agitation in favour of election to Legislative Councils, but asked them to remember that they yet required the life to make such systems work," and adds—

"This remark is both pithy and profound. Yet in order to work out our political salvation, we must attain a certain standard of elevation in our social life, and although we do not go so far as to say that it would be like putting the cart before the horse to begin with political agitation before you have reached an Utopian standard of perfection in your social system, yet it would be but the bare truth to say that social reformation is the wheel of political reformation; without the wheels the horse may pull and pull ever so hard, but it will be able only to drag. You cannot have the one without the other, the two are interdependent on each other for progress; both must be synchronous to be successful."

UNDER the head "To Kayastha Students. [By one of Them.]" occurs a remarkable discourse, much too well written for the most part for almost any student, Brahman or Kayastha, or, for the matter of that, British, made up apparently of scraps of Smiles and other popular writers, but none the less useful on that account. In the Local division is another leading article of so formidable a kind that the conductors have deemed it necessary to anticipate criticism and whittle down their responsibility by labelling this portion of the paper "The Independent Section." This article is significantly headed "The Government of Bengal Defied, or Mr. Tweedie out-Tweedied by Himself." It is a bold and unsparing attack on the District Judge. Local journalism in this country, as a rule, is feeble journalism on matters local. It is usually the vehicle of the most fulsome flattery of local magnates and the powers generally. For the rest, its role is confined to advertising small projects of doubtful utility and obscure nobodies of doubtful ambitions. Local grievances it habitually ignores. We trust the Kayastha Gazette will steer clear of these liabilities.

The Kayastha organ charges Mr. Tweedie with going out of his way to arbitrate, in a private, irregular, or at least extra judicial way, in the differences of parties,—differences which may any day come before him in his official capacity of Judge. The Gazette quotes the Bengal Government Circular No. 25, dated February 20th, 1873, which lays down the "Rules of Arbitration by Public Officers" as following:—

- (a) No Public Officer shall act as an arbitrator unless authorized by his immediate superior or unless directed by a competent court.
- (b) No Public Officer shall act as an arbitrator in any case which is likely to come before him in any shape in virtue of any Judicial or Executive Office which he may be holding.

And with this circular before him, cries our contemporary:—

"And with this circular in existence, not only in existence, but in force, not only technically in force, but in universal application, Mr. Tweedie has chosen to constitute himself, or allowed himself to be named, an arbitrator in the division of the estate of the late Nawab Syed Lutf Alli Khan, C.I.E., of Patna city, between the surviving sons and daughters of the deceased, among whom there are disputes of various sorts as to succession and extent of shares; and for this purpose, Mr. Tweedie has during the past week, not infrequently even subtracted from his Court-hours to go to Patna City on his charitable errand. It is certain that the words of the circular in question do not admit of being quibbled into meaning anything in extenuation of Mr. Tweedie's conduct; it is also certain that Mr. Tweedie has not been 'authorized by his immediate superior' or 'directed by a competent Court' to act as an arbitrator in the matter, and it is more than certain—not only 'likely'—that the matter in question will come before Mr. Tweedie in more than one shape in his judicial capacity as Judge of Patna."

We hope the attention of Government and the High Court will be drawn to this new direction of judicial activity.

IN another column will be found a letter from a sufferer disclosing the insecurity of life and property still in the heart of Deltaic Bengal and the laxity of the administration of criminal justice.

THURSDAY se'nnight, in midday, the village of Sanko, in the Burdwan district, one mile south of the Kanoo Junction, was, in a few hours, laid in ruins, leaving an insignificant wreck behind. A disastrous fire broke out in Hazrapara, and spread until it entirely destroyed not only that quarter but also Babupara, Bamunpara, Pathukpara, Chooterpara and Baruiapara. Above 450 houses belonging to about 200 persons have been completely burned down. Only the Raipara was saved, where the people took protection that night, for not a tree was left elsewhere to give any shelter.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1890.

THE ICONOCLAST IN BEHAR.

THE present Administration of Bengal maintains its popularity. Notwithstanding certain adverse signs, the country on the whole is still disposed not simply to treat official measures with perfect fairness but even with extraordinary liberality. A crucial instance has just occurred. The press generally has received the Government orders on the Durbhungah Temple case in good spirit. Those orders were announced in this journal in due time. Mr. Beadon has been declared incapable of being retained in charge of the Durbhungah district and has been transferred. The Mahomedan Vice-Chairman has been condemned as unfit for his position, and as he is not a servant of Government, his resignation meets the case so far as he is concerned. The Government has announced that it lays no claim to the temple site, while the municipality have been advised to sanction the construction of a new temple.

These orders are characterised by Sir Steuart Bayley's usual amiability and some practical-mindedness. They evince tact to be sure, but no statesman-like grip of facts—no firm determination to do the right to the full measure. The Bengal office review of the proceedings is an elaborate painstaking document of considerable ability. The Government appreciated the difficulty of the subject, and the writer approaches it with great circumspection. But that hesitation itself had in it, unknown to him, a sinister element, which hampered his powers and led to an unsatisfactory result. There was doubtless a disposition to do justice. Unfortunately, it was a sense of justice handicapped with a lively wish to save a brother Civil Servant, high in the service and of high connections. The broad salient circumstances of the case were too plain for any Secretariat sophist to confuse and confound the public about them. The aggrieved Hindus had thoroughly proved the substantial nature of their grievance. A patient and protracted official inquiry had established a grave official outrage on the religious feelings of the people. All that remained for the Government reviewer was to whittle down its proportions, and no opportunity for this was lost. There is in the Government decision a visible leaning to lend ear to every excuse of the offending officer, and to put the victims in the wrong.

The aggrieved Hindus have just cause to complain that the Lieutenant-Governor has been rather too lenient with Mr. Beadon. Who will say that leniency is never a virtue in a ruler? The virtue may, however, be misplaced, or carried too far, and we do consider that it has been so in the present instance. The question had assumed a serious aspect from its connection with religion, and it behoved Government to deal with it frankly, without the slightest personal regards. What boots it to insist that the temple party endeavoured to make too much of this religious element, and spoilt their case by resorting to falsehood, as well as by violation of the municipal procedure. That when they received a notice from the municipality not to go on building the temple, they set up a false plea that an old temple was being merely repaired, in consequence of its being out of repairs and falling down, and that there was no new construction. On this point, the evidence is declared to be altogether against them. We confess we are not prepared to go so far. But even at the worst, this is a minor matter, which does not affect the substantial merits of the case. The Government in fairness makes sufficient admission in favour of the people. The Lieutenant-Governor says that he "is satisfied that at the time when the new temple was commenced, there was not, and had not been any building in existence on the same site. Upon this point the evidence appears to be conclusive. Whether there had or had not been a temple at some previous period on approximately the same site is more doubtful. That there had at one time been a building there is certain, and it is equally certain that in recent years there had been a shrine or asthan with a sacred image kept by a devotee or holy man in charge." This had either fallen in decay or may have been carried away in the fall of a pepul tree. This as regards the religious aspect of the case. As to its legal aspect, the temple party were in the first instance fortunate in the Commissioner's finding in their favor. Mr. Boxwell held that the procedure laid down in section 175 of the Bengal Municipal Act not having been observed, the action of the Municipal authorities was illegal. But the Legal Remembrancer, with whom the Advocate-General concurs, differs from this view, and says that section 175 does not apply to cases coming under section 241. The Lieutenant-Governor accepts this view. We confess we incline to think with the Commissioner. The present case is no doubt governed by section 241 of Part VI. of the Act, but the procedure is laid down in section 175 of Part V.

For all that, Sir Stuart Bayley is satisfied that the action of the municipality was not strictly or technically illegal. He rightly thinks the question of legality of much less importance than the administrative questions involved. Considering these questions fully, he administers a sharp censure to Mr. Beadon. The following extracts from the Government letter express the better side of the Governmental consciousness:—

"Turning now to the administrative aspect of the question, the Lieutenant-Governor is constrained to remark first of all on the neglect of proper business precautions on the part of the Municipal authorities. Mr. Beadon had his attention called to the fact that the building was being begun without a license in October; yet for two months the work was allowed to go on without any effective action being taken to call the responsible persons to account. Under a proper administrative system this would not have occurred; the question would have been definitely settled one way or the other in October, and all subsequent difficulties would have been obviated. The proceedings, as Mr. Beadon himself says, show first extreme dilatoriness, and lastly undue haste; in other words, by neglecting to deal in the first instance in a business-like manner with a tolerably simple question, the Municipal authorities found themselves involved afterwards in very troublesome complications which they endeavoured to tear asunder without considering the consequence.

In considering the general question of Mr. Beadon's responsibility, the Lieutenant-Governor cannot hold him, as Chairman of the Municipality, free from blame for the slack system of administration adverted to in paragraph 2. It was in this that the whole trouble had its origin, and it is impossible to acquit Mr. Beadon on the plea that it was badly served. When the neglect of the first few months had led up in its natural course, to a state of things which required the most careful handling, an accurate enquiry into all the facts, deliberate judgment, and special clearness in the orders passed, Mr. Beadon's action was characterised by the conspicuous absence of all these requisites. In the concluding words of your letter, you justly observe: 'The falseness of the temple party, Mr. Beadon's rashness, and thoughtlessness about consequences with the nature of the subordinates through whom Mr. Beadon worked, led to the misfortune.' While concurring generally in this view, the Lieutenant-Governor must point out that to Mr. Beadon's heedless ignorance of the nature of his subordinates, and his placing undue confidence in a man whose antecedents could have indicated the necessity of the greatest vigilance is to be imputed a great portion of the trouble."

It was all to no purpose. As soon as the Lieutenant-Governor came to award punishment, his hand faltered. The outrageous Magistrate has doubtless had the benefit of astute advice from his brethren of the service. Unlike our own Surendra Nath Banerjee, who, on being caught in the act of tampering with the record, sought to browbeat his superiors into silence, Mr. Beadon candidly admitted the error he had committed, and threw himself on the mercy of the Government. He expressed his profound regret for what had happened, and protested in the most solemn manner that he did not mean that the temple should be so hastily demolished, although there was no denying that his orders were capable of that construction. He referred to his past career of 27 years as affording testimony of his usual conciliatory attitude towards the Hindoos or any other religious section of the community. After this appeal for mercy from an officer "of ripe experience and of unquestioned ability and industry," the Head of the Government was bound to come to the rescue, and appease the public as best he could, by pronouncing on him a tolerably severe wiggling, and relieving him of charge of a district where he had made himself so unpopular. Sir Stuart had to do justice not to the temple party alone. He had to do justice to Mr. Beadon also—yea, to maintain the prestige of the glorious Covenanted Service. Mr. Beadon's candid acknowledgment of error has been gratifying to the Lieutenant-Governor, who is fully convinced that Mr. Beadon is innocent of intending outrage or insult to the Hindoos. The truth is, in a case of this kind, the Lieutenant-Governor is necessarily an indifferent judge, and he allowed himself to be easily satisfied that Mr. Beadon's regret was sincere and candid. Any unbiassed man of the world could see the hollowness of the pretence set up. Such is the universal deference to the great, that we are surprised to see many of whom better might be expected lavishing encomiums upon Mr. Beadon's candour. These praises are as wasted upon this occasion as they were lately wasted in another quarter. To us, the British magistrate has not shown ordinary manliness. His attempt to make a scapegoat of his poor Mahomedan subordinate, is most mean. The stress laid on his long service only goes against him. Nor had he borne a good character during all the period. Altogether, it was a most unfortunate case, and, between the pressure of the Civil Service and the claims of the people, the Government had no small difficulty in regard to it. We now hope the decision which has been passed by Sir Stuart Bayley will serve to allay the excitement of feeling which still exists in Durbhungah. The practical objects of the temple party are secured by that decision, while the two executive officers of the municipality, through whose rash and inconsiderate conduct they have suffered insult and loss, have been brought to disgrace.

DISEASE, ACCIDENT, AND DEATH.

SINCE the beginning of the year, the public health of the city has been miserable. Cholera and small-pox have counted many victims, not a few have succumbed to chest complainis, while the Influenza has raged in every household. The provision markets were for some time deserted and business threatened to come to a dead lock. Of late, a favourable change has been distinctly visible.

There have been several deaths in respectable Hindu families in town. The most painful is that of a young member and prop of the Guho family. With a magnificent figure, 6 feet high, passionately attached to athletic games, who could have thought that Annada Churn Guho was hovering over his grave? But he caught the Influenza, got the pneumonia, and lingered on for thirty days, struggling against the heroic treatment of blind Medicine, and then confessed himself beaten.

It must have cost all the resources of science to kill him. He belonged to a long-lived family, his father and grandfather still living.

The death of poor Girija Sunker Sen, eldest son of Baboo Ram Sunker Sen, retired Deputy Magistrate, leaving, besides his sorrowing parents, six little children, is a heart-rending case. He went out in a dog-cart crammed with native Christian ladies to the Strand. He was stopped at the Eden Gardens for driving without lights. As in the absence of a syce he stooped to light the lamp leaving the reins to one of his fair companions, the horse shied and bolted. They were all thrown out with violence, Sen being taken up almost, if not quite, insensible, and one of the ladies fracturing her jawbone and losing some of her teeth. Instead of being sent to hospital or taken home, they were taken to the house of a native Christian at Bhowanipore as if to dine—for there was an engagement for the purpose at that house, where in fact the party were proceeding via the Strand. The reason more probably was that this gentleman was a doctor. Thence, late in the night, Sen was sent in a hulagari to Sen's house in town. He never regained consciousness and expired next day without receiving any medical treatment.

His life was as miserable as his end. He went to England clandestinely, without permission of his family who were afterwards obliged to support him there to the best of their power, and succeeded in getting himself called to the bar. He tarried there for many years—much too long for his good, we are afraid. Here, he did not succeed in his profession, his sole dependence for maintaining himself and family in the expensive European style of living. All the faults and misfortunes of his life were due to this single cause. Otherwise, he was not without parts and maintained to the last the habit of general reading. Latterly, he was getting into some practice in the interior, and it is much to be pitied that just at this point his life should close.

The most recent death is that of Babu Deno Nath Mallik, of Upper Circular Road. His constitution was enfeebled by diabetes, which he had kept under by dint of constant exercise. He might every day be seen running rather than walking in the Eaden Gardens. He went on Thursday on his usual drive. On Friday, however, he complained of a colic and by 10 at night he was no more, quietly expiring in his chair. He was a typical Calcutta Baboo of the worst species, without either the simplicity and humanity of the old school or the education and patriotism of the new. His family were not remarkable for grace or amiability, but in him all their worst peculiarities culminated. Though a Kulin Kayastha by birth, his mind was filled with the grovelling notions of the Shao parvenu. His very seat in his high lumbering barouche was that of the upstart. It was not even a decent attitude, and he has escaped by death from the liability to a whipping from some one of the European gentlemen who are accustomed to make use of the same evening drive for themselves and their families. Of course, it goes without saying that he was a snob of the first water. At school he used constantly to assert the new prosperity of his family and deride the waning opulence of the Sobhabazar Rajas, and through life he was the enemy of the respectable and happy families in the country whom he envied. Luckily, his knowledge did not extend beyond Calcutta and its suburbs. The only family who escaped his contemptuous denunciation were the Ghosal Rajas of Bhokoylas, Kidderpore. Indeed, at the time when they were somebodies, he used to mention them with extraordinary deference. The reason was that they kept open table at which he cheaply enjoyed his new taste for European delicacies. But this very family he, by persistent intrigue, got brought to disgrace, dismemberment and ruin. As an evil adviser to the members of our joint families, he was a public pest. He once seemed to meet his match in the Registrar of Calcutta—a gentleman otherwise his superior in every respect, whether for heart or brains. But he revenged himself on him by causing a separation between Babu Pratap Chandra Ghose and his brother, who was Deno Nath's son-in-law. It is strange that our Kayastha friends should have cared to form alliance with such a man, but mammon worshippers forgive everything to a man of wealth.

Without education or feeling, purse-proud, ostentatious of wealth without ever lapsing into charity, indeed a notorious miser, living only for himself according to his narrow ideas, superstitious without faith, he had but one quality, which, however, only served to make him more repulsive. Strangely enough, he had a capacity for a grotesque humour. Disease and difficulties with his tenantry for a time seemed to make him humble, but, with better times, his true character again reasserted itself. The death of his wife drove him to seek consolation in the mysteries of spiritualism, but he soon became himself again. He was not on speaking terms with his brothers and nephews, and passed a life of lonely misery, barely in town but away from the haunts of men. His death is a relief to his household. We congratulate his sons and daughters-in-law whom he foully persecuted, on the possibility of comfort and happiness which at length opens on them.

We have gone into this analysis with great reluctance. But we do not believe in the irrational and immoral doctrine of sparing the dead. For the benefit of society, the strange individuality that has just passed out of our community is worth describing. No other opportunity can possibly occur.

OUTRAGE IN RURAL BENGAL AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

Kartikpur, 15th May 1890.

On the 8th Falgoun 1296 B. S., corresponding with the 19th February last, some people, residents of the village of Kocaynagar, which is about half a mile off from here, attacked my house. This they did in the broad day light of morning. They were armed.

No sooner they appeared on our road than they made a horrible yell or Hallah, I mean a sort of war-cry. During this time I was also on the road taking a morning turn.

They attacked me but, though not at all prepared for defence, I stood firmly where I had been. One of the aggressors named Nakari Mondal perhaps aimed at my life with the Hashur in his hand, but his aim missed and I took courage to catch hold of it and succeeded in wresting it out of his hands, before Nakari could use it again. With that weapon in hand I defended myself, with a view to detain them at any risk on the road for some time, so that in the meantime my large family might escape. My fourth brother who was within came to my assistance, but I instructed him to manage the escape of our family. He instantly obeyed me. After struggling with the enemy for some time, I was so much pressed that I could not but shew them my back and run towards home. They followed me as far as the female apartments (Andar Khanda), where one named Ibrahim struck me on my head with a bamboo stick. I then fell down insensible. Blood gushed out in torrents which perhaps brought the aggressors to the sense of consequences which might befall them hereafter. They ran away.

My brother went to the Thanah of Palang about 5 miles off from here and gave the Police the information of this occurrence. The Police accordingly appeared on the place of occurrence, saw my wound and examined its depth, length and breadth, held local enquiries and subsequently sent the case as a Police cognizable one to the criminal court of the Sub-Division of Madaripore for trial. The said informant could name only twelve men out of the numerous accused. He became plaintiff and I myself a witness of the occurrence.

When the trial began, his worship the present Joint-Magistrate did not allow the complainant to name the rest of the accused, whom he could not name in the Thanah on account of his breathless condition and entire confusion as he knew not whether I was alive.

Sir, this is an old village. It has never seen such a horrible occurrence in broad day light even during the administration of Kazees under the Mogul Government. That is the opinion of the oldest men here. The neighbours are so much alarmed that some of them are ready to leave for ever their birthplace, if in this case the accused are not properly taught a lesson.

But to the surprise of all, the Joint Magistrate seems to take it for a slight occurrence, because the Doctor of the Hospital has remarked my wound to be a slight one—slight because it did not touch the bone. I would not care much for the report of the Doctor if the court would pay attention to the terms of sections 447 and 143. With regard to these charges made by the Police, the court seems indifferent. The court has not charged any of the five challaned by the Police nor has it asked any of them whether they are guilty or not. Only one has himself given answer (Jabab) and has cited some witnesses who are going to be examined. The trial has taken 2½ months and yet the case is not decided. The frequent change of dates has emptied the purse of the complainant, whereas the accused being forty in number, they subscribe and bear the cost of the case easily enough. They are the rayyets of the local Mahomedan Zemindar, and the Hakim is reported to be hand and glove with the Zemindar. Who knows what will be the end of it all!

INCOME-TAX ON CONSIGNMENTS.

No. 1515, dated the 31st March, 1890.

From---J. F. Finlay, Esq., Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Finance and Commerce.

To---The Secretary to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

Sir,--I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 238-90, dated the 21st, March 1890, forwarding a letter from the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce and enclosures, regarding the levy of Income Tax on the profits on consignments made to British India by persons not resident in British India, and requesting that the orders on the subject may be withdrawn.

2. I am to state that the Government of India will await the reports of the local authorities before further considering the decision arrived at on the subject in the Resolution No. 5441, dated 23rd October 1889.

Telegram, dated 25th April 1890.

From---Calcutta.

From---Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

To---Simla.

To---Secretary, Department of Finance and Commerce.

With reference to your No. 1515, dated 31st March, the Collector of Income Tax here has issued a circular to the commercial community of Calcutta calling upon them to send in a return showing names of persons, &c. who consign goods to them for sale, also a statement showing the profits made by consignors on the sale of their consignments. Committee understood from your letter referred to that the expediency of attempting to tax profits made by consignors on goods sold in India was under consideration of Government, and they respectfully request that the Income Tax Collector here be instructed to suspend action pending further orders.

The Circular referred to in the telegram is as follows :--

From S. J. Kilby, Esquire, Collector of Income-Tax, Calcutta.

I have the honor to invite your attention to sections 42 and 45, Act II. of 1886, and to request you to be good enough to furnish me within ten days from the receipt of this requisition, with a list of the persons, firms or companies who consign goods to you for sale.

2. I have further to request you under section 43 of the Act, to furnish me at the same time with a Return of the profits upon such consignments, which are taxable in India. In the event of the information at your disposal being insufficient to admit of your doing this, I have next to request you to furnish me with a Return showing the gross proceeds realised by you on account of each consignor during the financial year 1889-90, a percentage of which, varying according to the circumstances of each case, will be held to be profit.

3. In order to facilitate the work of assessment, as well as to enable me to make it as equitable as possible, may I ask you to give me a Return of the gross proceeds of the various descriptions of goods consigned to you, with your opinion as to what the percentage of profits may fairly be assumed to be on each description.

4. In future, it is desirable that consignors of goods should furnish their representatives in India with such information as will enable them to make a correct Return of profits, and I shall feel obliged by your making this known to them.

5. In due course I shall issue an assessment notice upon you under the provisions of section 21, and I would therefore refer you to section 23 which will explain your powers, and section 49 which indemnifies you for deducting and paying the tax in respect of income belonging to another person.

The reply of the Government of India runs thus :--

From Government of India, Department of Finance and Commerce, Nos. 2157, Simla, the 1st May 1890.

To the Secretary to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta.

Sir,--I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram, dated the 25th April 1890, and of your letter No. 345, dated the 26th April 1890, requesting, with reference to paragraph 2 of the letter from this Department No. 1515, dated the 31st March, 1890, that the Collector of Income Tax may be instructed not to proceed with the assessment to income tax of the profits on goods consigned for sale to an agent residing in British India.

2. I am to state that the purport of the letter quoted has been misapprehended. What the Government intended to convey was that its decision to assess to income tax the profits on goods consigned to agents would not be reconsidered at present. The local authorities had already been instructed some time previously to cause the profits to be assessed, and the Government of India proposed to defer further consideration of the matter, if further consideration should be found to be necessary, pending receipt from the local revenue authorities of reports on the operation of the orders.

I have, &c.

(Sd.) E. J. SINKINSON,

Secy. to the Government of India.

The Chamber again asks for suspension of action pending consideration of memorials :

Private deferred Telegram, dated Calcutta, 9th May 1890.

From---Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

To---Secretary, Government of India.

Department of Finance and Commerce.

Your letter No. 2157 of first May has caused great discontent among all classes in Calcutta resulting in Meeting at Chamber's Rooms to-day at which were represented British India, Defence and Trades Associations, Chamber and National Chamber. Resolved to solicit Government to instruct Collector to suspend action under Resolution No. 5441 of 23rd October finding consideration of memorials to Viceroy in preparation. Kindly reply.

The Government of India at last agrees :--

Telegram, dated Simla, 15th May 1890.

From---Simla.

From---Finance.

To---Calcutta.

To---Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

Your telegram, 9th May, Income Tax. Government has no doubt of the legality of its orders and as the information before it shows that similar profits are now liable to assessment in the United Kingdom, it cannot admit beforehand that the difficulties in the way of their assessment in India are insuperable. The Government, however, is willing to fully consider any arguments the Chambers may wish to put forward and will wait receipt of pending memorials. Local Governments have been instructed meanwhile to suspend action on orders of 23rd October last.

PUBLIC OPINION AND LEGISLATIVE MEASURES.

The following is the full text of the letter on the above subject, dated Calcutta, 19th March, 1890, addressed by the Secretary of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to the Government of India :--

The Committee of the Chamber of Commerce instruct me to address you upon a matter which they venture to consider is of very considerable public interest. It is generally admitted that it is to the advantage of Government that its measures especially its projects of Law should, to as large an extent as possible, have the support and sanction of public opinion. When the necessities of the State or the character and organisation of the administration preclude that thorough discussion by the Legislative body which is so marked a feature in the history of modern European enactments, it seems to the Committee that the very greatest care should be taken to ascertain the views, as well as the wants and requirements of those who may be interested in the labours of the various Indian Legislatures. The Government appears to some extent to recognise that this is a reasonable public expectation, since besides availing itself of official experience through the different local Governments and Administrations, it seeks from time to time to obtain expressions of opinion from the more important and permanent of the public bodies of the three presidencies. That its efforts in this direction are not more successful or encouraging appears to be due to the practice of not calling for outside opinions until suggestions for amending existing laws or enacting new ones, have assumed a definite form as Bills actually or about to be introduced into the Legislative Councils.

This system is open to two objections : the statement of objects and reasons is too meagre to sufficiently explain what has induced Government to cause the Bill to be prepared, and the Government by putting forward a Bill is too often in a position from which it finds it difficult to retire or even to make concessions. It is not to the advantage of Government that it should so often appear as contesting principles and even details against non-official opinion expressed either in the Legislature itself or through some public body interested. In the opinion of the Committee, the disadvantages and difficulties they have indicated might be lessened to an appreciable extent, if all proposals for alteration, in at least mercantile laws, were submitted when received by Government, to those who would be affected by them for their opinion. The experience of this Chamber is that under the present system, the time given for consideration of any project or measures is as a rule, too brief, and that too many projects are considered together within the space of any given sessions to be so effectually dealt with as might be desirable. A Bill the Committee are aware, represents a very considerable amount of correspondence and serious work on the part of the Departments and officials concerned with its inception and preparation, and may mean and often should mean a proportionate expenditure of time on the part of those to whom it may be referred. With men unmixed in business, it is not easy to secure the leisure required for thorough examination and criticism of a measure. Besides, it is not easy for those who are constantly occupied with the cares of business to follow with minute or special care the technical terminology of a proposal put in a form ready for legislation. They would find on the other hand no such difficulty in dealing with proposals supported by arguments and reasons couched in familiar terms.

What has been said of projects of Legislation applies with equal or greater force to the Rules which, under the sanction of the Law, the Government is in so many instances left to frame as the machinery for working a particular law.

The Committee wanted therefore to suggest that the Government of India should take this matter into consideration with a view that when it is necessary or desirable to obtain non-official opinion upon proposals affecting existing laws or for prospective legislation, or upon any Rules or amendments of Rules already declared, the utmost care should be taken to obtain that opinion at as early a stage as possible.

COCOANUT BUTTER IN GERMANY.

The following is an extract from the last report of the United States Consul at Mannheim on the subject of the manufacture of cocoa-nut butter in Germany :

German chemists discovered in the cocoanut a fatty substitute for butter. This discovery was made by a Dr. Schluck, practical chemist at Ludwigshafen, just over the Rhine from Mannheim. Shortly after the discovery was made a firm was established in this city under the "P. Müller and Söhne," which sank a large amount of capital in an enterprise having for its object the production of the new article, to which they gave the name of "cocoanut butter." The results achieved have more than justified their expectations. The firm is not able to meet the constant demands made upon it. Although in existence only one year, it employs 25 workmen, who get from 25 to 75 cents. a day, has a 40 horse-power engine, and produces daily 3,000 kilos. of butter, which retails at from 55 to 65 pfennigs, or from 13 to 15½ cents. per pound, or 25 to 30 cents. per kilogramme.

The nuts are obtained from almost all lands lying in the tropics, especially from the South Sea and Coral Islands, Arabia, the coast countries of Africa, and South America. Natives in countries where the nuts grow have for a long time used the milk of these nuts, instead of food oils. It contains 60 to 70 per cent. of fat, and 23 to 25 per cent. of organic substances, of which 9 to 10 per cent. is of albumen. Liebig and Fresenius had already discovered the value of the cocoanut oil, or fat, but did not succeed in its production as a substitute for butter. The new butter is of a clear, white colour, melts at from 26° to 28° Celsius, and contains 0.0008 per cent. water, 0.006 per cent. mineral stuffs, and 99.9932 per cent. fat.

It hardens at 19° Celsius. It is better adapted, however, for the kitchen than for the dinning-room, that is, for cooking purposes, than for the uses to which butter is put on our tables. It is neither disagreeable to the taste nor smell. In a country where real butter runs all the way from 25 to 35 cents. per pound, and cocoanut butter costs but 15 cents., a great future must open up before the latter. At present it is chiefly used in hospitals and other State institutions, but is also rapidly finding its way into houses or homes where people are too poor to buy butter. The working classes are rapidly taking to it instead of the oleomargarines, against which so much had been said in the papers during the last two or three years.

The new butter is said to be singularly free from acids and other disturbing elements so often found in butter, especially that made from milk taken from cows diseased with tuberculosis. Here it is estimated that fully 10 per cent. of the milk-giving cows are so troubled. This absence of acids and other matter renders its digestion much easier, hence the preference already shown for the new article by hospitals and such institutions. There are those who do not hesitate to declare this new substitute as healthier, and infinitely preferable to the too often bad butter brought on the markets, and not to be named in the same breath with oleomargarines made too often from the diseased fat of horse and sheep flesh.

When it is remembered that Germany has already some 50 factories making oleomargarines and other artificial butters, and that some 180,000 centners are produced annually, it will be readily seen that regular butter will have hard work to hold its own in a hundred uses against its new rivals, and especially so since the oleomargarines and artificial butters of all kinds are placed under severe, careful, and watchful State inspectors. It is hoped, however, that no losses, but gains rather, will arise; for besides the profits resulting from the new substitutes more meat and milk, as such will come on the markets, and consequently into use. If, with König, we assume that the principal nutriments—albumen, fats, and carbon hydrates are paid for in the ratio of 5 : 3 : 1, i.e., a kilog. of albumen costs five times, and a kilog. of fat three times, as much as a kilog. of carbon hydrate, we arrive by comparison of the nutritiousness of milk with other articles of diet, at the following results:—If we pay for 1 kilog. of milk, 15 pfennigs, for a mark we get 21.33 per cent. of nutriment; for 1 kilog. lard (bacon), 172 pfennigs, 16.08 per cent.; for 1 kilog. fatty cheese, 162 pfennigs, 14.32 per cent.; for 1 kilog. pork, 131 pfennigs, 14.01 per cent.; for 1 kilog. veal, 112 pfennigs, 10.33 per cent.; for 1 kilog. beef, 128 pfennigs, 9.11 per cent.; for 1 kilog. eggs, 200 pfennigs, 4.97 per cent.

Now, if these facts are once known, milk as an article of diet will be more in demand, and the quantities no longer needed to make butter will find their way into the families where formerly pure butter was unknown, but where its substitute, cocoanut butter, has taken fast hold.
